ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. XXX — ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY JAN. 6 1916 — NO. 1

Measley News

You had the measles?

Rhea—Papa didn't want me to get a Xmas card, I got a big yellow card.

It was noticed Xmas morning that St. Nick visited Sam Tustison's and left the usual yellow card.

Woodrow Wilson (Martin) if old enough would say that it doesn't make any difference if he was named after the President, he got the measles just the same.

Yes, we have them also—Marvin Poper.

Have you noticed that worried expression on Elza Kinsey's face?

Virgil Dorsey thought he had bumble bees on his back—Just measles.

Chas. Koch says lightning often strikes twice in the same place—Joseph has them proper.

Derwood Ridgway says that there is more fun in playing basket ball than giving saffron tea.

Rob Bailey thought his complexion was not red enough so he decided to take saffron tea with the rest of them.

John House spent an extra Sunday with his girl—Perhaps they like each other better by this time. Dr. Farnham and the measles are to blame.

Frank Shafer probably thinks that pouring oil on troubled waters doesn't do any good (even if it is Standard oil) he has the sign of the yellow peril.

LOCAL NEWS

LOCAL HISTORY MADE DURING THE PAST WEEK, IN BRIEF PARAGRAPHS

A daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Frank Leighty, of Wymore, Neb., Thursday, Dec. 30.

The mail men are having another time of checking up for January, weighing and counting the mail.

Fred Derrow and wife, of near Auburn, were Sunday guests of Roy Derrow and family, of this place.

John George and family spent Sunday with Mrs. George's father, who has been in poor health for several weeks.

Bert Bowman of Chicago, returned to his work the first of the week, after spending his vacation with his family here.

Mrs. Smith of Logansport, Ind.; Rolland Bearss, wife and son Fred, and Henry Hathaway were entertained at Sunday dinner at the Sam Warner home.

Auto owners are all getting busy now ordering their licenses for the new year. It will be risky business this year to run machines on the old numbers after the first month.

The cry for more houses is not being met in St. Joe very fast, although there are three that are being put in shape, that will assist in supplying the demand for a short time.

Mrs. Hathaway and family were Saturday and Sunday guests of Chas. Bishop and family, at Garrett. Clayton and Russell spent Friday at Wayne, the guest of F. H. Langley and wife, and went to Garrett, Saturday.

The following item appeared twenty years ago in the Auburn Dispatch, on Jan. 2, 1896, that might be of interest to our readers: "St. Joe's saloon is one of the things that was but is not. After a fight of less than ten days Geo. Knepper, who started the quart shop in the old saloon building, has quit the business, packed up what remained of his stock and shipped it back to the wholesalers."

DAIRY FEED—We have just unloaded a car of Arcady Dairy Feed. One of the best milk producers on the market consisting of Distillers grains Barley Sprouts, Cotton Seed Meal with pure Cane molasses, making a balanced Dairy Ration. For sale only at St. Joe Mills.

Wm. Curie shipped into the Pittsburgh market last week, 6 car loads of stock from the St. Joe pens. Three cars of this bunch was placed on sale Monday. The approximate amount of cash paid out last week, by check, on the St. Joe Valley Bank, to the farmers of this community, was $10,000.00.

A few lines from P. A. Shurts, Gaylord, Mich., states that he is in the nicest town, north of Jackson on the N. C. road, and they are enjoying the finest of sleighing. Upon making this trip, he stopped off at Adrian, Mich., and visited Rev. Beininger, who at one time filled the appointments on the St. Joe charge of the M. P. Church. On his route the trains were detained considerable and he stated that if the trains [illegible] south like they did going north, [illegible] would arrive in St. Joe about April [illegible] 1916. He expe[illegible] Cadillac, Big Rapids, [illegible] and Bailey, Mich., before returning.

Governor of Michigan, Who Believes in Better Schools, Better Soils, Better Roads and Better Methods.

GOVERNOR FERRIS INDORSES FARMING FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

Michigan's Chief Executive Wants City People Told of Pleasures and Advantages of Farm Life.

"Some people farm solely for the money there is in it. They claim that you must show the boys large profits to make them remain on the farms. We American farmers haven't learned the A. B. C's of making money on the farms or of raising boys and girls on the farms," said Governor Woodbridge N. Ferris of Michigan recently in a better soils campaign which was conducted in that state.

"I care for the boys and girls who want to stay on the farms because they love farming and for the boys and girls in the cities who would love farming if they knew the independence and the joys [illegible]," [illegible] Governor Ferris, who [illegible] ually advocating better [illegible] better roads and better farming to solve the problems of rural life. DeKalb County Active

In recognition of the Centennial year, the Directors of the Commercial Club of Auburn have agreed with Centennial Chairman, Walter D. Stump, to set aside their annual fair next year and make way for a county Centennial celebration. Such generous co-operation bespeaks a public spirit which promises a successful observance in DeKalb County.

The County School Superintendent, Mrs. Lida Leasure, is bringing the schools into line. At a recent meeting of the trustees of the county she announced February 18th, as observance day in the schools throughout DeKalb. She suggests an all day session, with an interesting Centennial program, featured by a big dinner at the noon hour, enjoyed by parents and children together.

Are Wedded.

Glenn Freeburn and Miss Emma J. Wineland celebrated the new year by getting married at the Presbyterian parsonage in this city Thursday afternoon. Both young people live at St. Joe. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. P. Bourns. They will make their home with the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Wineland, for the present. The groom is a farmer—Star.

Is Uncle Sam Prepared?

HERE is depicted one of Uncle Sam's numerous monster coast defense guns in action during practice drill at Fort Strong, in Boston harbor. The photograph, taken by a Mutual Weekly photographer during the firing of a giant shell, is but one of numerous interesting pictures making up Mutual Weekly No. 47, released in the regular Mutual program.

ABOUT ANAESTHETICS.

Anaesthesia is a word first employed by Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes. In early times it was known that pressure of the carotid arteries on each side of the neck could bring about temporary unconsciousness and resultant anaethesia. The gentle art of garroting grew out of this generalized knowledge.

It was not until the early part of the nineteenth century that the discovery of the general anaesthetics, nitrous oxide, ether and chloroform was made, and still later the wonderfull developments in the art of local anaethesia by the use of cocaine and its congeners. The method of inducing anaesthesia without loss of consciousness has some very advantageous features in surgical procedure, and was first practiced by a New York physician, Dr. J. Leonard Corning.

General anaesthesia is usually brought about by the inhalation of some vapor. Nitrous oxide gas, chloroform, ether, ethyl chloride, etc., are the most frequently employed, especially the three former. Nitrous oxide was the first of this series to be suggested. It was made by Sir Humphrey Davy in 1800, but was not used in practice until about 1844, when Dr. H. Wells, an American dentist, employed it in the extraction of teeth.

The anaesthetic properties of ether were known for some years before put to practical use. As to its first use there is much controversy. It seems certain that one Dr. Crawford W. Long, of Georgia, first used ether as a general anaesthetic, but to W. T. G. Morton, a dentist, of Boston, should be given credit for demonstrating its value and use to the medical profession. Doctor Long did his first operation under ether, March 30, 1842, for the removal of a tumor of the jaw. He reported his experiments to the Georgia State Medical Society in 1842. Morton's work was begun in 1846, September 30, when he extracted a tooth while the patient was under the influence of ether. He subsequently demonstrated his method at the Massachusetts general hospital and then patented his product under the name of Letheon.

The following year Sir J. W. Simpson, of Edinburgh, announced the discovery of the anaesthetic properties of chloroform and demonstrated its value in delicate operations. At the present time all three of these anaesthetics are extensively employed. In Europe chloroform is preferred; in this country ether is used more often.—Kansas City Star.

Stuart's Lansdowne portrait of Washington was sold for $13,000 to a private New York collector at a sale of historical plates and volumes in the headquarters of Stan V. Henkels, 1306 Walnut street, the Philadelphia Record states. The agent making the purchase was Max Williams of New York, whose only word about the new owner was that he is a collector and connected with a large New York brokerage firm.

Williams was commissioned to bid between $14,000 and $15,000 for the portrait, he said, and he did not expect to get it. Williams started the bidding at $500, but in less than a minute the figure offered was $5,000. It went slowly then up to $9,000, where it remained for a time. Mr. Henkels knew it was worth much more, so he gave the bidders plenty of time to make up their minds. Williams finally bid $13,000, and after another generous wait Mr. Henkels' brought down the gavel.

The portrait shows the first president in full length. It has been relined. The agent stated that it will be relined again and will bring $20,000 or $25,000.

CONCERNING MAN'S APPAREL.

"Years ago," said a handsomely attired Wall street broker, according to the New York Sun, "I used to know a very wealthy congressman who prided himself upon never paying more than $18 a suit for his clothes, and he was no Russellsage economist, either. I imbibed the same dea of clothes economy from him and for a dozen years I spent from $15 to $18 a suit. Then one day I met a New Yorker dressed as New Yorkers dress who dress right, and we talked clothes. I had on a new $18 suit and was so proud of it I called his attention to it. He said it looked well but how long would it last? I told him if I got two years wear out of it I thought it was doing its full duty.

"He smiled and said that was $9 a year and I was wearing an $18 suit all the time. He also said I might as well wear better clothes and called my attention to the handsome suit he had on. I asked what he paid for it and he said $85, whereupon I whistled at the figure.

"'All right,' he said, 'you may whistle; but I've been wearing this nearly twelve years, which is less per year than yours cost, and I'm wearing an $85 suit all the time.'

"The argument got me, and since that I get the best and find them less expensive, year in and year out, besides the satisfaction of knowing that I am inside the real goods.

"And speaking of good clothes, I know a German tailor farther north than 125th street whose father started in business when Harlem was in the woods. The father and son believed in the best and their prices have always been as high as the 5th avenue tailors, but what they made could be relied upon absolutely.

"The last time I was in the shop —my dress suit from there cost $125 —some testimony came in that was rather interesting. An old, old fellow had left a dress coat with the proprietor just as I came in and he called in a bushelman to look after it. The man laughed and said the old fellow must be going out somewhere as he only brought it in on such occasions and he had not had it pressed for two years. They laughed over it a while and then the boss took me into another room and showed me a wonderful collection of beautiful butterflies and moths finely framed and told me that long years before the owner of the coat had given it to his father, who wanted to buy it, and as a return courtesy the father had made his friend a dress suit. This was the dress suit brought in for pressing, and for curiosity we went to see it and found the date on the tab to be 1880, thirty-five years ago. Think of that, will you, for the lasting quality of good clothes and still good enough to be worn on dress occasions and not so much out of style either."

LIVELY PIG COMES TO SCHOOL.

No longer will Mary's famous little lamb have a place in song and story at Woodlawn school, says the Portland Oregonian.

Instead the children there will sing of the pig who came to school and called on C. M. Stafford, principal.

It made the children laugh and play to see this ambitious shote come stretching into the basement of the school, upstairs and into the principal's room. It wiggled its curly tail in greeting until the children made too much of a fuss over it, and then it rooted its way behind the piano, whence one of the boys later dragged it.

The porcine visitor had escaped from a wagonload being hauled to town by a farmer.

Just when the pupils were making a pet of the captured creature the farmer came and took it.

MR. FIRE WALKER TRAPPED AT LAST

GAMBOL DOES NOT CAUSE PAIN

New York Museum Takes Heavy Fall Out of "Holy Men" With Its Expose.

New York.—If this yarn should by any chance be read around some Tahitian fireside, the firewalking industry in the South Sea Islands, which is one of the hottest drawing cards the holy men have for amassing coconauts will suffer a severe slump. In fact, considering the ardent temperament of the average Tahitian, the flames of wrath which will attend the expose will make the fire walkers' bonfire look like a smudge pot.

For this is a revelation of why smoke colored, shiny skinned gentlemen, arrayed in fibre skirts and some beads about the neck, can lead yodeling believers over a holy fire without incineration. The statistics or whatever the facts are called which burst fond illusions, have been garnered by the American Museum of Natural History, and are set forth in the South Sea Island hall there, with chocolate colored figures and much printed matter, to make them plain to all who pass by.

The Tahitian fire walker earns a comfortable living and an enormous amount of veneration through an ability to lead his devoted congregation in syncopated prayer at the edge of a burning chasm. The long trench in which the flame spurts up is piled with rocks of porous basalt.

Just before the hurried journey over the flaming pit begins, an attendant cares for the stone with large leaves. Then the priest, wearing a crown of flowers on his head and a large bunch of "ti" (Dracaena terminalis, they are, say the museum experts) in his hands, walks around the fire. He converses at length and with some eloquence with his friends, the supernaturals, who are going to cool the flames. Then after cocking an experienced eye at the basalt, he walks over the center ridge of stone above the fire, and his disciples very unhappy in mind and bare of feet, follow him. They all walk back and forth several times, and, of course, everybody is deeply impressed.

The museum after expatiating upon the dramatic effects of this hot coal gambol, explains that basalt rock, being extremely porous, is a poor conductor of heat. Although the bottom of the rock may be pink with fire, the top is merely hot, and has no effect upon the toughened sole of the natives' feet.

There is a figure of a fire walker modeled after one who belongs to the union in the museum exhibit and there are also figures of a kava-brewer, a roof maker, a cocoanut grater and a firemaker. The models are arranged to show the daily life of the Tahitians and to explode their cherished belief in that remunerative religious rite, the fiery hesitation.

CHILD SMOTHERS IN COTTON

Little Girl Digs Hole in Pile and Tumbles In.

Guthrie, Okla—The 9 year old daughter of Paul Ritchie, a farmer living near Prague, 30 miles west of here, was drowned in a pile of cotton in her father's field.

When the little girl was missed her parents started out to search for her. Her father finally saw her shoes on top of the huge mound of cotton, and closer examination disclosed her body buried, head first, in the fluffy mass. She evidently had dug a hole in the pile and then accidentally fallen into it, the loose cotton packing about her and smothering her.

ALFALFA FIELD 33 YEARS OLD

Kansas Growth Still Is in Thriving Condition

Topeka, Kan.—C. Mohler, secretary of the Kansas Board of Agriculture, has found fields of alfalfa sown 30 years ago still growing and producing good crops. He just has sent a notice to the 1,600 correspondents of the board, asking them to report the earliest sowing and the oldest fields of alfalfa in their communities.

"The oldest fields reported are in Hamilton and Rooks counties," Mr. Mohler said. "One Hamilton county field is 33 years old, and there is one in Hamilton and one in Rooks that are 32 years old and the owner says both are doing well."

FOXES ARE FAMILIES PETS

They're Tame and Quiet Save When Strangers Appear.

Williamsport, Pa.—While most families make pets of cats and dogs, the family of Clyde Hartman of Warrensville, make an exception to this rule, by having three small foxes as pets. The animals are tame and quiet in the hands of Mrs. Hartman, but when being approached by strangers they become as wild as their brothers and sisters in the forests. The foxes were caught when very young by Hartman.

Was McClellan a Traitor?

In Harper's Magazine there are printed for the first time extracts from John Hay's diary, written when he was Lincoln's secretary. Writing in 1864, he recounts a story told him by Lincoln which reveals McClellan in a new light.

"On September 25, 1864, Hay records that a letter had just come from Nicolay, who was in New York, stating that Thurlow Weed, the dominant Republican leader in New York State, with whom Nicolay was to confer, had gone to Canada. When Hay showed the President the letter he said: 'I think I know where Mr. Weed has gone. I think he has gone to Vermont, not Canada. I will tell you what he is trying to do. I have not as yet told anybody.'

"And then Lincoln proceeded to unfold the following story of a remarkable intrigue:

"'Some time ago the Governor of Vermont came to me on "business of importance," he said. I fixed an hour and he came. His name is Smith. He is, though you would not think it, a cousin of Baldy Smith. Baldy is large, blond, florid. The Governor is a little, dark sort of man. This is the story he told me, giving General Baldy Smith as his authority:

"'When Gen. McClellan was here at Washington (in 1862) B. Smith was very intimate with him. They had been toegther at West Point and friends. McClellan had asked for promotion for Baldy from the President and got it. They were close and confidential friends. When they went down to the Peninsula their same intimate relations continued, the General talking freely with Smith about all his plans and prospects, until one day Fernando Wood and one other (Democratic) politician from New York appeared in camp and passed some days with McClellan.

"'From the day this took place Smith saw, or thought he saw, that McClellan was treating him with unusual coolnes sand reserve. After a little while he mentioned this to McClellan, who, after some talk, told Baldy he had something to show him. He told him that these people who had recently visited him had been urging him to stand as an opposition candidate for President; that he had thought the thing over and had concluded to accept their proposition, and had written them a letter (which he had not yet sent) giving his idea of the proper way of conducting the war, so as to conciliate and impress the people of the South with the idea that our armies were intended merely to execute the laws and protect their property, etc., and pledging himself to conduct the war in that inefficient, conciliatory style.

"'This letter he read to Baldy, who, after the reading, was finished, said earnestly: "General, do you not see that looks like treason, and that it will ruin you and all of us?" After some further talk the General destroyed the letter in Baldy's presence, and thanked him heartily for his frank and friendly counsel. After this he was again taken into the intimate confidence of McClellan.

"'Immediately after the battle of Antietam, Wood and his familiar came again and saw the General and again Baldy saw an immediate estrangement on the part of McClellan. He seemed to be anxious to get his intimate friends out of the way and to avoid opportunities of private conversation with them. Baldy he particularly kept employed on reconnoisance and such work. One night Smith was returning from some duty he had been performing, and, seeing a light in McClellan's tent, he went in to report. He reported and was about to withdraw when the General requested him to remain. After every one was gone he told him those men had been there again and had renewed their proposition about the Presidency; that this time he had agreed to their proposition and had written them a letter acceding to their terms and pledging himself to carry on the war in the sense already indicated. This letter he read then and there to Baldy Smith.

"'Immediately thereafter B. Smith applied to be transferred from that army. At very nearly the same time other prominent men asked the same —Franklin, Burnside and others.

"'Now that letter must be in the possession of F. Wood, and it will not be impossible to get it. Mr. Weed has, I think, gone to Vermont to see the Smiths about it.'

"Hay continues:

"'I was very much surprised at the story and expresed my surprise. I said I had always thought that McClellan's fault was a constitutional weakness and timidity, which prevented him from active and timely exertion, instead of any such deep-laid scheme of treachery and ambition.

"'The President replied: "After the battle of Antietam I went up to the field to try to get him to move, and came back thinking he would move at once. But when I got home he began to argue why he ought not to move. I peremptorily ordered him to advance. It was nineteen days before he put a man over the river. It was nine days longer before he got his army across, and then he stopped again, delaying on little pretexts of wanting this and that. I began to fear he was playing false—that he did not want to hurt the enemy. I saw how he could intercept the enemy on the way to Richmond. I determined to make that the test. If he let them get away I would remove him. He did so, and I relieved him.'"

"Don't you wish you had sense enough to make a million?"

"No. I wish I had sense enough to make a quarter of a million and stop with that and enjoy it."

Electric Shock

When a person has been shocked by electricity any one near by should begin immediately trying to resusitate the victim while waiting for a physician to arrive. A seemingly dead person may be made to breathe and restored to consciousness if instant and continued treatment is given to him. The Commission on Resusitation from Electric Shock made up of representatives from the National Electric Light Association, the Institute of Electrical Engineers and the American Medical Association, has recommended the following rules for resusitating persons shocked by electricity:

1. Follow these instructions, even if the victim appears to be dead:

2. Immediately break the circuit. with a single quick motion free the victim from the current: use any dry non-conductor (clothing, rope, board) to remove either the victim or the wire. Beware of using metal. While freeing the victim from the live conductor have every effort also made to shut off the current quickly.

3. Instantly attend to the victim's breathing as soon as the victim is clear of the conductor; rapidly feel with your finger in his mouth and throat and remove any foreign body (tobacco, false teeth, etc.) Then begin artificial respiration at once. Do not stop to loosen the victims clothing now; every moment of delay is serious. Proceed as follows.

(a) Lay the subject on his belly with arms extended as straight forward as possible and with his face turned to one side, so his nose and mouth are free from breathing. Let an assistant draw forward the victims tongue.

(b) Kneel straddling the subject's thighs and facing his head; rest the palms of your hands on his loins (the muscles of the small of the back) with your fingers spread over the lowest ribs.

(c) With your arms held straight, swing forward slowly so that the weight of your body is gradually, but not violently brought to bear upon the subject's ribs. This act should take from two to three seconds. Immediately swing backward so as to remove the pressure.

(d) Repeat deliberately 12 to 15 times a minute the swinging forward and backward—a complete respiration in four or five seconds.

(e) As soon as this artificial respiration has been started, and while it is being continued, an assistant should loosen any tight clothing about the subject's neck or waist.

(f) Continue the artificial respiration (if necessary, at least an hour) without interruption, until natural breathing is restored, or until a physician arrives. If natural breathing stops after being restored, use artificial respiration again.

4. Do not give any liquid by mouth until the subject is fully conscious.

5. Give the subject fresh air but keep him warm.

6. Send for the nearest doctor at once.

EPSOM SALTS AND SUGAR.

Why Dishonest Tanners Use Them in Making Leather.

If the leather in your shoes is the product of a dishonest manufacturer the chances are that it is full of epsom salts and sugar and will go all to pieces at the first exposure to wet weather.

Experts in the United States agricultural department's bureau of chemistry have discovered that the adulteration of leather with sugar in the form of glucose and with epsom salts is a favorite form of deception in the tanning industry. This is done to add weight to cheap grades of leather and to make them look and feel as firm, heavy and durable as the higher priced qualities.

Approximately 63 per cent of the leathers examined in a recent investigation was weighted with glucose or epsom salts, or both. This loading varies from 1 to 7.5 with an average of 3 per cent of epsom salts and up to 10.4 with an average of 5.5 per cent of glucose, amounting to a total maximum loading, when both are present, of 16 per cent and an average of 8 per cent.

The loading process makes the leather hard, brittle and liable to crack, and, when the soluble loading washes out, the leather is more easily penetrated by water. In short, this weighting trick tends to destroy those very essential properties of leather for which it is trusted. Our boots and shoes, while supple and yielding, should be waterproof. The menace to the health and comfort of the wearer of loaded leather is obvious, and the practice is most reprehensible.

TOO LATE TO "CAN" REBEL YELL.

Veterans Haven't the Vocal Power to Give Battle Cry Properly.

Posterity if it has any regard for art, will not thank the Texas Daughters of the Confederacy for making a phonographic record of the "rebel yell," says the New York Sun. The veterans who volunteer to shout the old battle cry into the receiver are long past the age of vocal "frightfulness."

The average years of the soldiers in gray who practiced the ear splitter known as the "rebel yell" on the ranks in blue were considerably under thirty. A lot of old fellows verging on 70 can produce only a pathetic travesty on the southern warwhoop.

If posterity is to be impresed, it will take some young blood from the Great Smoky mountains and the Louisiana canebrakes to raise the roof with the shrill, tympanum piercing, blood curdling, utterly discordant long drawn out wail, howl and shriek of exultation that passes for the "rebel yell" when the inspiriting strains of "Dixie" are played to any assemblage of later day southerners south, or north, east or west.

The real old battle cry of the boys in butternut gray can be given no more, even by the survivors. The war between the states had its photographer in Brady, but there was no Edison to record the sounds of the battle field.

FEW WORDS DO ALL THE WORK.

Average American Letter Writers Use a Small Vocabulary.

Leonard P. Ayres, director of education of the Russell Sage foundation, told school superintendents and principals gathered at Iowa City, Ia., recently, that a vocabulary of only 1,000 words was used in nine-tenths of all that the average American writes, the Des Moines Register and Leader states. He declared that those who learned to spell those words correctly would seldom be guilty of an error in spelling.

In a recent test Director Ayres said 2,000 short letters were examined and it was found that the 2,000 writers had used, in a total of 25,000 words only 2,000 different ones.

Mr. Ayres discovered that there are 300 words which stand about three-fourths of all the wear and tear in the language.

Imports of France during the first half of 1915 were $710,000,000, a decrease of $181,800,000 from a year ago.

Gladys Hanson in "The Primrose Path"
A Broadway UNIVERSAL Feature Drama

Gladys Hanson, in the five-reel drama, "The Primrose Path," stands out pre-eminently. The exhibitors have been asking for strong drama. Well, they get it in "The Primrose Path," and no mistake about it. You see the claws of the dragon barely hidden by the gloss and sparkle of the gay artist life. It is a contrast which has ever been the subject of strong drama, and in this one Miss Gladys Hanson enhances the tragic tone of the theme by artistic acting of the powerful nature for which she is famous on the legitimate stage. In connection with this feature, the director built one of the most tremendous cafe sets which it would be possible to conceive or put on in any picture. It was built in the new enclosed studio at Leonia. It is 150 ft. deep, and shows several hundred people dining in a fashionable restaurant, and being entertained by an ultra-modern cabaret entertainment. All of the furnishings and accessories to this wonderful scene are on the most lavish scale imaginable. It is also well to note in connection with "The Primrose Path" that Gladys Hanson, who is the star, is now playing in 'The Ware Case" with Lou Tellegan so that her many admirers in New York may have an opportunity to compare her work on the screen with that of the legitimate stage. Miss Hanson herself prefers her work in pictures, because she has an opportunity before the camera to portray so many different kinds of women. She says she is sure that she has gained a wonderful new equipment in her screen experience.

Hobart Henley in "GRAFT"
UNIVERSAL Special Feature Serial EPISODE No. I

HOBART HENLEY IN GRAFT.

Universal Special Feature Serial Episode No. 1.

The swiftness of the action in this marvelous story of the exposure of the worst features of American politics is so extraordinary that none of the members of the great cast can "let down" for an instant. It seems as if the eighteen well-known authors, who are responsible for the series of episodes, had vied with each other to make each section more thrilling than the one which precedes it. Yet each episode tells a complete story and can be enjoyed for itself alone. The first one, suggested by Irvin S. Cobb, deals with the death of the district attorney by the treachery of "The Fifteen," as the band of grafters is called, the taking up of his work by his son, Bruce Larnigan, splendidly played by Hobart Henley, and his fight against the liquor interests.

CHARLES CHAPLIN IN A BURLESQUE ON "CARMEN."

Charles Chaplin has nearly completed another Essanay-Chaplin comedy and it will be released shortly. The title is "Charley Chaplin's Burlesque on Carmen," in two acts.

Again Chaplin is found in an entirely new role. There is less of the slap stick variety of fun and more of the subtle points of genuine humor.

Mr. Chaplin apparently is able to put over something new in almost every production. You look for him as he appeared last and you find that his make-up has disappeared and a new one donned. But it is the same Chaplin underneath, you find the same personality that has made him beloved all over the world.

KLEINE MAKES "THE SCARLET PATH" WITH GUY COOMBS AND ANNA Q. NILSSON.

'The Scarlet Path" is the title of a new Kleine feature under way. It is a story of New York's Great White Way, and will be told by a star cast with Guy Coombs in the lead. He will be supported by Anna Q. Nilsson, Della Connor and others of like caliber.

"The Scarlet Path" contains a cabaret scene which for size and magnificence is probably unequaled. The entire floor of the big Bronx Studio was given over to the staging of this scene. Several hundred people were engaged, and a balcony, mezzanine floor and grand staircase constructed. The entire production is characterized by a lavishness and wealth of detail commensurate with the splendid story it tells.

MISS FAY TINCHER

Fay Tincher, who used to be Ethel of the stripes in the Majestic Komic comedies, has shifted into real drama with the Triangle regime. Just now she is being used in the "Don Quixote" production, occupying De Wolf Hopper and a large part of the Fine Arts force and studio. Miss Tincher and Habel Normand are unconscious doubles for each other, many folk finding difficulty in telling which is which.

PASTOR FARMER MAKING MONEY

RECLAIMS LAND THAT NEIGHBORS REGARDED AS ALMOST NEXT TO WORTHLESS.

RAISES FINE POTATOES AND FRUIT

Says to Be Prosperous It Is Necessary to Dig, and Do It Properly.

Yazoo City, Miss.—Whether or not being a minister of the gospel has anything to do with a man's success in farming, B. S. Braswell of Pickens, Yazoo county, Miss., has brought some worn-out land, that the neighbors declared would produce nothing but peas and worthless weeds, to a state of cultivation where he now can produce 300 bushels of sweet potatoes per acre on every acre.

More than that, he raises such a good grade of potatoes that he gets an extra price in the market for them. He has been in the ministry for several years. Besides raising potatoes to sell on his small tract, he has plenty of plants each season to sell to neighbors who are not thoughtful enough to start their own hot beds.

The hows and whys of Braswell's farming operations are told by him in the following paragraphs:

"With the use of $6.50 worth of fertilizer on just fairly good land, from 300 to 350 bushels of potatoes can be produced per acre. I find that sweet potatoes can be raised in the south and housed at a cost of about 10 to 12 cents per bushel. I made as high as 300 bushels on some of my land. I set out this year's crop, using only 200 pounds of cottonseed meal and 100 pounds of phosphate.

"Three years ago I began bedding for slips to sell to the public. From 550 bushels set out this year I sold 500,000 plants; I will increase the plantings next spring.

"Next year I will plant 40 acres to sweet potatoes as all of my land has now been built up by scientific methods. From that 40 acres I am sure to get 12,000 bushels of potatoes. I expect to raise the 12,000 bushels at a cost of 10 cents a bushel, which includes the housing also.

"I find that home-canning of potatoes, cabbage, cucumbers, and other vegetables and also fruits, for home use only, is very profitable. It furnishes many luxuries in the farm home that we would not see or even smell if it were not for the home-canner and the good women.

"Having been a minister for many years, I learned to practice some of the groundhog's grit: it is necessary 'to dig' if we are to prosper—and prosperity lies in the soil all around us if we will only dig, and dig properly. At my home we can five kinds of meat besides many kinds of fruits and vegetables. We live absolutely 'at home' at our house."

DRIVER BEHIND HORSE GOES

Jim the Faithful After Ten Years, Retired on Pension of Ease by Union Pacific.

Ohmaha, Neb.—Jim, a faithful servant of the Union Pacific Railway Co. for the past ten years has retired on a pension of ease. Jim, is a horse. He is 21 years old.

Jim pulled the mail wagon between headquarters and Union Station. On the day before his retirement, he manifested his knowledge and faithfulness in a manner convincing to the railway authorities.

The final trip each day was from the company's offices, starting at 5:45 o'clock in the afternoon, to get the mail to the station for a 6:10 train. Jim was at his post on schedule, but the driver, Ed Howk, lingered in the building. Jim waited until 10 minutes after the starting time, then gathered the leather strap attached to a hitching weight in his mouth and trotted slowly to the station. There he waited a sufficient time for the mail to be unloaded, picked up the weight as before and proceeded to the stable. There he was unhitched as usual and led to his stall, where Howk found him after having carried the mail to the depot in a street car.

BOYS ARE BOYS, WORLD OVER.

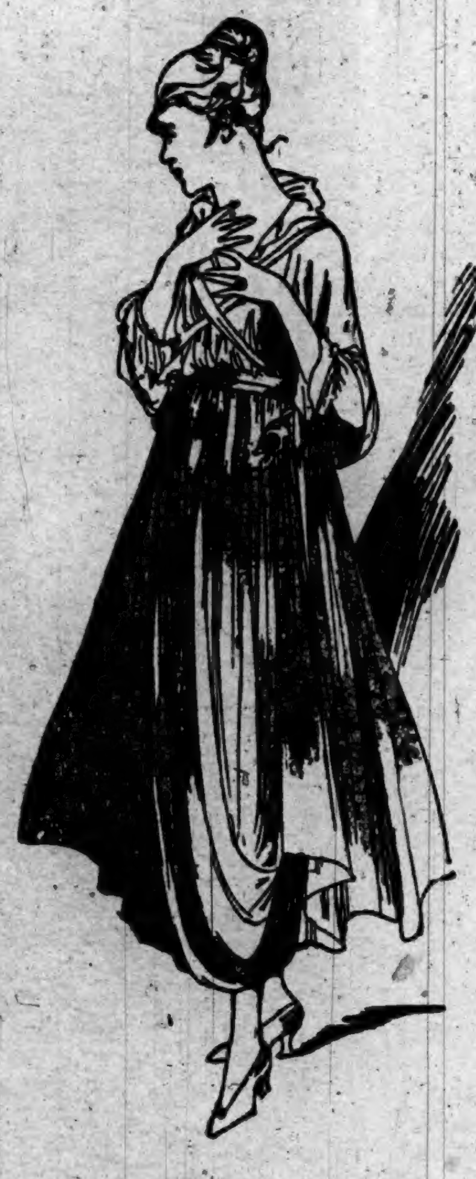
And Daring Prank of Some Youthful Georgians Prove It.

Guyton, Ga.—Autoists, motorists and others who drive into Springfield over the Guyton road, are much amused at a signpost near the public highway as one approaches the county site, which reads:

"Speed Limit 45 Miles Per Hour." Imagine, if you can, an auto going through a little village in Georgia at forty-five miles per. With no halting traffic officer to raise a warning hand, the serene calmness and the placid quietude of the sturdy villagers would unquestionably be jarred a bit.

The sign was not always thus. The speed limit originally was fifteen miles per hour, plainly painted on the post. But the mischievousness of the American youth, asserted itself, and with a deft stroke of brush and paint the numbers were easily changed to read 45 instead of 15. An investigation committee has been appointed to look into the matter.

FASHIONS FROM LONDON



LONDON FASHIONS.

LONDON.—(Special Correspondence.)—Among the Christmas offerings Chinese enamels are conspicuous in the output and are brilliant and pictureqe in color. They are to be found in combs and hair pins, and pins take beautiful forms, from the simplest knob to the one with quite an elaborate top. The enamel is all burned on to a foundation which is imitation shell, and fourteen carat gold is largely used.

Only in China would it be possible to obtain such results and to sell for moderate cost. Everything that sparkles is fashionable. Hair ornaments of sparkling gems are extensively worn, and among the latter are to be found some really beautiful effects that in no way suggest the imitation, but are really attractive and favorable. Peacock colorings seem to belong to this season by a natural right, and combs and pins with the peacock colored tops of scintillating stones are most fascinating and most effective.

It is a theory of the French that the accessory belongs to a special costume, that it should be chosen for its effect and not for its intrinsic value. Hair ornaments of such sort may well be selected for the special toilet and regarded only as an important bit of trimming, not as an object of any lasting value. They carry out the color scheme. They make a good effect. They complete the toilet and having done that they have fulfilled their mission.

PLAYS SIXTEEN OR SIXTY.

Six Is Ella Hall's Favorite Number, But All Ages Are Alike to Her.

Fairy godmothers in plenty must attend the christening of a film star, one to give beauty, one to give charm, another for talent, a fourth for personality, and there is a warm welcome for any other who cares to bring a gift. They all appeared in person at the naming of Ella Hall, the little Universal comedienne, whose work in the beautiful photoplay "Jewel" made her so widely known to film enthusiasts. But a special old fairy made her appearance on that occasion. She was Versality.

Little Miss Hall is sixteen, but she can shake down her curls, tie a ribbon over each ear and pose successfully as six. Pinning up the curls makes her sixteen again, and a white wig with a touch of make-up makes her sixty. She actually played a woman of seventy years old before the camera recently. Miss Hall says it's all in the way you wear your hair, but some people have another name for it—genius for versatility.

Panned Tomatoes.

Cut tomatoes in halves, after removing the skins, and dredge with flour. Lay them in a pan containing a good amount of butter and a little lard. Sprinkle a spoonful of sugar over the tomatoes and add salt and pepper. Bake them a good brown. Lift from the pan and make a thick cream gravy with the remaining juice. Pour the juice into a flat platter, lay the tomatoes on top and garnish with parsley. This is a good summer evening dish.

When the piano is cleaned rub the keys with a cotton cloth that has been dipped in alcohol. This treatment makes them white and smooth.

ODDS AND ENDS

"Are you making much profit on the war order you received?"

"No," replied the president of the company, "but we're selling lots of stock at 10 times what it is worth"—Life.

"I purchased a lovely round oak dining table this morning," said Mrs. Hasher.

"That being the case," rejoined the star boarder, "I suppose we need expect no more square meals."—Indianapolis Star.

In wooing Greece the song of the allies is somewhat to this effect: "Love us or we'll punch your head."

For the matter of that, Europe never knew what a fool's paradise it was while it allowed the menace of militarism to grow up and usurp its best energies.

If Europe is going to declare that all commerce is contraband we neutrals may have to ask it to take away its war.

"Will you have a cherry or an olive in your cocktail, Major?" asked the host.

"Neither," replied the Major, "they merely take up a lot of space that might be better devoted to the likker."—Cincinnati Inquirer.

That Mexican plan to seize and annex the United States ought to provide the green goods merchants and the wire tapping specialists with new lists of profitable patrons.

Europe is starting its second winter of trench life, and is therefore entitled to feel as pessimistic as a republican in Alabama.

Aside from playing politics and buying Christmas presents early, the world is principally concerned just now with borrowing and lending millions.

NEW ENGLAND THRIFT.

Does Not Understand Why the Profit Should Not Be Divided.

During his professional work the young engineer (Francis Hopkins Smith) used to go off and take his recreation painting. I recall an incident which he related at that time as illustrative of a phase of the New England countryman's character.

Frank Smith had found an old water mill with overshot wheel near some piece of his work, and, having ensconced himself in a shady and favorable spot, he proceeded to paint a picture of the mill. His occupation soon drew the attention of the miller, who strolled over and observed him across the fence with growing interest. Finally, on the second day, as his picture grew in resemblance, the miller asked the painter:

"What are you going to do with the finishing touches.
that when it is done?"

"Sell it," said Smith, working at
After a pause of reflection:

"What do you cal'calate to get for it?"

"Oh! A hundred dollars," said Smith, cheerfully. "Perhaps more."

"A hundred dollars!" gasped the miller.

He walked away to reflect and presently returned. His manner had somewhat changed.

"Hes you ast anybody's permission to paint this mill?" he asked, leaning over the fence.

"No—I have not," said Smith, promptly, whose picture was now about finished.

"Hes anybody ever given you permission to paint it?"

"No," said Smith.

"We'all, you know whose mill it is?"

"No, I do not, but I rather expect it is yours," said the painter.

"It is," said the miller, decisively, and then, as the painter made ready to leave:

"We'all, don't you think you ought to divide what you get for that picture with the man who owns the mill?"

"Well, honestly, I don't," said Smith, laughing as he bade him good day and went away leaving him still hanging over the fence pondering the inequalities of life.—Thomas Nelson Page, in Scribner's Magazine.

KEEP YOUR CHICKS ALONE.

When possible growing chicks should be kept away from older fowls until they have attained almost full growth. It is not good to have different ages and sizes together. At feeding time older fowls ill treat the younger and prevent them from getting a fair share of the food. In the daily scramble for rations the small chickens probably have to put up with the dirty, trodden-on remains after the full grown have finished.

The foregoing is a point of view too often lost sight of by the keepers of poultry. The ideal way to keep chickens would be to isolate every brood until the members to be retained are full grown. When this is not possible the rule should be to run together fowls of nearly the same age and size. In one exchange we found this: When culling out your hens always save a few of the best for breeders. A hen that has stood up under two or three years of heavy feeding and laying and is still in good trim is a good hen to tie to. Besides, she will produce eggs larger and better to hatch from than any pullet you have. The very fact that she is healthy and vigorous when well along in age is proof of her quality. The really vigorous flock will always be found to contain a fair percentage of old birds. Pullet's eggs are not used to hatch from by the best poultry establishments. It is always well when culling the flock to retain fowls having characteristics one wishes to reproduce and develop.

Another paragraph offered is this, of which we fully approve: Green food is another thing that the average poultry raiser does not always provide—yet it is one of the essentials that cannot be neglected if the best results are to be achieved. It aids digestion and assimilation, thus keeping the chicks in health. It can be fed in the form of sprouted oats, cabbage, beets, lawn cuttings or from the clover field. Of course, chicks having range can usually find all the green food they need.

Couldn't Be Done

"Go and tell your wife to put her hat on and come for a ride," said Goggles, as he stopped his machine in front of the Wollager home.

"It can't be done," returned Wollager. "My wife never puts on her hat and comes. It always takes her three quarters of an hour to get ready."

"Bosh!" She doesn't have to doll up to go for a ride! All she needs is a big coat."

"Yes, that's all right in theory. But my wife always has to straighten up the house before she goes any place. You see, company might arrive unexpectedly and they might find the house all upset, and that would never do!"

"Company can't come with you folks away from home. Nobody will know whether the house is straight or not."

"Well the house might catch fire and the firemen would break in and neighbors might be inclined to run in and save things. And it would be terrible if the firemen and the neighbors found the house out of order. You see, I know my wife and you don't.

"There is no danger of fire. Put out all the lights. Fire can't start from nothing. There has to be an origin for a fire. You are safe in leaving the house just as it is."

"That may be true, but my wife will figure that we may get hurt out autoing, or we might be taken sick. In that event a doctor would be summoned to our house and he would see how things were, and neighbors would be running in. If the neighbors went into the kitchen to see the kettle boil, they might see other things there, and if they went into the pantry for a teacup the Lord only knows what they might see!

"On Sunday the boys and I are at home all day, busy mussing up the house, throwing papers around, and making ourselves concoctious and resting around, so that really our house is not a model of order on Sunday evening. Therefore my wife has to do a tremendous amount straightening up before we can go to church in the evening.

"Once I was sick and before she sent for the doctor the carpet sweeper had to be chased all over the room where I was and all along the path the doctor was to follow. What do you think of that? Spring cleaning for a doctor!"

"Well, nobody is going to be taken sick this night. The weather is too delightful. I am a careful driver and the air will do your wife good. She must leave the house as it is."

"It's no use," said Wollager, "I know what she will say. She will say that burglars might break into the house while we are away, and what would they think of us if they saw such a looking house?"

UNCLE PETER ARRANGES

By MARTHA M'CULLOCH-WILLIAMS.

Jenny Gray waited on the Gray piazza, which had a look of spick-span new-fashionedness to match the affections of its lord and master, who was coming home that day, bringing a new wife and a newer young brother.

Jenny, raging against the change, had been too sensible, withal too thoroughbred, to be otherwise than passively disagreeable.

She had done her very best with everything—even the wilting, fretful August roses. Her thought was, "The new Mrs. Gray will find out it's none so easy to live up to my blue china."

But when she saw a small, wispy creature half lifted from the car, insensibly her antagonism lessened. The wispy one was clearly very tired, rath of nervous, wholly unsure of herself and her position. She blushed prettily when her husband led forward his capable daughter, saying: "You're always petting things—here's the best ever," forcibly joined their two hands, and introduced Uncle Peter, who was his sister over again, only twenty years younger, and healthy as she was frail.

Jenny also looked at him; a long, measuring gaze. She turned to her father, saying amiably: "Please, sir, I'd rather have the other one; it looks somehow more thriving. Uncle Peter, how will you like to be my little—"

"Jenny!" Thunder does not begin to express the paternal voice. Mrs. Gray gasped, turned white, trembled so she could barely stand, seeing gulfs of black unhappiness ahead. Jenny looked steadfastly at the floor.

Across the tense moment came a gay, boyish voice crying: "Fine! Bully! The very thing! I've moped so since he—" nodding at Mr. Gray—"overshadowed me with Sarah. Now, all's right with the world; there's a Jenny in my heaven, a Jenny who will find me troublesome."

"H-m. Two words are necessary to some bargains," Jenny retorted, recovering herself a little. Her father shook his head at her. "I hope you have met your match," he said. Then to Peter: "Young man, if you'll tame her properly it'll be worth the best horse in my stable to you."

"Please—she ought not to be tamed. I like her best just so," Peter Everett, honor man of his college, athlete despite his slightness and stature, said pleadingly. Then with a swift change he touched his new brother's arm saying: "Better let our Sarah rest a bit; she is ever so tired."

Jenny liked the tone, but she would have died rather than admit it—being far from a model young person. Peter had in a way turned the tables on her—she owed him and his sister, the first cause of his being there, just so much more.

She set out to pay it, girl fashion, by doing her best, in a way skillfully veiled, to capture Peter.

She grew to like him. Still, her vanity got an awful shock when he laid a miniature in her hand one afternoon, saying: "Hope you like her looks! Girl I'm going to marry—some day—if I make anything of myself."

"H-m! What does she say to that?" Jenny asked, her head swimming the least bit. Peter looked down.

"I had rather not tell you," he said. "But—I can't venture unless I'm surer I partly deserve her love. It's the Sarah sort—"

"I don't understand," Jenny interrupted.

He smiled at her. "I was sure you did not," he said. "If you had, being the good sort you are, you'd never—"

"Don't speak of that—I was horribly impertinent to—both of you," Jenny confessed. Peter smiled again. "The Sarah sort is this," he went on, "love that lives hopeless in the face of injustice. My sister and your father were betrothed in early youth. Chance brought him in the way of his old sweetheart, and the two of them were young again. Fact! I saw it—and for a minute at least hated him. Sarah had been everything to me since our mother died. Twenty years between us—yet she isn't old. Haven't they a right to this autumnal happiness?"

"It seems they have—yet I can't agree—when I think of—mother," Jenny broke out, hiding her face in her hands with a dry sob. "We seem to be—so superfluous," she went on bitterly. "I mean to insist that father shall send me away."

"He will never do it. Never in the world," Peter said with a confident accent.

She gave him a hard, reproachful look, so he added merrily: "He surely will not send you—because he is going to take you himself—with Sarah to make a home for you both. You shall stay as long as you like—study or play at your pleasure—"

"This is your doing!" Jenny broke in. He nodded roguishly, saying with a sly smile. "Well, you mustn't mind owing things to Uncle Peter."

THE HAND AND THE RING

By VANE TREMAINE.

Jack Bronson gave up his seat and clung to a strap while he tried to read the morning paper. All around him were other men and women pressing closely as the train bored swiftly through the underground passage.

At Thirty-fourth street, when the car was unmercifully packed, Jack felt a tug at the pocket of his loose stormcoat. His hand slipped down swiftly and closed on another hand, a soft, satiny little hand, that struggled in his for a moment and then freed itself, leaving something metallic in his grasp.

Another man, tall like himself, pressed closely. He was bending down talking to a girl standing by him whose face Jack could not see.

Jack smiled grimly. The train was slowing down at his station and he wormed his way out to the street, his unseen booty clasped in his hand.

He did not once look at it until he had reached his office and opened his desk.

Then, with an odd sense of curiosity, he opened his clenched hand and looked at the ring which he had slipped from the intruding hand in his pocket.

It was well worth looking at, too—a woman's ring, a magnificent emerald, surrounded by brilliants.

Cool reflection told him that possibly he had been made a receptacle for stolen goods by a thief.

He locked the ring in his safe and proceeded with the business of the day. Every morning he kept a close watch of the daily papers to see if the loss was advertised. But he found no hint of it.

Occasionally there came the recollection of that satiny little hand which had struggled with his in the crush of the car where all were wedged tightly like sheep in a pen. And the touch of that strange hand thrilled him persistently.

* * * * * * *

Jack Bronson was in love. If any one person was responsible for this fact it might be his sister, Fanny, who had invited him down to spend the week-end, and there introduced him to Alice Selden.

Miss Selden was a wonderful girl, Jack had discovered almost immediately. She was the only girl he had ever met whom he could really picture as his wife.

They got on together remarkably well, too. They enjoyed the same sports, the same books, the same pictures—practically the same everything.

"You never wear any rings," he said as they sat together on the beach.

Alice looked down at her little tanned fingers and shook her dainty head.

"I used to wear—one," she said rather pensively. "It was a darling ring, and to punish myself for losing it I have vowed not to wear another until I find it."

"Not any ring at all?" quavered Jack, who had been dreaming of placing an engagement ring on her pretty hand.

"No," she said firmly.

"I want to free you from your rash vow. I want to make it possible for you to indulge in at least one ring," he said earnestly.

Alice blushed again, for there was no mistaking his meaning.

"What sort of ring was it?"

"A cluster ring, an emerald surrounded by diamonds. Father gave it to me on my last birthday. I lost it in the subway. It was rather an odd affair—if you don't mind, I'd rather not talk about it any more."

Then she proceeded to change the subject.

"I want to speak to you," whispered Jack as they met next morning in the breakfast room. "Join me on the beach in half an hour. May I expect you?"

She nodded assent and he passed on. When they met he told her of his love for her, and his utter inability to live without her.

When she, in turn, confessed that his swift wooing had won her heart, he would have slipped a blazing solitaire on her finger, but she drew her hand away hastily.

"My vow, you know," she reminded him.

"Close your eyes," he almost sharply commanded. When he saw she had obeyed him he took the emerald ring from his pocket and slipped it on the little finger of her right hand.

At its touch Alice uttered a cry.

"It's mine, Jack—my ring," she laughed.

"Now I can tell you. I was with my brother Arthur. The car was crowded and we were standing. I felt faint and put my hand, as I thought, into Arthur's pocket to get my little handbag. I had slipped it in there for safe-keeping. The pocket was empty and I was just going to speak to Arthur about it when your hand gripped mine. I managed to get my hand away, but my ring remained in your pocket.

"Of course, I did not dare make a fuss because you could face me and accuse me of having my hand in your pocket, and so I let it go. It seems too good to be true."

"Most perfect happiness is!" he said, holding her close to his heart.

YIELD AND VALUE OF LAND

Table Shows Relation and Size of Crop Necessary to Pay Interest.

How many bushels of corn must you raise on your land in order to pay six per cent on the money you have invested? To show the relation between land values and necessary crop yields of corn, Prof. Henry G. Bell, formerly professor of agronomy and manager of farms, University of Maine, who is now Agronomist for the Soil Improvement Committee of the National Fertilizer association, has prepared a table showing how many bushels of corn must be raised per acre in order to pay interest on the land.

Taking $15 per acre as the average production cost of an acre of corn, and figuring the yield at the nominal price of 50 cents per bushel, Professor Bell's table shows that 36 bushels per acre are necessary in order to make the legal rate of interest on $50 per acre land. A yield of 42 bushels per acre is necessary on $100 land, 54 bushels on $200 land, 60 bushels on $250 land, and 72 bushels on land valued at $375 per acre.

Without Which—Nothing Doing.

A rich soil is the first essential to good farming. Too often we forget that and try to skimp along hoping to make crops grow without any plantfood to do it on. If plants are to grow they must feed, just as animals feed. If we could only see the plants' mouths in the roots among the soil particles we would better understand the crying need of soil fertility and we would be more prompt always to have it supplied. Now is the time to plan for making the soil of every field a rich soil. Animal manures carefully conserved, commercial fertilizers rationally and liberally applied, and green manures plowed under in a proper environment, each or all, will turn the trick. But plantfood you must get. As the lawyers would say—it is the sine qua non—without which, nothing doing—of good farming.—Glenn Hayes, in American Farming.

To All Rural Free Delivery Patrons-Why WE Should Help Nominate Bob Hanna As the Republican Candidate For Congress.

Rural free delivery is now an established institution and many of us, no doubt, have forgotten about the hard fight that was made to secure this service for the farmers of our country. Private citizens and public officials, through out the nation, were divided on this question, some supporting and others condemning the idea of establishing rural free delivery. Postmaster General William S. Bissell, in his report for the year 1893, condemned rural free delivery in these words. "The Department would not be warranted in burdening the people with such a great expense." Struggle after struggle was made by the friends of rural free delivery to secure its establishment as a permanant thing, but up to November 1st., 1899, only 383 R. F. D. routes had been established in the United States. However, these 383 routes were sufficient to demonstrate the practicability of the service, and so when the next national campaign came on the friends of rural free delivery got busy.

Here in this congressional district Bob Hanna was nominated as the republican candidate for congress. In his speech accepting the nomination he urged in strong terms, the continuation and extension of the rural free delivery service. He did more than this—MUCH MORE. He called attention to the fact that there was not, at that time, a single rural free delivery route in this congressional district. His political party was then in power at Washington and through his influence with Senator Fairbanks he secured the establishment of a number of R. F. D. routes in this congressional district. As evidence of that fact, attention is called to the Journal-Gazette's newspaper account of a visit made to Allen County by a special agent of the Rural Free Delivery Department at Washington, Mr. S. B. Rathbone, under the date of August 15, 1900, and headed

In that article the Journal-Gazette quoted Mr. Rathbone as follows:

> Mr. Rathbone, in conversation with a Journal-Gazette reporter, said Allen county had been unusually fortunate, as we have three routes, and most communities in the state are not so well off. "But they haven't all been so persistent as Allen County" said he. "We have petitions by the thousand, and it is impossible to grant them all. But when a petition comes in backed by a man like Mr. Hanna, here, who won't take no for an answer, but keeps on hammering away to get what his home county wants, it is hard to get away from granting it. Your friend Hanna has been trying to get routes running everywhere in the district, but we can't give him everything he asks for at present, and are just doing the best we can and giving him more than anyone else is getting at that."

"Blessings of Rural Mail Service.

Three free rural mail delivery routes have been established in Allen County, and the government agent is in the city to examine and establish three additional mail routes into the country if conditions warrant it.

The daily delivery of mail is an inestimable blessing to the people of Allen County and it is due to the earnestness, the loyalty and the influence of the Hon. Robert B. Hanna that they new enjoy it.

And Mr. Hanna's efforts are not confined to this county, for they encompass the district, and we hope to be able to boast of the most complete and thorough free interurban mail service in the United States before the snow falls on the counties of the Twelfth congressional district.

Once established, free rural mail delivery is never abandoned and it certainly must prove a great convenience and favor to the farmer to have his letters, his newspapers, his price list, his market reports and such things placed at his gate daily.

It is a distinct advantage to live on the line of a rural mail delivery route, for it makes the home more desirable and the farm more valuable.

The daily mail spreads contentment, keeps the family in touch with the world, and they can hear often and easily from their friends.

There is nothing to prevent the mail carrier from attending to other wants of the people on his route, so that they actully have a messenger at their disposal every day in the year.

Mr. Hanna, who is modest about his achievements, makes it his personal business to see that the wants of the people of the Twelfth district are recognized and supplied, and we feel sure they will remember his services warmly and gratefully, for the blessings of rural mail delivery increase with time.

Mr. Hanna hopes, as we said, for the establishment of three additional mail routes in this county, and it is to the interest of the farmers living in districts not now served to bestir themselves if they have not already done so, for we shall be very much surprised if Mr. Hanna does not succeed in securing great and unusual favors for his county and his district. He believes that actions are more potent than words, that results are better than promises, and he has been securing them."

As Postmaster Bob Hanna took a deep interest in the rural free delivery branch of the postal service, and if nominated and elected to Congress he will stand in favor of all reasonable and necessary improvements in that service and OPPOSED TO ANY SCHEME THAT WOULD IN THE LEAST DEGREE REDUCE THE EFFICIENCY OF THE RURAL FREE DELIVERY SERVICE NOW ENJOYED BY THE FARMERS OF THIS COUNTRY.

Like most men who have been elected to Congress, Bob Hanna has been tried out by the people in the field of public service. His record as Postmaster of Fort Wayne is one in which the patrons of that office take great pride, and his experience, as Postmaster, in dealing with the Departments at Washington would avail him in his work as a Congressman, particularly in works connected with the rural free delivery service.

Automobile News

COST NO LONGER IS CRITERION OF MERIT.

Wealthy Men Do Not Judge Motor Car Solely by Its First Cost.

Purchasers of low priced automobiles are by no means confined to those who cannot afford to pay more for their machines. That is a fact generally accepted both by dealers in high priced and in low priced automobiles, but by no means by the general public. The shrewd motor car buyer knows that a certain car meets certain requirements and would no more think of using a $5,000 car for $250 business than he would of buying pressed brick to build the partition wall between his garage and his boathouse.

An excellent example of this may be found in the list of owners of Overland cars. During the last few months Overland dealers have reported an increasing number of sales to prominent and wealthy people who might heretofore have been considered prospects for far higher priced cars.

Champ Clark, speaker of the house of representatives, and A. L. Mohler, president of the Union Pacific railroad, are among the most recent to add their names to the long list of Overland owners. Congressman Clark purchased an Overland touring car in Washington on the same day that Mr. Mohler bought his in Omaha.

Either of these men could have invested in any one of the high priced cars selling at five of six times the price of the Overland if they so desired. In fact, Mr. Mohler already owns two of the highest priced cars made in this country. But the practicability of the Overland, with its detachable top and numerous other advantages, appealed to him strongly as a car of exceptional value.

A few years ago men of their standing were considered prospects exclusively for dealers handling high priced cars. Automobiles at that time were judged solely from a price standpoint and it was a rare event for a salesman to interest a wealthy man in any car that did not sell at a top figure.

But quantity production methods now in vogue in this country have enabled big manufacturers such as the Willys-Overland company to put the maximum of quality and workmanship into their cars and yet sell them for a reasonable figure.

As the second largest consumers of raw materials in the industry the Toledo concern is able not only to buy in enormous quantities but is able to take advantage of every favorable turn of the market, anticipating its requirements and paying huge sums in cash. The first saving on the cost of materials alone runs into millions of dollars in the course of a year. But it is due primarily to the improved methods of manufacture, made possible only in a plant of its size, that the Overland is able to put quality first in the construction of its cars. Each part of the Overland is made by men who have become proficient in their work through constant application at one task. These parts when assembled must of necessity form a more perfect car than would be possible to build in a factory where the production was limited or where the comparatively few workmen were compelled to turn out a great variety of parts. It is manufacturing methods such as these that have placed the Overland in a position where the car itself, as well as its price, now appeals to all buyers

LIKE NEW OAKLAND SEDAN.

Car Built for Local Firm Meets Popular Approval.

Visitors to the Tennant-Oakland company this week are making favorable comments on the six cylinder Sedan that company is showing. This body has been built especially for the Tennant-Oakland company after the combined ideas of J. G. and W. G. Tennant.

The outward appearance is very attractive, the body being ideally proportioned to the chassis. The interior is finished in imported cord and laces. Comfort and roominess have been carried out in a most pleasing manner. There is no crowding with five people in the car, the driver and one passenger using individual chairs, with a lounge seat in the rear accommodating three.

An innovation in the use of prism glass lifts on the side windows in place of straps, all the plate glass dropping into the sides when weather allows. The whole car has an appearance of great roominess and ideally meets the growing demand for an all the year car.

BRISCOE TO ENLARGE OUTPUT.

Statement Is Made by Head of Big Motor Car Concern.

Rumors of a large increase in the facilities of the Briscoe Motor company, which have been rife for some time, are confirmed in an announcement just made by Benjamin Briscoe, in which he states:

"For years it has been my aim to build up an organization of strong manufacturing and selling executives whom, at the proper time, I could ask to share with me in the full responsibilities and full rewards which came from our development.

"The rapid growth of the Briscoe Motor company brought about this condition even sooner than I expected. This rapid growth demonstrated that the Briscoe Motor company was destined to be one of the big factors of the industry and at the same time made it imperative that the company should be equipped to manufacture every part of its cars, in view of the large production which public demand has made necessary.

"This in turn made advisable an association with some outside business men of very strong financial standing, who would be both able to see and equipped to realize the wonderful future of the company. We were very fortunate in finding a number of Chicago capitalists who welcomed the opportunity to enter the automobile industry in a prosperous, going concern, and who had demonstrated in other lines both their largeness of vision and their ability to achieve stupendous financial success."

ENGINEERS MEET AT SHOW.

Motor Designers Convene at New York's Big Exhibit.

Officials of the Chalmers Motor company have decided on Thursday, Dec. 23, as the date for the distribution of $500 in prize money to the winners in the first "suggestion contest" held by the Detroit concern. More than 4,000 employes of the company are expected to attend the meeting, which will be held in the big Arcadia auditorium on Woodward avenue. Following the allotment of prizes, the hall will be turned over to the employes and their friends for dancing.

Originated last July by Hugh Chalmers, the "suggestion contest" idea was formulated to obtain the cooperation and aid of the 5,000 men and women who gain a livelihood at the big automobile plant.

"The intelligent work of our employes has enabled us to manufacture and sell what we believe to be one of the very best automobiles on the market," said Mr. Chalmers at the time the suggestion contest was commenced. "We want your continued co-operation and especially your ideas along any lines that will help to improve the car and improve our manufacturing and business methods. To those who give us ideas and suggestions we propose to offer $500 in cash prizes as a mark of our apreciation. In the future, in making promotions or increasing wages we will take into consideration the number of good suggestions made by an employe."

LIKE THE "ALL-YEAR" CAR IDEA.

Professional Men Show Liking for Inclosed Body Type.

"Since the advent of our all year car the proportion of professional men to the total of KisselKar owners has jumped from 13 to 18 per cent," says H. P. Branstetter, local dealer.

"This increase is principally among practicing physicians, to whom continuous summer and winter motoring is a necessity. These men not only require utility and comfort, but style and appearance as well. Before Kissel brought out the all year idea they couldn't get these things without owning two cars or, at least, interchangeable bodies. In the all year car they are able to obtain them at an initial cost of $700 to $1,000 less than formerly."

ORDERS SWAMP JEFFERY.

Winter Tourists Want Inclosed Cars for Cold Weather.

Word comes from the Thomas B. Jeffery company of Kenosha, Wis., that cold weather has completely snowed under their body building department. Orders for the new Jeffery sedan have stormed the factory without a letup since the first real chill of fall crept into the air. In fact, the demand continues so heavy that it is now certain that there will not be enough sedans to go around. Those dealers who put in large orders early in the season are patting themselves on the back, and the company is recommending that all buyers who want their cars promptly will have to order early.

Those who have seen the sedan remark on its beauty of line and finish. Many say it is the first real custom made inclosed coach to sell at such a moderate price.

COFFEE HOUSES FOR SALOONS.

Dr. Mark A. Matthews, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Seattle and formerly moderator of the Presbyterian church of North America, says that he will take steps to find a substitute for saloons in Seattle, which will go out of business Jan. 1, according to the Spokane Spokesman-Review. Dr. Matthews says his plans include establishing coffee houses in parts of the city frequented by large numbers of men who follow seasonal occupations and spend their unoccupied time in saloons.

His plan is to sell them a good cup of coffee and bread or doughnuts for the same price they now pay for a glass of beer, and to give them a place where they can read and rest if they desire.

DINKEY'S MARVELOUS RISE.

"Dinkey has shifted."

Crinkly bearded Andrew Carnegie sighed it. Forty thousand men in the Carnegie Steel company whispered it one to another. William E. Corey announced it to the public.

Alva Clymer Dinkey, who as an awkward lad in May of 1879 had got a job as water boy at the Edgar Thomson steel works in Braddock, Pa., and who had risen from that humblest post to the highest pinnacle of the corporation bearing the name of the ironmaster, had resigned to accept the presidency of the Midvale Steel company, to succeed Corey. It was just incredible—that's what it was, says Financial America.

To the oldest employes of the Carnegie Steel company it seemed only yesterday that Dinkey had been one of them. They had watched him with round eyed wonder and some lurking envy as he had scrambled up successively and successfully from one niche of employment to another—from water boy to telegrapher at the Thomson works; next, machinist in the Pittsburgh locomotive works; then expert machinist in the McTighe Electric company; after that secretary to the superintendent of the Carnegie Steel company; then electric light and power superintendent of the plant; then general superintendent; then, in 1902, president of the Carnegie Steel company. If it wasn't a romance of steel, what was it, then? And the lad hadn't been spoiled or grown chesty—not a bit of it. He had just taken his triumphs as naturally as a German reaches for another wiener.

Of course the boys at the works had made their jokes on his name—who could help it? It was more fun to them than watching a harelipped man eat corn on the cob. He had harbored no resentment and when Carnegie himself had selected Dinkey as one of the directors of the Carnegie hero fund commission, Dinkey had pinned no medals on himself because of his forbearance.

The name Dinkey is now a certificate to be traded in, when, as, and if issued.

Dinkey is the last to leave of the "big three"—Schwab, Corey, Dinkey—who were the props and reliance of Andrew Carnegie in the heyday of his iron-masterdom

The world knows by this time that Dinkey is Schwab's brother-in-law, and in the former's election as head of the Midvale, taken together with the personnel of the directorate, of which Corey becomes chairman, Schwab now has close connection with the company and there has been a revival of rumors of another giant steel merger.

Dinkey has many business interests and there is no use of issuing a supplement to this paper for the sake of chronicling them.

The number thirteen seems to have had some influence in his life—he got his job as water boy when 13 years old and he held the presidency of the Carnegie Steel company for thirteen years—and they have been lucky ones. Dinkey wears eyeglasses, keeps his face smooth and has a noticeably long upper lip.

"JEKYLL-HYDE" IN REAL LIFE.

ELIZABETH, N. J.—A "Jekyll-Hyde" in real life was sent to the county jail on a 60-day sentence today for terrorizing young women.

By day, he was Loring T. Crostman, 22 years old, an engraver, a college graduate and an athlete.

By night he was a "Mr. Hyde." He was arraigned today before Judge Mahon on three charges. He was accused by Misses Helen Hunser, Helen Fratz and Annie Kaufman of having greatly frightened them.

Judge Mahon gave Crostman the alternative of going to jail for 60 days or paying a fine. He chose jail. His father, of D. A. Crostman & Co., Portland, Me., was in court when the young man was sentenced.

The young man's father said until a few weeks ago, when he became afflicted with a mania for frightening women and girls, his son was a moral young man. He is said to be engaged to marry a Portland girl.

Crostman welcomed arrest. He told Chief Mulcahy that he had been seized with a mania to frighten girls and women into a state of terror since he had read Robert Louis Stevenson's celebrated story, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

He said he could not control his mania, and that although he had held numerous positions as an expert engraver he had been compelled to flee from city to city in fear of detection. Crostman is 6 feet 3 inches in height. He told the police he had won athletic honors during his college days. He said he never smoked or drank and had lived in good surroundings. It was after leaving college at Haverford, Pa., that he read "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," and the book made such an impression as to transform him completely. He said he was overcome with the desire to imitate the metamorphosis of the kindly physician to the murderous and animal-like Hyde, and the feeling increased until he had to give away to it.

"Just as a user of opiates suffers tortures when deprived of his drug, so was I when I attempted to overcome my nocturnal wandering which left trails of terror-stricken girls. During the day when my Doctor Jekyll nature was in power I shuddered at what I had done, and actually prayed for strength to prevent the return of Hyde. It was useless. Just as I have acted here I acted in other cities, but this is the first time I ever was arrested."

U. S. SEEKS TO SPREAD POTATO CONSUMPTION

Ways of Drying and Powdering Them Tried Out to Save the Frieght Charges

FIFTH OF CROP IS WASTED

Methods of Utilizing Poorer Grades Would Raise the Quality of Those for the Table

By Frederic J. Haskin.

The Irish potato, like the prophet, has been not without honor save in its own country. It gets its name because it saved the Irish from famine. The French recently erected a monument to Antoine Augustin Parmentier, the man who introduced it into that country. It is most widely appreciated in Germany, where potato meal is just now an important factor in the empire's war economics.

In America, where it originated, the potato is, of course, widely used, but almost as much is wasted as is eaten. Owing to its large content of water, it is not profitable to ship raw potatoes far. Practically all of the other potato eating countries have invented methods of converting it into meal which is used for bread making and stock food. In Germany potato meal has been a staple for a century.

Dried and Pulverized.

Now this country is beginning to follow suit. The homely spud, long neglected, is being pushed into the spotlight of science. Ways to dry it and dessicate it and pulverize it, so that it may be preserved indefinitely and shipped to the ends of the earth, are being devised. Its varieties are being multiplied so that there will be one suited to every section of the country. New ways of cooking it are constantly coming to the fore. We now have potato meal, potato bread, potato muffins and potato pudding. It looks as though the potato was determined to masquerade in every dish on the bill of fare.

The climax of the potato's glory will be reached in a few weeks when the department of agriculture will hold an extensive potato show in one of its new buildings. Here will be placed on exhibition all the different varieties of potatoes which the government experts have succeeded in producing, together with full data upon the conditions of climate and soil to which they are adapted. If there is any sort of a potato which you can raise in your backyard or on your farm, go to the government potato show and you will find it there.

How Potatoes Are Treated.

The department of agriculture is now observing and studying the potato from many angles. On its experimental farm at Arlington it has erected a plant for drying potatoes and grinding them into meal for food. So far the experiment has not [illegible] a complete success. The apparatus consists of a potato-washing machine which was purchased from Germany, and a traveling wire screen for drying the pulp by passing it over steam heated pipes.

The perfection of a practicable apparatus for doing this work will be worth many millions to American agriculture. From 10 to 20 per cent of the American potato crop is wasted every year because it is not good enough for table uses and there is no means of preserving it for stock food or converting it into flour.

The problem in this country is to produce the stock meal cheaply enough so that the farmer can sell it at a profit. The government experts believe that the producer would get about twenty cents a bushel for potatoes which were ultimately used in that form.

Higher Grade for Table.

This price would not make it profitable to cultivate them in many sections of the country for use as stock food alone. It would, however, make it possible for the farmer to get something for his culls, and by sorting more thoroughly, to put a higher grade of potato on the market for table use.

There is one commercial organization in this country which has for its object the manufacture of potato meal. This concern is experimenting with the various drying and grinding processes with a view to establishing a string of "community potato mills" in sections where the production is heaviest, and hence the waste greatest. The idea seems to be a large one and ought to be worth a great deal, both to the promoters and the farmers. At present, however, the experiments are rather at a standstill, because Germany is about the only source of potato machines, and the war has put her out of the market.

The German method of handling potatoes is more elaborate than any f those tried in America. In Germany the potatoes are first washed, then cooked in a steam vat and crushed between rollers. The resultant pulp is passed through heated steel cylinders, which are perforated, so that they press the product into flat cakes. These cakes may be ground up fine and made into flour. Potato bread has been a staple in Germany for over a century.

Potato Bun a Delicacy.

Experiments in the use of potatoes as a breadstuff are being carried on in this country by the Michigan State Agricultural college. The Michigan cooks have produced a sort of potato bun, which is declared to be quite a delicacy.

In this country, of course, our bumper wheat crops make it unnecessary to use substitutes for breadstuff. The high cost of living in this country, however, is traceable largely to our national extravagance and wastefulness, of which allowing 20 per cent of our potato crop to rot on the ground is a fair sample. If we ate more potato bread we might not have to pay so much for beefsteak.

Germany produces about four times as many potatoes as the United States. This immense crop is used for a wide variety of purposes. Not only is the vegetable eaten fresh and made into bread, but alcohol for industrial purposes and in the form of brandy and starch are manufactured from them.

How France Got the Potato.

The French are almost as enthusiastic potato eaters as the Germans. Parmentier, who introduced the potato into France, was captured by the Prussians in 1750. At that time the potato had recently been introduced into Europe from Peru, and it was being extensively cultivated in Germany.

After the war was over France was impoverished, and offered a prize for the discovery of a new vegetable that would serve as a suitable foodstuff. Parmentier, recollecting the succulent tubers he had eaten in Prussia, brought forward the potato, and a large field was planted with them under the direction of the government. A guard of soldiers was placed around the young potato plants, and this greatly excited the curiosity of the peasants.

When the potatoes got ripe they crept through the lines of sentries at night and gathered the strange vegetables, which, no doubt, tasted all the sweeter for being both new and stolen. So the potato quickly became popular in France, and potato bread is a staple there as well as in Germany.

IRON JEWELRY OF GERMANY.

It Was Made in Prussia When the Country Needed Money

Many months ago, almost from the beginning of the war, we were told that German women, following the example of their great-grandmothers, voluntarily gave up their gold rings, necklets, earrings, bracelets and ornaments of every description, to be made or coined into money for the national need.

Whatever truth there may be in this story, there is no doubt that many German women have been presented by the government with iron rings to replace the gold ones they have parted with.

But that happened a century ago. Then Prussia, crushed by Napoleon, and bankrupt, was in dire need of money, and the Prussian women gave up all their jewels and ornaments to help cope with the prevailing poverty. And out of this sacrifice a new industry arose.

This was nothing less than the manufacture of castiron jewelry to replace the gold and silver ornaments which the great ladies of the kingdom had dispensed. At first sight no material would seem less promising as a substitute for the precious metals than iron. It was entirely owing to the wonderful craftsmanship of the ironworkers that the results were so extraordinary.

Strength of course would be a distinguishing mark of such jewelry, and a complete set of these iron ornaments, now in the possession of a Toronto jeweler, is as rigid and firm as on the day it was made, says London Answers. This particular set, comprising a pair of earrings, necklet, locket and bracelets, has not been looked after until lately.

The ornaments have a wonderfully fragile appearance, due entirely to the exquisite workmanship. Their weight, too, is astonishingly small, the lightness of every article being quite a feature of the set.

WALTZING ON THE ICE IS A SIMPLE MATTER

"Style Counts Mere than Anything Else in Skating," says the Expert

FOUNDATION OF THE GLIDES

To Be a Good Skater and Waltzer It Is Necessary to Master Full Swing of Body

Style counts more than anything else in skating. And the so-called "continental" style is the recognized form among the smart skaters of today—the transfer of European methods to American ice, Clare Cassel writes in the New York World. Here follow the five rules laid down by the International Skating union for this correct "form" on the ice:

1. The head should be carried erect, with the gaze directed seldom at the ice.

2. The arms, whether active (assisting the movement) or passive (poised during prolonged strokes), should have play from the shoulders, the elbows slightly bent.

3. The body should be moved upright on its base, not bent forward or sideways from the hips, with shoulders thrown back.

4. The skating leg should be always bent somewhat at the knee, so as to give command of action.

5. The free leg should be poised and swung entirely from the hip.

Avoid jerkiness, violence, affectation or stiffness. Good form means that your skating should appear as simple and easy as possible. Beginners will do well to start skating alone. Good professionals insist on this and rarely lend a hand to aspiring pupils.

First Learn to Glide.

Watch good skaters—that must be the beginning of your efforts to acquire form on the ice. Strive mightily to master a free swing of the whole body, which gives the gliding movement so essential to dancing well on skates. Forget grape-vines, intricate turns, stars or tiny cuts on the ice—their day is done.

The four fundamental movements necessary to dancing on the ice are the inside and outside edge, forward, and the inside and outside edge, backward. Add the figure "3" to this list and you will be able to waltz on the ice in perfect rhythm to the dreamiest music. When going in a curved direction on the right foot to the right, the skater is on the outside edge. When going in the left the skater is on the inside edge. The same holds for the left foot, and for the backward strokes on both feet. The "3" is merely a combination of two edges, one edge forward, then a turn and a backward edge on the same foot, or one backward edge, a turn and one edge forward.

These edges and the "3" ought to be mastered freely and easily after a week's practice. Remember, the head should revolve with the shoulders, and the unemployed foot, in forward edges, should be behind with the toe pointed toward the ice. The feet should never be far apart.

The first part of the "3" is on the outside edge forward, and the second part is on the inside edge backward. Divide the figure mentally into two parts. Start off on the right foot for the outside edge and, as the center is approached where you mean to divide the figure, the left shouder is brought very well in front and the body is quickly and smoothly turned with a swing to the right. Instantly the turn is made the left shoulder is thrown back and the head turned in the direction of the curve, which is the inside edge backward. The point of the "3" at the center should be cleanly cut and there should be no scraping on the ice with the skate. This can only be accomplished by a bold, determined swing which has no fear of a fall. And remember that the inside edge, which follows it, must be as long and the same size as the outside edge which preceded the turn. Hold to this until the "feel" comes.

All the edges can be learned by practicing large circles on each foot, inside and outside, forward and backward. Now we are ready for the three-step waltz, which is merely a rhythmic series of steps—outside edge forward, "3," and inside edge backward, first with one foot and then with the other, the man going forward as his partner goes backward and vice versa. Keep on with the same partner until the dance is thoroughly learned and then it is possible to waltz on the ice with any one, provided he or she is as accomplished in the simple strokes as you are.

UNJUSTIFIABLE PREJUDICE.

Many Allow Superstition to Effect Their Business Acts.

Somewhere in the mind of everybody is a corner reserved for objects or persons or institutions against which he has a prejudice which he cannot justify or does not care to justify on any ground whatever except that the aversion is present and everlasting. There is, for instance, the man who will not open a letter upon which the stamp is placed upside down. It is quite true that he receives few letters, and very few indeed which bear a stamp upside down, but he seems to derive a great deal of pleasure from informing those of his correspondents who commit this indiscretion that their postal manners are in need of revision.

Sometimes the letters bear no mark to show their source, in which case his wife opens them and provides the necessary information. On one occasion he returned a letter that contained an acceptance of a proposal to sell a small farm which he was very desirous of selling. Later, when informed that his aversion to stamps upside down had probably cost him considerable money, he was not depressed, but rather seemed to derive additional pleasure from the incident.

Superstition doubtless accounts for most aversions. Persons who scoff at superstitions will put off till Saturday what they could just as well do on Friday, for no other reason than that Friday has a shady reputation on account of its imagined associations with disaster. But superstition does not account for the aversion which the purchasing agent for a large corporation has for green lead pencils. It has become known to the salesmen for various supply houses which sell goods to this agent that a salesman with a green lead pencil stands no chance whatever of procuring an order.

His goods may be all right and his price entirely satisfactory, but his green lead pencil makes the purchasing agent so nervous that he cannot refrain from making it unpleasant for the salesman. He admits that so far as he knows the color of paint on a pencil has nothing to do with its quality, but at the same time he cannot see why anyone should prefer a green pencil when it is obvious that there is something wrong about the combination that makes him nervous.—Indianapolis News.

MONTMARTRE CHANGING.

The windmills of Montmartre, France, the oldest and most artistic and characteristic monuments of the district, have, some of them, already succumbed to the modernizing of Paris, or to the action of the elements—the others are threatened with destruction unless the friends of old Paris can get them moved from their present sites.

The Moulin de la Poivriere was demolished two years ago to give way to the new Avenue Junot. The Moulin rouge became a prey to the flames last winter and now the old Moulin de la Galette, which dates from the middle of the thirteenth century, is doomed to extinction or removal. A modern apartment house with steam heat and baths is going up there now, and the mill, the girls and their dancing partners must go elsewhere.

The old Paris municipal council committee has decided that something must be done to perpetually commemorate the Bohemian days of Montmartre and to preserve some of its artistic features. It proposes to transfer the Radet or Moulin de la Galette to the Palace Jean-Baptiste Clement, where it will continue to overlook Paris. Cherry trees are to be planted around it to commemorate the godfather of the place, the popular song writer and author of the Chanson des Cerises.

FROM THE SOUTH SEAS.

South Sea islanders are soon to be among the troops being trained to fight for Great Britain. A transport left Auckland, New Zealand, recently for Rarotonga, in the Cook group, and Niue Island, which lies between the Cook archipelago and Tonga, to take on board native contingents from Rarotonga and Niue Island. The islanders will be taken to New Zealand and will eventually be merged with a force of Maoris (natives of New Zealand) when the latter are sent to the front.

Some months ago Nieu island attracted general attention because upon the news that Great Britain was at war reaching there the tribes gathered, raised a sum of money for the British cause, addressed a letter to King George in which they referred to their island as "the smallest child of the great motherland," and offered to provide 200 fighting men.

FINDS BURIED GOLD BUT CAN'T GET IT

Clergyman Sure He Has Discovered Treasure Buried by Perry Before Erie Battle

EXCAVATES FOR IT NIGHTS

Hugh Oak Planks Block Him in Quest for this Great Wealth, He Says

Sandusky, O.—Rev. John Coup, Company K, One Hundred and Sixty-fourth Regiment, O. V. I., an inmate of cottage N, Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, says he has found gold and silver of almost inestimable value, buried by members of Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry's crew in the campaign preceding the battle of Lake Erie, September 10, 1813.

The gray haired old man says he was aided in his search by a delicate instrument of his own invention—an instrument very much like the one used in the oil fields of eastern Pennsylvania, Northwestern Ohio and Northern Indiana for locating oil and gas veins in the early days of the development of the fields of those States.

"I will only say now that the place where this treasure was buried is in East Sandusky, near the shore of Sandusky Bay," said Mr. Coup. "I have been there with a trusted friend of mine. We have excavated by night but have not been able to get to the treasure as yet. It won't be long, however until we are both rich, for the gold and silver is there."

Mr. Coup said further that the reason why he has been unable to unearth the treasure is that huge oak planks apparently laid above and beneath the gold and silver thought to have been buried have been encountered.

Residents of East Sandusky have been discussing mysterious lights that have been seen moving slowly in the vicinity of the western shore of Big Island for some time past late at night. It is thought now that these lights were carried by Mr. Coup and the man who is aiding him.

An examination of the island has, however, failed to develop any indication that a quest for wealth is or has been prosecuted there.

WOMEN ENVY MAN'S COOKIES

Thrashing Laborer Beats Them All on Farming Circuit.

Madison, Wis.—"Cooking for the thrashers" has been the stock expression for all that is wearisome in farming households for many years. It meant extra help in the kitchen—hustle and worry and stew, bake and broil and fret from 5 a. m. until after 8 o'clock at night.

But in Dane county the farmers' wives have no need to worry. That county can boast of one thrasher man who is such an exceedingly skillful and resourceful cook that he can beat the best of women competitors.

C. A. Baily of De Forest is the man. At the Windsor fall festival he carried off one first prize on devil's food cake, another first on cocoanut cookies, first prize on baking powder biscuits, second prize on lemon pie and sweepstakes on canned peaches.

"It's a shame I couldn't have spared more time from my work with the gang or I would have entered something in every class in the outfit," smilingly declared Baily to a group of people who were admiring his dainties."

He then leaned back complacently against the show case and putting his thumbs in the armholes of his vest, told the gaping group his best recipes. His defeated rivals icily turned their backs and began examining the crazy quilts and tatting.

GIRL RESTS ON RATTLESNAKE

Cotton Picker Thought Reptile Was a Sack on Ground

San Angelo, Tex.—Flora Hanson, a 16 year old cotton picker on the Stanley Turner ranch, near here, sat on a rattlesnake for fifteen minutes, thinking the snake was a cotton sack.

The snake permitted her to sit in peace, and it was not until the girl reached for her cotton sack to begin her day's labor that she learned of her mistake. The snake was more than 4 feet in length. That the reptile was cold in the early morning is the only reason that can be ascribed for its not biting the girl.

So the Calf Kept on.

New York.—As a train stopped at a little Ohio station the passengers heard the plaintive bawling of a calf, which was being wheeled along the platform in a crate.

"There's some one complaining, conductor," said a traveler, looking for a bit of fun.

"Not to me," answered the mild old ticket taker. "Never heard a passenger's complaint with that much sense."

Japan has 86 stocking factories.

Pathetic

"Why, my dear!" exclaimed the good friend, on finding Mrs. Newwed in a flood of tears. "What is the matter?"

The young wife wiped her eyes and tried to compose herself and be inhumanly calm.

"Well," she began, with folded hands, "you know John is away to be gone a week."

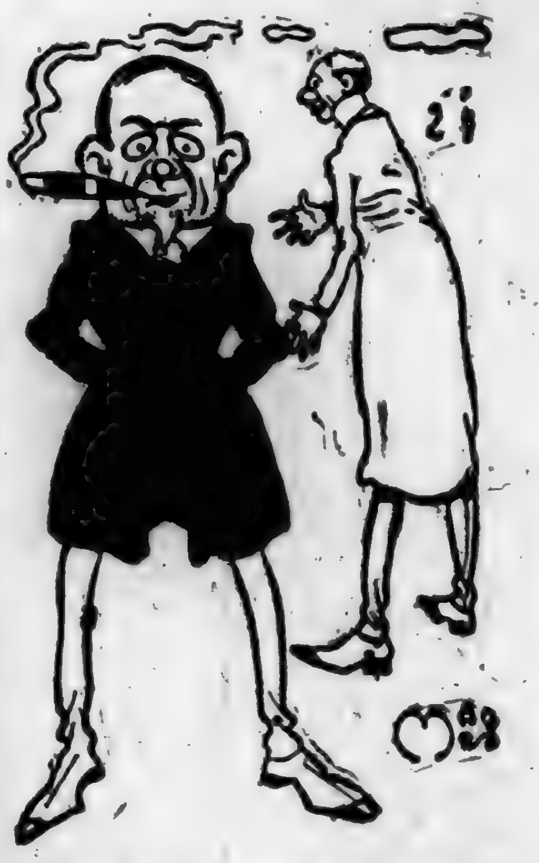
"Yes, my dear," helped the lady friend.

"Well, he writes me regularly, and in his—his last letter he tells me he gets my photo out and kisses it every day."

"But there is nothing for you to cry about in that!" exclaimed the good frind.

"Yes, there is," cried Mrs. Newwed, bursting into tears afresh, "be-because I took my picture out of his ba-bag before he started, ju-just for a jo-joke, and put one of mo-mo-mother's in its place!"

CAN'T KEEP AND GIVE.



"You say he gave you his word he would do it?"

"Yes."

"Well that's the trouble; you should have made him keep it."

Possibly Tainted

"These are evil days for the rich men," said George Ade at a luncheon at the Chicago Athletic Club. "I'd rather be a pickpocket than an interlocking director—there's more honor in it.

"They say that a cannibal king recently sent posthaste for his doctor.

"'Good gracious, man!' the doctor said. 'You're in a dreadful state. What have you been eating?'

"'Nothing,' groaned the sick man, 'except a slice of that multimillionaire whose yacht was wrecked on Cocoanut Reef.'

"'Merciful powers!' the doctor cried, 'and I told you under no circumstances to eat anything rich. George, get the saws and axes. We must operate at once.'"

His Aim

The cannon ball express was crawling up the Blue Ridge not far above Warrenton when a small yellow dog dashed snarling out of a house near the track and ran after the train, barking at a furious rate.

"Well, sir," exclaimed the conductor, proudly, to a passenger from the north who stood beside him on the rear platform, "that's a most amazing dog. He tears out of that house every day and chases after this train for miles. He's—"

"Pardon me, captain," interrupted a long, solemn Virginia farmer, the only other occupant of the platform, "but what do you s'pose he's aimin' to do with the train if he does catch it?"

Argument Closed

Jackson and Johnson are not now on speaking terms. It all arose as the result of an argument which required some mental calculation.

"I tell you," said Jackson, "that you are altogether wrong in your conclusions."

"Pardon me, but I am not," replied Johnson.

"Didn't I go to school, stupid?" almost roared his opponent.

"Yes," was the calm reply," and you remained stupid."

End of Patience

"Son, I hear you had a fight with another boy."

"Yes, dad, I did. But the other boy began it."

"But you must extend the olive branch?"

"And suppose he refuses to accept it?"

"Then crack him over the head with it."

Calculations

"Let me see," said the young man, thoughtfully, "I've got to buy some flowers, and some confectionery, and some perfume, and some theater tickets, and—"

"Doing mental arithmetic?" gently inquired his fellow-worker at the next desk.

"No. Sentimental arithmetic."

Planting Potatoes

"You know, madam," said the seedsman, "you don't have to plant your potatoes whole; you can cut them up in small pieces."

"Yes, I know," said Mrs. Newwife, "that might do very well if we always wanted to raise potatoes for lyonnaise or for mashing, but we should probably desire to have potatoes served whole now and then, just for variety's sake, you know."

DOLLARS TO THE ACRE

Ten Days' Earlier Maturity Would Have Eliminated Much Soft Corn, Says Expert.

General Use of More Suitable Varieties and Abundance of Available Plant Food Would Have Ripened Grain Earlier and Made Quality Higher.

By CLYDE A. WAUGH, Editorial Manager, Soil Improvement Committee of the National Fertilizer Association.

Shortening the growing season of the 1915 corn crop by a week to ten days would have put millions of dollars in the farmer's pocket. Ten days would not have saved all the loss from soft corn, but a single week would have made ears that were a total loss good enough for feeding and made such corn good only for feeding into marketable ears. When, as in some cases, not more than two bushels out of three were good for market or a 90-bushel crop represented but 60 bushels at the elevator, a few days would have added dollars to every acre.

Leaving variety out of the question, perhaps the most important factor in obtaining a yield of good, solid ears is the use of available plant food in sufficient quantities and in the proper balance to give the crop a quick start and to enable it to press on to early maturity. A little nitrogen applied in a complete fertilizer in spring will give the corn crop a quick start, while the phosphoric acid and potash in the fertilizer will cause it to mature several days ahead of unfertilized crops. If you are using fair amounts of manure on your corn crop, the manure will contain sufficient quantities of nitrogen and potash for your crop, but manure is weak in phosphoric acid, so to obtain an early-ripening crop, apply 200 to 400 pounds of acid phosphate (the crop ripener) to your crop in connection with applications of farm manures.

More Attention to Soil.

"Illinois farmers must pay more attention each year to soil conservation. Higher prices for farm products and increasing land values make such attention not only profitable but necessary," says Charles E. Snyder, editor Farmers' Review. "The days of large yields from virgin soils are passing. Attention to plant food requirements of crops and soils means the difference between profit and loss many times."

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Some Lucky Accident.

Auto accidents are quite frequent now adays, but as yet we have not heard of any that comes up with the one that happened on the grade, just across the B. & O., near O. E. Ginthers' last Wednesday evening, about six o'clock. Frank Shaffer, wife and eldest son were returning from Ligonier, where they had been to attend the funeral of a relative. The roads were in bad shape and he was without lights but being so near home they felt safe. The windshield was lowered so as to permit Mr. Shaffer seeing the road as the glass was splashed up so as to shut off his view of the road. The electric lights were on and as they drove up the grade, the lights seemed to blind the driver and he kept leading off to the left, for a distance of about 200 feet. All at once they left the road, turned down the high embankment, rolled over the fence, and alighted right side up, with everyone in their seat and the machine headed south—the same direction in which they were traveling. The top was up, thus it held them in and no doubt saved their lives. The accident was surely a miracle. Mr. Shaffer was still in his seat holding the steering wheel. He received a slight scratch near his right eye, the son was O. K. and the wife was jammed some but not so as to stop her from performing her household duties. The top on the machine was completely demolished. The next day the machine was pulled up the bank and was ready to run at once. During the day the wind blew the old apple tree down that had stood by the roadside for years and the machine turned over exactly where this tree had been standing. Had there been some obstruction there the parties might have been seriously injured and perhaps a life lost by this accident, and yet no one to blame. Frank still has faith in his Ford machine and says that she is a regular aeroplane for turning flip-flops in the air and coming down right side up.

Letter From York, N. D.

The News is in receipt of a letter from Albert Mavis, who is well known here, as he assisted in wiring the houses here for electricity with Elmer Hart. His letter is as follows:—

"I received your paper and was glad to get it, as it seemed just like coming back to St. Joe to visit. As Father is running this western paper, I am in the office with him and know when to appreciate an editor's effort in running a good clean, newsy paper, which I will not stand back to say for the St. Joe News. As we are so far from each other I will not ask exchange but will send you an issue once in a while of "The York Citizen" of which I am the Devil. Just let your paper come right along and I will send you check for same. Hoping this finds you all well. Say Hello to everybody for me with my best regards'.

Farmers go to Purdue.

A good delegation of prominent farmers from Concord township left Sunday evening for the short course which is in progress at Purdue this week. Amoung this number were B. E. Widney, Preston Roberts, Simeon Nichols, D. L. Capenter, Darrel Carpenter and Dale Widney. Also John Ulm and F. E. Rhodes.

Twice as many would have gone had it not been for the measly measles in their homes. However we are glad to see as many go as did because their going will induce many others to go another year. Make plans to take in the short course next time without fail.

January 17th., the six weeks short course at Purdue for farmers and wives, as well as their sons and daughters begins. This is a fine thing for the young people in particular to attend. They get quite a thorough training, time considered, in home economics for the girls; stock judging, dairying, crops-soils, etc., for the boys. Anyone with a common school education may enter the course provided they are of good character. If interested write to Purdue University, Lafayette, Ind., for particulars. All instruction at Purdue is free to citizens of Indiana.

Disband Work for Winter

The work on the stone road is progressing nicely according to Superintendent Smith's statements. The ditches are completed up to the Herrick bridge, also the grading is completed ready for stone. The sewers are nearly all in and work has been disbanded for the winter. The taxpayers in the township are anxious that the road be built as good as possible, as they are put to considerable expense. The tax has been placed at 25 cts. for road work. The people in St, Joe are also anxious that the road be as good as the money will build. While they are not assessed on the township road, yet it is their desire to see our roads improved and the money expended by the farmers benefit them the most possible.

THE KITCHEN

MEAT AND EGG TOAST.

Cut some rounds of bread and fry them or toast and butter them hot. Mince finely one can of potted tongue. Put in a saucepan two eggs, one ounce of butter, salt and pepper, and two tablespoonfuls of milk. When the eggs begin to thicken, add the meat, and a tablespoonful of tomato catsup. Stir it over the fire until it is as thick as cream; pour it over the toast and serve at once.

BEAN CROQUETTES.

Take a can of baked beans, mash them, add breadcrumbs enough to make them stiff enough to mold, a little chopped onion, pepper and salt. Shape them into balls or flat cakes, egg and breadcrumb them, and fry in hot olive oil. Serve with tomato sauce and garnish with parsley.

MACARONI PUDDING.

Parboil six ounces of macaroni, and with in line a pint buttered bowl. Soak one-quarter of a pound of bread in cold water, squeeze it dry, and add one teaspoonful of parsley, one-half teaspoonful of mixed herbs, lemon peal, spice, pepper and salt, three ounces of butter and one egg, with any macaroni that may be over, cut into pieces. Fill the bowl and press it down. Cover it with buttered paper, and steam it one and one-quarter hours. Serve hot with brown sauce.

PRUNE TARTS.

Scald one-half pound of prunes, remove the stones and put the fruit and kernels into one teaspoonful of cranberry juice, add sugar to taste and simmer for ten minutes. When cold make into tarts.

BROILED HERRINGS—MUSTARD SAUCE.

Clean the herrings and cut slits in the sides from the back to the roe about a quarter of an inch apart, season with olive oil, pepper and salt, broil for about ten to fifteen minutes, serve with mustard sauce.

FILLETS OF HERRING WITH HERBS.

Take some herrings and cut them lengthwise into strips about a quarter inch wide; season them with a little salad oil, pepper and a little finely chopped raw green parsley; then arrange them across each other over the bottom of the dish on which they are to be served. Form a thick border round the edge of the dish with little bunches of chopped hard boiled white and yolk of egg, cooked beets, raw cucumber, chopped gherkin and capers.

DRIED FRUIT PUDDING.

Mix one teaspoonful of baking powder with one pound of flour, rub in four ounces of butter and add one-half pound of currants and one-half pound of raisins, the finely grated rind of a lemon, a little nutmeg and three eggs well beaten. Put it in a buttered bowl, boil or steam four hours and serve with sweet sauce.

KIPPERED HERRING.

Remove the heads and tails, pour over them a little warm butter, grill or boil for five to eight minutes; dish up on a hot dish, pour over them a little more warm butter and serve.

MOTHER HUBBARD HOUSE DRESS, DESCENDED FROM EMPIRE GOWN, STILL EXISTS IN HAWAIIAN "HOLOKU," BUT OTHERWISE IS EXTINCT.

When you slip comfortably into your negligee, do you stop to consider that this simple garment has not always existed? Do you ever wonder how it came into use all over the civilized world? Our great-grandmothers would perhaps have been considered shiftless if they had worn boudoir gowns, but times have so changed that now even the most informal details of a wardrobe are influenced by the vivid art of Leon Bakst.

What a far cry from the days of our foremothers, busy with household and dairy tasks, still practicing thrift, and considering themselves fortunate if they had a Sunday dress, to the modern woman and her elaborate wardrobe.

One of the first informal house frocks for women was the Mother Hubbard, which probably descended from the empire gown with its high waist line. This still survives in the Hawaiian "holoku," but elsewhere it soon went the way of the carpet bag and colored samplers which flourished at the same time. As leisure increased, negligees appeared—dainty fluffs of pink lawn and white lace. They were followed by an unusual development of lingerie from the plain and practical to the sheer and dainty. Knitted slippers of brown wool were discarded for satin mules, and diminity morning jackets blossomed into boudoir robes of delicate silks and satins.

While this Parisian finery was at its height Puccini's "Madama Butterfly" gave a new turn to opera and boudoirs. Orientalism spread throughout the country in the shape of satsuma, cloisonne, carved furniture, but most popularly in that of the kimono. There were inexpensive kimonos of cotton crepe and expensive kimonos of embroidered silk or padded robes of pale hues with gold embroidery.

Now the Greek influence is beginning to be felt, induced by the Bakst settings for Grecian dramas, presented by Serge de Diaghileff's Ballet Russe. Thus far in America it has confined itself to the dance and to the revival of Greek dramas and to minor dress accessories.

FRUIT AND NUT CONFECTION.

There is hardly anything more smaller proportion of figs may be gratifying to the traveler, to the boy and girl returning to school, than a box of the right sort of confections. Almost any one is willing to take what is good for them if it is agreeable to the taste. And prunes or dates stuffed with nuts are good food and also good medicine.

More agreeable yet are the mixtures of dried fruits and nuts and sugar sometimes called puddings. A square of one of these may have almost as high caloric value as a similar lump of butter, and two or three of them are equal to a good half meal as energy makers alone. This confection is also medicinal, if it has been prepared in a sanitary way, as it can be so easily at home.

Chopped Fruit and Nut Loaf.

Scald or wash thoroughly one-fourth pound of dates and remove the stones by pushing them out with the fingers. Scald and drain one-fourth pound of figs, drain and cut off stems and any discolored parts. A used since they predominate in flavor. Pick over and scald one-fourth pound of seedless raisins or better of seeded raisins. Put these three in a chopping bowl and sprinkle over them a tablespoon of granulated sugar and chop. Some people use the food chopper when preparing this confection. When chopped sufficiently add a small quantity of any preferred nut, each kernel cut in three or four pieces. Knead the whole, adding the sugar needed to bind. Four tablespoons is about enough for this quantity. Press into a small square mold of a size to have the loaf one inch thick or a little more. Let stand several hours, then cut in squares, turn in a little sugar if the squares are to stand, and wrap each separately if you choose. A softened fondant may be used instead of sugar.

OYSTERS HORS D'OEUVRES.

Great cooks give recipes for cooking oysters, but Escoffier says: "I have given them merely because consumers and caterers alike may wish to have them; but the real and best way of serving oysters is to send them to the table raw." This famous cook does not believe in appetizers for dinners, but of oysters he says: "With the exception of caviare, they are the only hors d'oeuvres which should ever appear on the menu of a well ordered dinner. . . . Send some slices of brown bread and butter to the table with the oysters."

It is hard or impossible to find a recipe for oyster cocktail in the book of any famous chef. These men know the value of the oyster juice, and it is something that eaters should know more about than they do, and especially know when they get it and when they do not. They do not when the oysters have been treated, that is, when their shells have been opened and a water solution has been put in to replace the organic water, really alive water, that has evaporated. Of course, this is another one of the things that makes an oyster less safe as food.

One of two people who sat down at the table where I was eating lunch the other day ordered raw oysters, and made the remark that she wanted something very nourishing when she was going to spend a half day shopping. I wanted to tell her that she would not get it in oysters.

It is probably generous to the oyster to say that it takes fourteen of them to equal in nourishment one egg. One scientist allows twelve for five grams of nourishment, and remember that it takes twenty-eight grams to an ounce.

WINTER SPINACH.

The abundant cellulose of spinach makes it a valuable "stomach broom." Its high mineral content makes it valuable medicinally in nine or ten different ways. It has iron necessary for the blood corpuscles, soda and other salts for alkalinizing the blood, lime for the bones, and material for various subtle uses.

All these things are absorbed more freely from foods than when given as medicines.

Pick over and trim spinach. Since some plants are very muddy it is best to dip each separately in water frequently changed or to hold each under the faucet. It is harder to wash out mud scattered through the whole than to get it out in this way. Wash the whole several times and drain a minute in a colander. Put half a peck in a four quart aluminum kettle with a hermetically sealed cover with no water except that which adheres to it after the washing and cook or steam over not too much fire for six minutes. Add about two tablespoons of butter when it is put to cook. With a wooden spoon turn and break this up and dry out any water if necessary. If it is to be used for soup it is not necessary to dry out the water, but simply add hot milk, a pint for this amount and some vegetable flavor like onion juice if you think it necessary. The mild soup without it is excellent for an invalid and the milk and spinach need no more than five minutes cooking together with some added butter, the whole finally strained. For imitation sorrel add the juice of one lemon to this amount of spinach. This spinach is brilliant green, never bitter and contains all its mineral matter.

IN DARKEST RUSSIA.

Advertising Methods Even in Great Cities Are Crude.

In a recent consular report on advertising in Russia it is stated that this art is at a very low point in the dominion of the czar, the Wall Street Journal observes. It is only in the largest cities that any use is made of modern advertising methods and in many instances these are rather crudely carried out. Newspaper advertising secures but little publicity, as the papers are very limited in circulation. The number of newspapers and periodicals has increased materially in the last few years, but the readers are still quite limited. Altogether there are about 2,000 periodicals published in Russia, of which 850 are political, 225 religious, 130 medical, 186 agricultural and 140 deal with trade and industry. About 1,585 of these are published in Russian, 234 in Polish, 65 in German, 47 in Lettish, 45 in Esthonian, 31 in Hebrew, 6 in French and others in Chinese, Mongol, etc. In the polyglot periodicals German, French and English articles appear occasionally.

FUR DECORATIONS ARE MADE MOST EFFECTIVE.

Fur is frequently introduced as a trimming detail, and several effective schemes are being carried out with a combination of crepe and skunk. A charming example is a blouse of the palest of pale pink chiffon with veiled fine ivory shadow lace arranged to fall in a little basque movement over a deep belt of black panne, tiny black dots trimming the V-shaped neck opening and sleeves, which are furthermore adorned by ruffles of fine net. The distinctive feature is a little bolero of old gold mousseline de soie, the edges bordered by a finger depth of skunk fur, the fronts just caught together by a cameo brooch.

One New Yorker wishes to know the attitude of the suffragette toward the mistletoe. This is nothing to inquire about. The way to know is to find out.

HORSE FLESH MAY LOWER LIVING COST.

New York has Officially Placed Equine Meat on a European Basis.

Horse meat as an article of food was officially admitted into New York city by the health department the other day, according to the New York Tribune. Health Commissioner Emerson says the action is a direct blow at the high cost of living.

"We have had this in view ever inarian, made a trip of inspection abroad shortly after the beginning of the war," says Dr. Emerson. "When he returned he reported that in Brussels a high quality of horse meat was selling at slightly higher prices than Argentine beef. In Paris, he said, from 150 to 200 horses were consumed every day, much to the advantage of the civil population.

"We have adopted this measure in New York because we believe we will be able to make provision for an inexpensive meat food. There are many advantages in the use of horse meat. A horse never has tuberculosis and is generally so free from disease as to need much less supervision than cattle, hogs or sheep. There is no sanitary or medical reason why horse flesh should not be eaten. They say an American will never eat it, but that is no reason why it should not be eaten, and while the department does not recommend its use as a food it now removes all objections to its being so used. Horse meat may become an invaluable element in soups and sausages. Our alien population, who have already become accustomed to its use in their native countries, will probably lead off with it as an article of daily food here."

The new measure was passed at a meeting for a revision of the sanitary code, and an amendment was adopted permitting the slaughter of horses for food purposes. It permits the killing of horses under the same restrictions that now apply to cattle, sheep and hogs, and the sale will be governed so as to prevent the substitution of horse meat for other kinds.

After the first of the year the department thinks there may be a small amount of the meat on the market, but some experts declare that the present prices prevailing in the horse market will discourage any great attempt at substitution.

"ALL BLONDS EAT CHEESE."

Lunch Counter Girl Announces Result of Three Years' Study.

Are you a cheese eater?

Do you eat your noonday wedge of mince or apple with or without?

If it is "with," it is a 10 to 1 bet that you are a blond, for all blonds eat cheese, according to one of the Marie Antoinette counter girls in a Boston restaurant, the Globe of that city states.

This counter girl, besides being an expert manipulator of the hot and cold coffee and master of the mazes of electric order buttons, is a close observer and psychologist.

She says that after three years of close comparison of those who patronize her counter she has reached the conclusion that cheese is the preference of blonds. A few dark skinned and pirate like men may use cheese, but the blonds all partake, and she suspects that a brunette who asks for the "with" when ordering pie either has a blond strain or a fair haired sweetheart.

CHANGES IN FASHION WILL NOT BE MARKED.

Picot edged velour hats to match the popular sweater are to be had. They come in all the bright hues and are most attractive, says the Detroit Free Press.

Blue and Burgundy, it is predicted, will hold their own for spring. These colors have been well received and it will be difficult to give up the dull, warm reds that have brightened the wearing apparel of women this winter. Another prediction of spring is that printed crepes will be much in demand for linings. Boleros which have appeared for the young girl's winter suit as a relief for the long coated suits is another model that will be much worn for spring.

And while on the subject of spring it is of interest to hear that cretonne for trimming cuffs and collars will be considered smart. Rodier is showing wonderful cretonnes that have been inspired by the orient, for figures of Chinese and Japanese are to be found and amid the foliage of oriental scenes.

In the early fall Callot showed a suit that had a knitted sweater under the jacket, and since then there has been an added interest in anything that is knitted.

SPEEDS UP PLANTS' GROWTH.

Scientist Expects Discovery to Make British Peat Lands Fertile.

London, England.—Seventy-two cucumbers, weighing a pound each, recently were cut from eighteen plants after a twenty days' growth and sold in Covent Garden market before those grown in the ordinary way were ready to cut; also sixteen pounds of tomatoes taken from one tomato plant. Both cucumbers and tomatoes had been treated with an extract of bacterized peat, recently discovered by Prof. W. B. Bottomley.

A few weeks ago four potatoes were planted in moss in a box sixteen inches long, six inches wide and four inches deep. The moss was watered once a week with an extract from the bacterized peat. After eight weeks' growth the box was full of fine, new potatoes. A pelargonium grown at Kew gardens, treated in the same way, more than doubled its size as compared with another pelargonium grown in the ordinary way.

The bacterized peat is the result of experiments on the part of Prof. Bottomley to increase plant growth by inoculating the soil with the culture of bacteria obtained from the root nodules of leguminous plants. It was found that in soil so treated more nodules were produced on the roots, and that the nitrogenous material in the earth was greatly increased. If the cultures contained humus—that is to say the black decaying matter that is found in the soil—they did better still. Finally, the professor discovered a source of soluble humus in peat. He found that by treating peat with special bacteria it was rendered soluble and formed an excellent medium for the growth of nitrogenfixation organisms.

According to the professor there are thousands of acres of poor land which would produce plentifully if provided with plant food. In Yorkshire, in Somersetshire, in Devonshire and in Ireland there are acres and acres of peat now practically useless which by bacterial treatment could be converted into a rich manure, capable at least of doubling the productiveness of the soil. And there is no reason why wheat, treated bacterially, should not show as good results as vegetables. The British government has made a grant to King's college for further investigation and experiment in connection with this discovery.

Prophecies, forecasts and predictions for 1916 are already on the market, but the world war is not likely to pay any attention to them.

It has been 700 years since King John signed Magna Charta, but humanity does not appear to have improved 700 years' worth on that immortal document.

ECONOMICAL TRIPE.

No Closed Season for Food—Cheaper Than Beef or Chicken.

The head of a housewives' league in the middle west recommends tripe for lowering the high cost of living. She says tripe costs half as much as beef for boiling, about one-third as much as lamb chops and a quarter as much as porterhouse steak—after considering the weight of the bone, She might have gone further, according to a letter to the editor of the New York Sun, and said the price of tripe, weight for weight, was less than one-fifteenth that of quail, about one-twentieth that of partridge and not far from one-fortieth that of woodcock, when these articles of household supply are in season. There is no closed season for tripe.

Tripe looks like a connecting link between an edible and a textile. Ineed, while in preparation for cooking it closely resembles an irregularly defined section of a bath towel. Its appearance suggests also that a large piece of it might be used as a vestibule rug in snowy weather. Its preparation for the kitchen range is not unlike the early stages of laundering. It is soaked, scrubbed, wrung and dried. Here the parallel ends, for tripe is not starched, sprinkled and ironed.

Those who have learned to appreciate the good qualities of tripe as food hold it in high esteem. It is nutritious and may be partaken of freely without fear of injurious consequences. It is easily prepared for the table—after it has been made ready for the range. It has no bones. So greatly is it valued by tripe lovers that they swear, sacredly and never profanely, by it as when they give fervid utterance to the exclamation "For the love of tripe!"

Tripe is largely a home dish. Chefs insist on using elaborate formulas in its preparation, so that the partaker used to good stewed tripe is at a loss to decide what manner of pudding is set before him. Again, tripe prepared by the highly professional chef cannot compare as a spectacular dish with a vividly scarlet obster embellished with decorations of bright yellow and green. Few patrons of the lobster palaces order tripe.

Truth there is and there is good sense in all that the middle west housewife says about tripe. The recommendation as to economy may increase the number of tripe eaters, and many of them may become tripe lovers. The multitudes who already knew tripe and gave no thought to its comparative cheapness would insist upon having it at whatever reasonable price.

DESTRUCTABLE PAPER MENACE TO RECORDS

Practically All Printed Matter Will Have Perished in a Few Centuries

NEWSPAPERS SHORTLIVED

Library of Congress Takes Minute Care of the Files of One Publication From 1801 On

By Frederic J. Haskin.

If some archaeologist were to dig up the remains of our big cities in the year 500 A. D., he would come to the conclusion that the American people had no literature except diplomatic and other governmental records.

The government not long ago awoke to the fact that its older records were rotting, and that its whole history would pass into oblivion if not more durably recorded. The bureau of standards was forthwith set to work to perfect a paper as nearly indestructible as possible. With the exception of the government records printed on this paper, there is nothing in our immense product of the press that will survive a few centuries, and little that will last more than a few years. All our newspapers, all our novels, all our classics in poetry and prose will have crumbled to dust. The archaeologist might find a few parchments and vellums dating back to the year 1000, but the paper of the twentieth century is not made to last.

Novel Lasts Forty Issues.

When newspaper files only forty and fifty years old are opened in public libraries, the sheets are found yellow and brittle. They break at a touch. Librarians report that the ordinary novel, printed on wood pulp paper will stand only about forty issues. Thus its life is less than two years.

Books printed on the better grades of paper will last longer, but only relatively speaking. When a few centuries have passed over they will be indistinguishable from their humbler brethren. All this is in striking contrast to the literature of ancient peoples, which was traced on imperishable parchment, and unless lost or destroyed entirely comes down to us in a permanent record of what men thought and felt 3,000 years ago.

The British museum has an Egyptian parchment dating back 3,400 years—and the Egyptians did much of their writing on even more imperishable stone. Parchments and vellums a thousand years old are common in collections. The middle ages did all their writing on such material and in consequence we have a record of their most trivial activities. The old Hebrew laws were traced on parchment long before the birth of Christ, and it is a tradition in the Jewish church that the more important laws must be kept on parchment today.

Arabian Paper Lasts 1,000 Years.

Parchment is made of carefully prepared sheep or calf skin, and thus is naturally durable. Even the old time papers, however, were made to last. Museums have documents on Arabian paper 1,000 years old and others of European origin that date back to 700 and 800 A. D. In those times there were few books, but they were very precious, and men felt that their value would endure for all time. They spared no effort in tracing them on imperishable backgrounds.

Today one of the big New York newspapers throws 200,000 copies on the streets at a single edition. An hour or two later those tons of closely printed paper are absolutely valueless, except as waste. In point of timeliness they are deader than the Pharaohs. There is nothing so out of date and out of demand as the first edition of a big paper when the newsboys begin to call the second.

Such being the case, it is just as well that all our paper is not designed to last for a score of centuries. But no records of our times would be so accurate and so valuable to future ages as would a complete file of our typical dailies. Librarians keep careful files, but most of the papers crumble away before the end of the first century. An effort was made recently by an association of public libraries to induce several of the more important newspapers to print daily a special edition on a high grade of paper for the benefit of future ages. A few of the papers fell in with the plan for a time, but the practice never got beyond the experimental stage.

How U. S. Keeps Newspaper Files.

It is claimed that improper storage conditions are responsible for much of the quick deterioration of newspaper files. At the library of congress are kept the oldest files on the American continent, some of them dating back to the last years of the eighteenth century. The complete files of a New York evening paper, from the year 1801 down to date, are preserved in this library. The papers are sealed in dust-proof cases, and the room where they stand is kept clean as a hospital to discourage the thriving of insects, of which there is a large family that delight in the destruction of books. The temperature of the room is kept constant, and the very air that is allowed to blow over the old papers at certain times must be washed and screened before it is admitted. Such precautions in themselves show how perishable a newspaper is.

It is interesting to note that, bought by the government in quantities of several hundred tons at a time, the indestructible paper is only two or three times as expensive as the ordinary grades. There seems to be no reason why the best of our literature should not be put forth in occasional editions designed for the reading of ages yet to come. Ordinary printers' ink will stand clear for thousands of years if only the paper is the right sort.

Meanwhile, though our paper may be an ephemeral product, we are using more of it every day. The volume of books and newspapers printed grows by leaps and bounds. A single Sunday edition uses as much paper as one of the typical periodicals of a century ago used in a year. The pulp mills are chewing deeper and deeper into our forests. Wood is used for pulp today that the manufacturers would have laughed at ten years ago. The manufacturing cost of hemlock pulp, which is one of the best varieties, has doubled in the last fifteen years. The price of paper in the future presents a problem.

Substitute for Wood Pulp.

Experiments are being made with all sorts of plants and grasses in the attempt to find a substitute for wood as the basis for cheap papers. (The best grades, such as the government's permanent record, are made from linen rags.) Bamboos and rice straw are being worked on in southern China; Manchuria is trying to make paper out of the stalks of the grain sorghums; Egypt has gone back to pre-biblical precedents and is experimenting with the plants of the upper Nile jungles, that are rich in papyrus. The Philippine islands are attempting to utilize the waste products of the Manila hemp industry in paper making, as well as bamboos and island grasses. Esparto grass is a well known source of paper. The bureau of plant industry is continually experimenting with new plants and grasses.

The division of the bureau in charge of paper plant investigation, under the direction of Mr. C. J. Brand, has just discovered an apparently practicable source of paper in the zacaton grass of Mexico and the southwest. Paper made from the zacaton grass is a good grade of machine finish printing paper, the sort generally used in the better class of popular novels and text books. Zacaton grows freely in central Mexico, and the southern republic will probably be making paper from it long before the United States is forced to its use.

Waste Wood as Supply.

The consumption of wood for pulping has gone up 80 per cent in the last five years, yet only 7 per cent of the immense amount of wood used for pulp today is waste wood from lumbering operations. It is claimed that waste from the yellow pine and jack pine forests of the south could supply pulp for that whole section for years. The great pulp resources of the western forests are scarcely touched, because they are too far from the mills and the markets.

Alaska presents vast stretches of virgin timber, much of which is unfit for anything but paper making. Through these Alaskan forests flow great rivers, whose water power could be used to make pulp on the spot. Here again the case is one of being too far from the market, but it is only a question of a high enough price for the product, and an Alaskan pulp industry would prove a paying investment. Thus each rise in the price of paper throws open the door to a new source of raw material.

The only war development in the paper situation, comes in the high price of bleaching powder which is used to whiten the paper in certain processes of manufacture. Bleaching powder has gone up about 400 per cent, in spite of the fact that most of it is a domestic product. It is said that paper manufacturers find a ready market in Europe for their reserve stocks of this material because it is rich in chlorine. Chlorine is the basis and active principle of the poison gases which are the newest development in warfare.

Imports from Canada.

The United States imports considerable raw material for paper making, but this trade has not been interfered with by the war to any extent. The imports are either in the form of wood or pulp. The wood comes almost entirely from Canada, and the pulp from Norway and Sweden, where a combination of small forest growth and cheap water power gives a chance to manufacture pulp for export.

The mechanical side of paper making bids fair to be revolutionized by a modification of the Fourdrinier machine for making news print paper. This machine, it is said, will double the capacity of a mill, by turning out news print paper at the rate of 1,000 feet a minute, where 500 was formerly considered a high speed.

NATIONS FEEL DRAIN OF THE TRENCHES

France's Policy Now to Lessen the Attacks and Conserve the Lives of Men

COLONIALS WILL BE USED

Natality Figures Are a Serious Problem English Promise 4,000,000 Welcome Relief

Paris, France.—[Special Correspondence.]—After sixteen months of war the heavy losses sustained by the combatants have reduced the effective forces to such an extent that those who preside over the destinies of nations are forced to give the question serious thought. Telegrams announce that the insufficiency of troops is beginning to be felt on the German side in Russia. The difference between the German and Russian forces will be greater still in the spring, for the latter so far have called up only one-third of their men fit for service.

France, either as a simple precaution or because it is necessary, is beginning to adopt extreme measures. First the Dalbiez law was voted; then the incorporation of the 1917 class (young men of 18 and 19 years) has been set for the 15th of next month. And before long the 1887 and 1888 classes composed of men of 47 to 48 years, will be called.

May Have to Change Law.

There is, however, a possibility of changing the Dalbiez law, which was judged definitive three months ago. The object of this law is to establish once for all, the duties of the men who are mobilized or fit to be mobilized. This law has brought before the army doctors men already occupied in the auxiliary services or men hitherto declared unfit for service. As a result of these visits to the doctors many men have been sent to the front.

Women and feeble men are gradually replacing the men in the sedentary services that are capable of bearing arms. And those whose duty it is to increase the effective forces of the army have shown such wonderful zeal that men weighing only 110 pounds, or afflicted with real infirmities, have been incorporated. There is evident abuse and the author of the Dalbiez law himself has called attention to it. He writes on the subject:

"To decide to send to the firing line, last July, the 1916 class and prepare the 1917 class for its entry into the field in October, 1915, was madness. It showed the lack of attention given to the study of the question of effective forces, which, in a wearing down war, will have a decisive influence on the issue of the struggle. They who are in position to place their reserves in the field when the enemy's reserves are exhausted will win the victory, or, at least, gain the advantage.

Aim to Save Soldiers' Lives.

"The salvation of the country demands that a soldier's life shall not be sacrificed uselessly. Local attacks, no matter how glorious, are, after all, simply partial defeats, for they entail the loss of men. Better preserve a soldier's life than take part of a trench."

And the author of the law adds: "We have entire confidence in the firmness of the minister of war to obtain the full benefit of the law without restriction or abuse of its power."

All men capable of carrying a rifle who are still occupied in the services in the rear (officers included) are pitilessly pursued, which is a wise measure. But in hope of assisting the official authorities a league has been formed under the promising name of "the League Against the Embusques." ("Embusque" is a term applied to a soldier fit for active service who has got himself appointed to one of the rear services to escape service at the front.) This has a bad effect, for it encourages public accusation. And it is not necessary for the foreigner to know that some Frenchmen seek to escape their duty, especially when the foreigner has been repeatedly informed of the unanimity of the nation bent on conquering.

In this new man hunt the most relentless hunter is generally the happy bourgeois whose age releases him from military obligations. He is encouraged by certain prejudiced publicists who have passed their lives preaching hatred for the German, and who today, on one pretext or another, prudently keep themselves in the background.

French Infantry to Be Extinct?

With the resources the allies possess they must even now see the outline of victory though it is still far off. A war of wear and tear is trying for all who participate in it. Up to the present the scarcity has not been in the effective forces, but in men of talent. These exist in France, but they are not in their right places, nor have they any chance of ever being there. An English officer recently said to a friend of mine:

"In a year from now your artillery, already formidable, will be even more powerful. As to your infantry, it will be extinct and ours, which we shall have created by then, will take its place."

When one considers the size of the nation represented by the "infantry extinct" one must admit that this is cheapening life too much. France is not rich enough in men to use them as so many bags of earth.

Warning in Natality Statistics.

The recent statistics on natality are a serious warning in this respect. These statistics cover only seventy-seven departments of France (the remaining ten being occupied partly or wholly by the enemy). They are for 1914 and so take into account the first victims of the war. In the seventy-seven departments the number of deaths exceeds by 53,327 the number of births. The births themselves show a reduction of 10,232 from those of 1913. Thus at the end of 1914 France had lost 53,327 citizens.

The number of marriages in 1914 was 169,011, 78,742 fewer than those of 1913, which represented 247,753. The number of divorces also shows a considerable decrease. And, a circumstance due certainly to the war, there has been a notable increase in the legal acknowledgment of natural children.

The first five months of the war, with their heavy death roll, weigh on these statistics, which, while only partial, are yet redoubtably significant. The question of natality may become as important for France as the question of victory in the present war. This is why at present it is France's right and duty to spare the blood of her sons, after having, for sixteen months, been so prodigiously generous.

Conscription for Colonies.

And this sentiment is spreading everywhere. A vigorous campaign is made in favor of the recruitment of the colonial troops, as this would furnish at least 600,000 men to France in a few months. Military conscription is even now in operation in Senegal and the French officers of the auxiliary services are to train the new black troops.

England, through Lord Kitchener, announces that she will have 4,000,000 men under arms next spring, and will be in position to furnish supplies to 6,000,000 Russians. This good news will find a joyous echo in France, more than anywhere else. I believe the people of France would be still more pleased with England if she were to adopt compulsory military service, a measure that diverse reasons may compel her to take.

The allies will have sufficient effective forces for some time. But can France, which, in proportion to her population, has so far made the greatest effort, continue much longer to keep imposing armies in the field without having to seek her soldiers in her hospitals and nurseries?

CHICKEN SHOWER ON PIER.

Happily Captain's Remarks Are in Greek When Coops Smash.

Twelve crates containing hundreds of chickens were being hoisted aboard the Greek steamship Filomachi in Hoboken when the edges of the crates were opened by crashing against the boom, the New York Herald states. The chickens, forty feet in the air, flew in all directions, and for a half hour the water front was a scene of remarkable activity. The remarks of the captain of the Filomachi, who was standing on the bridge, fortunately were in Greek.

As the liberated chickens, flying in the uncertain, hesitating manner peculiar to them, volplaned toward the throngs of Sunday idlers about the piers there was a sudden and concerted evidence of agility. Fights started every time a chicken got within reaching distance of the pier,

ARE THE AMERICANS MEAN AND SELFISH

The View Point From Many Angles is Not Considered as Very Flattering

INJUSTICE VS. APPRECIATION

A Newspaper Writer Very Aptly Portrays the Peculiar Situation Resulting.

(The following article was written by the editor of the Milwaukee Journal.)

In Europe, according to Editor Harvey of The North American Review, "there is real bitterness against the present administration (Washington)." The allies "feel over there that they are fighting our battle and getting no support. The whole viewpoint is sized up in a paragraph I read in a Manchester newspaper. It declared that 'with Wilson it is better to be inhuman than illegal.' "

We know that America and America's government are not popular in Europe; we know that we are cordially hated by both sides because of our neutrality. We know, too, that we should become very popular on either side with which we might line up. As it is, we are regarded as mean, selfish bystanders and are given no credit whatsoever for the regret and sympathy that we feel for all the war-ridden peoples of the old world. Thus we find in a Sydney (Australia) newspaper the following bit of doggerel:

"They may talk o' eagles screamin'
  And the glory o' the Yank,
But of scrap he's never dreamin'
  So it's only gol darn swank,
He guesses some each morning,
  And he calculates at night;
He's something big at fawning,
  When the dollars are in sight.

He's a cross-bred Dago Yankee,
  A Noo York Port-a-gee,
Right smart and awful swanky
  Since the old men spilled the tea.
But he ain't done no shootin'
  Since the Junkers drowned his kids,
And folks think 'e wants bottin'
  Cos he held his hand for quids.

He's a gol darn,
He's a gol darn,
But 'e ain't what we call white.

He's a gol darn,
He's a gol darn,
He's a gol darn Yankee skite."

On the other hand, The Berliner Tageblatt recently said:

"Above all, American industry has 'passionately' taken sides in this war—with passionate dollar hunger. There, also, President Wilson has looked on quietly."

"Europe, peopled though it be with graves and ruined hearths, will stand an infinitely better chance of speedy spiritual recuperation after the purge of war, than this fair land—smug, fat, unscathed—after its material debauch in a traffic that kills the soul."

No doubt we Americans, as a people, have our faults. We ourselves see these faults, see them quite clearly, but we are conscious likewise of being imbued with ideals and of possessing, in fair measure, human virtues. Hence it is a relief to turn from bitter and unjust attacks upon us as a nation and as a people and read what men of fine feeling, keen discernment and just spirit say of us. In our opinion not many will deny that Cardinal Mercier, the heroic and venerable primate of Belgium, is such a man. In his public acknowledgment of what America and Americans have done for the suffering people of Belgium, a statement issued only a few days ago, Cardinal Mercier anoints the wounds inflicted upon us by the shafts and barbs of hostile critics who would rise up and call us glorious if only we should espouse the cause in which they believe. Note the Belgian cardinal's words as he pours out his heart to us:

"You Americans * * * know how to hide your liberalities under anonymous veils and how to distribute them through hands as delicate as they are discreet. Interpreter of the feelings of the Belgian population, we thank you as much and more for your way of giving as for the gifts themselves. May I add that one of the greatest benefits for which we shall feel eternally indebted to the American people will be the fixing on America of the admiring attention of the Belgians. The Belgian people have learned to know you well, to look at you in a beautiful light, to feel to some extent what they would gain in following your footsteps."

AN AUTHOR TURNED ACTOR.

Most Unusual Part was Played by Jules Eckert Goodman.

Jules Eckert Goodman, otherwise known as the dramatizer of "Treasure Island," has achieved fame at last, according to the New York Telegram. He has gratified his lifelong ambition and appeared in his play as an actor. The big event came off at Mount Vernon, his home town, during the tryout of "Treasure Island." Goodman had been kept in ignorance of the method by which the remarkable wave scene was obtained when the good ship Hispaniola is cut adrift by little Jim Hawkins, so on the memorable evening the author slipped in back of the scenes and stood watching the workmen getting the "set" ready for the ocean. Goodman shrank back suddenly into a dark recess of the stage when he noted the approach of the stage manager. The manager eyed the slouching figure a moment and then seized him roughly by the shoulder.

"Here, you," the director said, "get under that green canvas and shake the cloth like a wave."

A few minutes later Goodman rejoined his friends out in front.

"Did you see me?" he demanded eagerly. "I've been acting. I was a wave."

Though it may be a brutal thing to say, the fact remains that the Pullman company can scarcely hope to secure a reputation for generosity by increasing the pay of its sleeping car porters 10 per cent.

Mrs. L. W. STEWARD, Spencerville, Indiana.

Just now, hundreds o young men are dying in trenches and hospitals, "civilized warfare's" toll of the first fruits of European manhood; just now, property is being destroyed and helpless childhood and equally helpless old age face destitution and death; just now, murder is being committed; just now, heartless avarice is oppressing the poor; just now, divines preach right living and practice sin in secret; just now, man is planning to rob his neighbor; just now, one man is "filching another's good name"; just now, the executioner is performing his grewsome duty; just now, poor wretches in death cells await the explation of their offenses against the law; just now, the door of the prison swings inward to admit a convicted thief; just now, every law, divine or human, is being violated; just now, every excess that lust can devise or depravity can think of is being practiced; just now, the pavements that lead to hell are being ground to dust by the tread of millions of feet; just now, the pessimist looks out upon a world that is growing worse every minute.

But—

Just now, the world is getting better every day, notwithstanding the mournful claim of the pessimist; just now, millions of men oppose war and advocate arbitration, an advance from the days when warfare was considered man's noblest calling; just now, man is becoming more enlightened and consequently more humane, for enlightenment gives him a broader conception of life and enables him to see and feel for the misfortunes of others; just now, philanthropy is building hospitals and founding libraries; just now, criminologists are studying how to reform rather than punish; just now, unfortunates are better cared for than ever before in the history of the world; just now, people are becoming more Christlike, a fact that is proven by public benefactions; just now, better men proclaim the word than in the days when Peter Cartwright, the militant preacher, refused to sleep under the same roof with two tipsy clerical brethren and forcibly ejected them; just now, God continues to strive with men and He can not fail.

But—

Just now, children are being born who will be taught to despise virtue and respect sin; just now, a pig is being born that will be given better care than the child.

Last Tuesday while James and Wm. As they are both up in years the fall has injured them considerable, although Wm. is injured internally and suffers considerable. The matter of care for them has been taken up by authorities and an effort will be made to carry out their plans.

This week will bring forth many new candidates who have not as yet made public their intentions of being candidates for county offices.

THE CHIEF LEGATEE

by ANNA KATHERINE GREEN.

AUTHOR OF "THE LEAVENWORTH CASE," "BEHIND CLOSED DOORS" ETC.

FOREWORD.

Shifting from New York City to the little Connecticut town of Sitford, the main thread of THE CHIEF LEGATEE is there unwound through a multitude of perplexing personalities and amazing phases. You come to believe and then disbelieve in Mrs. Ransom's suicidal plunge into the Devil's Cauldron; you believe and then disbelieve that Mrs. Ransom's deaf twin sister, Anitra Hazen, is really Mrs. Ransom herself; you are disgusted by the apparent utter selfishness and brutality of Alfred Hazen, and then astounded by evidences of his bravery and complete unselfishness; you admire the affection of Roger Ransom for his wife, and his loyal determination not to believe her lost to him so long as there is the slightest sign of hope; you are enmeshed in doubt by signs which on one day clearly point to certain conclusions, and then on the next day puzzled more than ever by other equally reliable signs which point the reverse way. The ending of the story is satisfactory enough, but the writer of this foreword is free to say that, if he had prepared the last chapter, he would have made a still more satisfactory conclusion, in his judgment, by simply destroying the will made in favor of the unknown Auchincloss, thus depriving The Cause of chance either to do harm to anyone or to acquire an unmerited fortune.

CHAPTER I.

A Bride of Five Hours.

WHAT'S up?" This from the manager of the Hotel —— to his chief clerk. "Something wrong in Room 81?"

"Yes, sir. I've just sent for a detective. You were not to be found and the gentleman is desperate. But very anxious to have it all kept quiet; very anxious. I think we can oblige him there, or, at least, we'll try. Am I right, sir?"

"Of course, if—"

"Oh! it's nothing criminal. The lady's missing, that's all; the lady whose name you see here."

The register lay open between them; the clerk's finger, running along the column, rested about half-way down.

The manager bent over the page.

"'Roger J. Ransom and wife,'" he read out in decided astonishment. "Why, they are—"

"You're right. Married to-day in Grace Church. A great wedding; the papers are full of it. Well, she's the lady. They registered here a few minutes before five o'clock and in ten minutes the bride was missing. It's a queer story Mr. Ransom tells. You'd better hear it. Ah, there's our man! Perhaps you'll go up with him."

"You may bet your last dollar on that," muttered the manager. And joining the newcomer, he made a significant gesture which was all that passed between them till they stepped out on the second floor.

"Wanted in Room 81?" the manager now asked.

"Yes, by a man named Ransom."

"Just so. That's the door. Knock —or, rather, I'll knock, for I must hear his story as soon as you do. The reputation of the hotel—"

"Yes, yes, but the gentleman's waiting. Ah! that's better."

The manager had just knocked.

An exclamation from within, a hurried step, and the door fell open. The figure which met their eyes was startling. Distress, anxiety, and an impatience almost verging on frenzy, distorted features naturally amiable if not handsome.

"My wife," fell in a gasp from his writhing lips.

"We have come to help you find her," Mr. Gerridge calmly assured him. Mr. Gerridge was the detective. "Relate the circumstances, sir. Tell us where you were when you first missed her."

Mr. Ransom's glance wandered past him to the door. It was partly open. The manager, whose name was Loomis, hastily closed it. Mr. Ransom showed relief and hurried into his story. It was to this effect:

"I was married to-day in Grace Church. At the altar my bride—you probably know her name, Miss Georgian Hazen—wore a natural look, and was in all respects, so far as any one could see, a happy woman, satisfied with her choice and pleased with the eclat and elegancies of the occasion. Half-way down the aisle this all changed. I remember the instant perfectly. Her hand was on my arm and I felt it suddenly stiffen. I was not alarmed, but I gave her a quick look and saw that something had happened. What, I could not at the moment determine. She didn't answer when I spoke to her and seemed to be mainly concerned in getting out of the church before her emotions overcame her. This she succeeded in doing with my help; and, once in the vestibule, recovered herself so completely, and met all my inquiries with such a gay shrug of the shoulders, that I should have passed the matter over as a mere attack of nerves, if I had not afterwards detected in her face, through all the hurry and excitement of the ensuing reception, a strained expression not at all natural to her. This was still more evident after the congratulations of a certain guest, who, I am sure, whispered to her before he passed on; and when the time came for her to go up-stairs she was so pale and unlike herself that I became seriously alarmed and asked if she felt well enough to start upon the journey we had meditated. Instantly her manner changed. She turned upon me with a look I have been trying ever since to explain to myself, and begged me not to take her out of town to-night but to some quiet hotel where we might rest for a few days before starting on our travels. She looked me squarely in the eye as she made this request and, seeing in her nothing more than a feverish anxiety lest I should make difficulties of some kind, I promised to do what she asked and bade her run away and get herself ready to go and say nothing to any one of our change of plan. She smiled and turned away towards her own room, but presently came hurrying back to ask if I would grant her one more favor. Would I be so good as not to speak to her or expect her to speak to me till we got to the hotel; she was feeling very nervous but was sure that a few minutes of complete rest would entirely restore her; something had occurred (she acknowledged this) which she wanted to think out; would not I grant her this one opportunity of doing so? It was a startling request, but she looked so lovely—pardon me, I must explain my easy acquiescence—that I gave her the assurance she wished and went about my own preparations, somewhat disconcerted but still not at all prepared for what happened afterward. I had absolutely no idea that she meant to leave me."

Mr. Ransom paused, greatly affected; but upon the detective asking him how and when Mrs. Ransom had deserted him, he controlled himself sufficiently to say:

"Here; immediately after that silent and unnatural ride. She entered the office with me and was standing close at my side all the time I was writing our names in the register; but later, when I turned to ask her to enter the elevator with me, she was gone, and the boy who was standing by with our two bags said that she had slipped into the reception-room across the hall. But I didn't find her there or in any of the adjoining rooms. Nor has anybody since succeeded in finding her. She has left the building—left me, and—"

"You want her back again?"

This from the detective, but very dryly.

"Yes. For she was not following her own inclinations in thus abandoning me so soon after the words which made us one were spoken. Some influence was brought to bear on her which she felt unable to resist. I have confidence enough in her to believe that. The rest is mystery—a mystery which I am forced to ask you to untangle. I have neither the necessary calmness nor experience myself."

"But you surely have done something," protested Gerridge. "Telephoned to her late home or—"

"Oh, yes, I have done all that, but with no result. She has not returned to her old home. Her uncle has just been here and he is as much mystified by the whole occurrence as I am. He could tell me nothing, absolutely nothing."

"Indeed! and the man, the one who whispered to her during the reception, couldn't you learn anything about him?"

Mr. Ransom's face took on an expression almost ferocious.

"No. He's a stranger to Mr. Fulton; Mr. Fulton's niece introduced him to me as a relative."

"A relative? When was that?"

"At the reception. He was introduced as Mr. Hazen (my wife's maiden name, you know), and when I saw how his presence disturbed her, I said to her, 'A cousin of yours?' and she answered with very evident embarrassment, 'A relative;'—which you must acknowledge didn't locate him very definitely. Mr. Fulton doesn't know of any such relative. And I don't believe he is a relative. He didn't sit with the rest of the family in the church."

"Ah! you saw him in the church."

"Yes. I noticed him for two reasons. First, because he occupied an end seat and so came directly under my eye in our passage down the aisle. Secondly, because his face of all those which confronted me when I looked for the cause of her sudden agitation was the only one not turned towards her in curiosity or interest. His eyes were fixed and vacant; his only. That made him conspicuous and when I saw him again I knew him."

"Describe the man."

Mr. Ransom's face lightened up with an expression of strong satisfaction.

"I am going to astonish you," said he. "The fellow is so plain that children must cry at him. He has suffered some injury and his mouth and jaw have such a twist in them that the whole face is thrown out of shape. So you see," continued the unhappy bridegroom, as his eyes flashed from the detective's face to that of the manager's, "that the influence he exerts over my wife is not that of love. No one could love him. The secret's of another kind. What kind, what, what, what? Find out and I'll pay you any amount you ask. She is too dear and of too sensitive a temperament to be subject to a wretch of his appearance. I cannot bear the thought. It stifles, it chokes me; and yet for three hours I've had to endure it. Three hours! and with no prospect of release unless you—"

"Oh, I'll do something," was Gerridge's bland reply. "But first I must have a few more facts. A man such as you describe should be easy to find; easier than the lady. Is he a tall man?"

"Unusually so."

"Dark or light?"

"Dark."

"Any beard?"

"Is he what you would call a gentleman?"

"None. That's why the injury to his jaw shows so plainly."

"I see. Is he what you would call a gentleman?"

"Yes, I must acknowledge that. He shows the manners of good society, if he did whisper words into my wife's ear which were not meant for mine."

"And Mr. Fulton knows nothing of him?"

"Nothing."

"Well, we'll drop him for the present. You have a photograph of your wife?"

"Her picture was in all the papers to-night."

"I noticed. But can we go by it? Does it resemble her?"

"Only fairly. She is far prettier. My wife is something uncommon. No picture ever does her justice."

"Black. So black it has purple shades in it."

"And her eyes? Black too?"

"No, gray. A deep gray, which look black owing to her long lashes."

"Very good. Now about her dress. Describe it as minutely as you can. It was a bride's traveling costume, I suppose."

"Yes. That is, I presume so. I know that it was all right and suitable to the occasion, but I don't remember much about it. I was thinking too much of the woman in the gown to notice the gown itself."

"Cannot you tell the color?"

"It was a dark one. I'm sure it was a dark one, but colors are not much in my line. I know she looked well—they can tell you about it at the house. All that I distinctly remember is the veil she had wound so tightly around her face and hat to keep the rice out of her hair that I could not get one glimpse of her features. All nonsense that veil, especially when I had promised not to address her or even to touch her in the cab. And she wore it into the office. If it had not been for that I might have foreseen her intention in time to prevent it."

"Perhaps she knew that."

"It looks as if she did."

"Which means that she was meditating flight from the first."

"From the time she saw that man," Mr. Ransom corrected.

"Just so; from the time she left her uncle's house. Your wife is a woman of means, I believe."

"Yes, unfortunately."

"Why unfortunately?"

"It makes her independent and offers a lure to irresponsible wretches like him."

"Her fortune is large, then?"

"Very large; larger than my own." Every one knew Mr. Ransom to be a millionaire.

"No, by some great-uncle, I believe, who made his fortune in the Klondike."

"And entirely under her own control?"

"Entirely so."

"Who is her man of business?"

"Edward Harper, of — Wall street."

"He's your man. He'll know sooner or later where she is."

"Yes, but later won't do. I must know to-night; or, if that is impossible, to-morrow. Were it not for the mortification it would cause her I should beg you to put on all your force and ransack the city for this bride of five hours. But such publicity is too shocking."

The detective looked thoughtful. The problem had its difficulties.

"Are those hers?" he asked at last, pointing to the two trunks he saw standing against the wall.

"Yes. I had them brought up, in the hope that she had slipped away on some foolish errand or other and would yet come back."

"By their heft I judge them to be full; how about her hand-bag?"

"She had only a small bag and an umbrella. They are both here."

"How's that?"

"The colored boy took them at the door. She went away with nothing in her hands."

Gerridge glanced at the bag Mr. Ransom had pointed out, fingered it, then asked the young husband to open it.

He did so. The usual articles and indispensable adjuncts of a nice woman's toilet met their eyes. Also a pocketbook containing considerable money and a case holding more than one valuable jewel.

The eyes of the officer and manager met in ill disguised alarm.

"She must have been under the most violent excitement to slip away without these," suggested the former. "I'd better be at work. Give me two hours," were his parting words to Mr. Ransom. "By that time I'll either be back or telephone you. You had better stay here; she may return. Though I don't think that likely," he muttered as he passed the manager.

At the door he stopped. "You can't tell me the color of that veil?"

"No."

"Look about the room, sir. There's lots of colors in the furniture and hangings. Don't you see one somewhere that reminds you of her veil or even of her dress?"

The miserable bridegroom looked up from the bag into which he was still staring and, glancing slowly around him, finally pointed at a chair upholstered in brown and impulsively said:

"The veil was like that; I remember now. Brown, isn't it? a dark brown?"

"Yes. And the dress?"

"I can't tell you a thing about the dress. But her gloves—I remember something about them. They were so tight they gaped open at the wrist. Her hands looked quite disfigured. I wondered that so sensible a woman should buy gloves at least two sizes too small for her. I think she was ashamed of them herself, for she tried to hide them after she saw me looking."

"This was in the cab?"

"Yes."

"Where you didn't speak a word?"

"Not a word."

"Though she seemed so very much cut up?"

"No, she didn't seem cut up; only tired."

"How tired?"

"She sat with her head pressed against the side of the cab."

"And a little turned away?"

"Yes."

"As if she shrank from you?"

"A little so."

"Did she brighten when the carriage stopped?"

"She started upright."

"Did you help her out?"

"No, I had promised not to touch her."

"She jumped out after you?"

"Yes."

"And never spoke?"

"Not a word."

Gerridge opened the door, motioned for the manager to follow, and, once in the hall, remarked to that gentleman:

"I should like to see the boy who took her bag and was with them when she slipped away."

CHAPTER II.

The Lady in Number 3.

THE boy was soon found and proved to be more observing in matters of dress than Mr. Ransom. He described with apparent accuracy both the color and cut of the garments worn by the lady who had flitted away so mysteriously. The former was brown, all brown; and the latter was of the tailor-made variety, very natty and becoming. "What you would call 'swell,'" was the comment, "if her walk hadn't spoiled the hang of it. How she did walk! Her shoes must have hurt her most uncommon. I never did see any one hobble so."

"How's that? She hobbled, and her husband didn't notice it?"

"Oh, he had hurried on ahead. She was behind him, and she walked like this."

The pantomime was highly expressive.

"That's a point," muttered Gerridge. Then with a sharp look at the boy: "Where were you that you didn't notice her when she slipped off?"

"Oh, but I did, sir. I was waiting for the clerk to give me the key, when I saw her step back from the gentleman's side and, looking quickly round to see if any one was noticing her, slide off into the reception-room. I thought she wanted a drink of water out of the pitcher on the center-table. [illegible] she did, she didn't come back after she had got it. None of us ever saw her again."

"Did you follow Mr. Ransom when he walked through those rooms?"

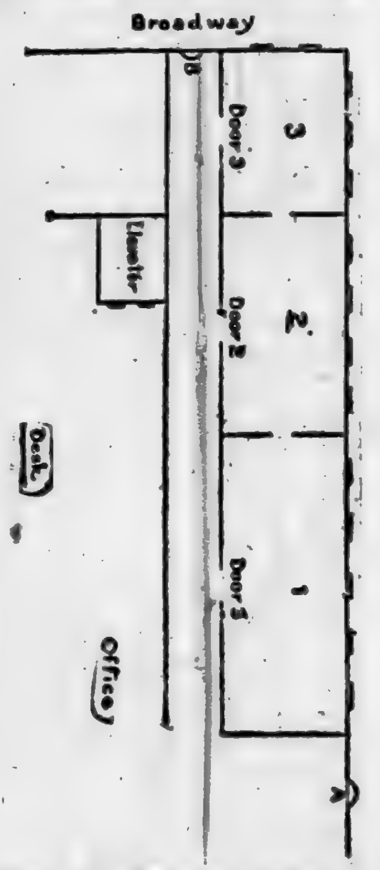
"No, sir; I stayed in the hall."

"Did the lady hobble when she slid thus mysteriously out of sight?"

"A little. Not so much as when she came in. But she wasn't at her ease, sir. Her shoes were certainly too small."

"I think I will take a peep at those rooms now," Gerridge remarked to the manager.

Mr. Loomis bowed, and together they crossed the office to the reception-room door. The diagram of this portion of the hotel will give you an idea of these connecting rooms.



There are three of them, as you will see, all reception-rooms. Mr. Ransom had passed through them all in looking for his wife. In No. 1 he found several ladies sitting and standing, all strangers. He encountered no one in No. 2, and in No. 3 just one person, a lady in street costume evidently waiting for some one. To this lady he had addressed himself, asking if she had seen any one pass that way the moment before. Her reply was a decided "No;" that she had been waiting in that same room for several minutes and had seen no one. This staggered him. It was as if his wife had dissolved into thin air. True, she might have eluded him by slipping out into the hall by means of door two at the moment he entered door one; and alert to this possibility, he hastened back into the hall to look for her. But she was nowhere visible, nor had she been observed leaving the building by the man stationed at entrance A. But there was another exit, that of B. Had she gone out that way? Mr. Ransom had taken pains to inquire and had been assured by the man in charge that no lady had left by that door during the last ten minutes. This he had insisted on, and when Mr. Loomis and the detective came in their turn to question him on this point he insisted on it again. The mystery seemed complete,—at least to the manager. But the detective was not quite satisfied. He asked the man if at any time that day, before or after Mrs. Ransom's disappearance, he had swung the door open for a lady who walked lame. The answer was decisive. "Yes; one who walked as if her shoes were tight."

"When?"

"Oh a little while after the gentleman asked his questions."

"Was she dressed in brown?"

That he didn't know. He didn't look at ladies' dresses unless they were something special.

"But she walked lame and she came from Room 3?"

Yes. He remembered that much.

Gerridge, with a nod to the manager, stepped into the open compartment of the whirling door. "I'm off," said he. "Expect to hear from me in two hours."

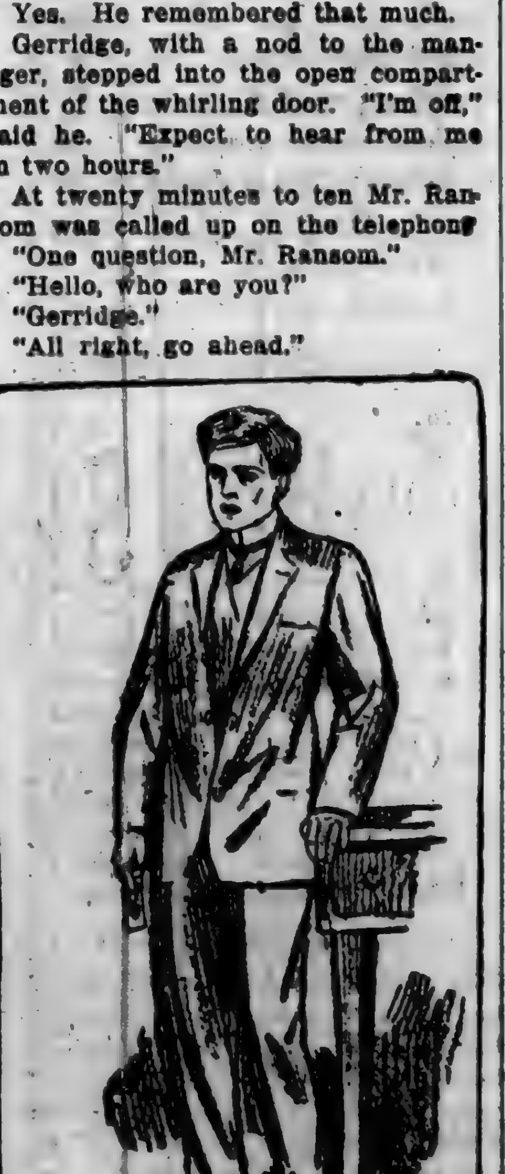
At twenty minutes to ten Mr. Ransom was called up on the telephone.

"One question, Mr. Ransom."

"Hello, who are you?"

"Gerridge."

"All right, go ahead."



Mr. Ransom staggered against the table.

"Did you see the face of the woman you spoke to in Room No. 3?"

"Of course. She was looking directly at me."

"You remember it? Could identify it if you saw it again?"

"Yes; that is—"

"That's all, good-by."

The circuit was cut off.

Another intolerable wait. Then there came a knock on the door and Gerridge entered. He held a photograph in his hand which he had evidently taken from his pocket on his way up.

"Look at this," said he. "Do you recognize the face?"

"The lady—"

"Just so; the one who said she had seen no one come into No. 3 on the first floor."

Mr. Ransom's expression of surprised inquiry was sufficient answer.

"Well, it's a pity you didn't look at her gloves instead of at her face. You might have had some dim idea of having seen them before. It was she who rode to the hotel with you; not your wife. The veil was wound around her face for a far deeper purpose than to ward off rice."

Mr. Ransom staggered back against the table before which he had been standing. The blow was an overwhelming one.

"Who is this woman?" he demanded. "She came from Mr. Fulton's house. More than that, from my wife's room. What is her name and what did she mean by such an outrage?"

"Her name is Bella Burton, and she is your wife's confidential maid. As for the meaning of this outrage, it will take more than two hours to ferret out that. I can only give you the single fact I've mentioned."

"And Mrs. Ransom?"

"She left the house at the same moment you did; you and Miss Burton. Only she went by the basement door."

"She? She?"

"Dressed in her maid's clothes. Oh, you'll have to hear worse things than that before we're out of this muddle. If you won't mind a bit of advice from a man of experience, I would suggest that you take things easy. It's the only way."

Shocked into silence by this cold-blooded philosophy, Mr. Ransom controlled both his anger and his humiliation; but he could not control his surprise.

"What does it mean?" he murmured to himself. "What does it all mean?"

CHAPTER III.

"He Knows the Word."

THE next moment the doubt natural to the occasion asserted itself.

"How do you know all this? You state the impossible. Explain yourself."

Gerridge was only too willing to do so.

"I have just come from Mr. Fulton's house," said he. "Inquiries there elicited the facts which have so startled you. Neither Mr. Fulton nor his wife meant to deceive you. They knew nothing, suspected nothing of what took place, and you have no cause to blame them. It was all a plot between the two women."

"But how—why—"

"You see, I had a fact to go upon. You had noticed that your so-called bride's gloves did not fit her; the boy below, that her shoes were so tight she hobbled. That set me thinking. A woman of Mrs. Ransom's experience and judgment would not be apt to make a mistake in two such important particulars; which taken with the veil and the promise she exacted from you not to address or touch her during your short ride to the hotel, led me to point my inquiries so that I soon found out that your wife had had the assistance of another woman in getting ready for her journey and that this woman was her own maid who had been with her for a long time, and had always given evidence of an especial attachment for her. Asking about this girl's height and general apearance (for the possibility of a substitution was already in my mind), I found that she was of slight figure and good carriage, and that her age was not far removed from that of her young mistress. This made the substitution I have mentioned feasible, and when I was told that she was seen taking her hat and bonnet into the bride's room, and, though not expected to leave till the next morning, had slid away from the house by the basement door at the same moment her mistress appeared on the front steps, my suspicions became so confirmed that I asked how this girl looked, in the hope that you would be able to recognize her, through the description, as the woman you had seen sitting in Reception-room No. 3. But to my surprise, Mrs. Fulton had what was better than any description, the girl's picture. This has simplified matters very much. By it you have been able to identify the woman who attempted to mislead you in the reception-room, and I the person who rode here with you from Mr. Fulton's house. Wasn't she dressed in brown? Didn't you notice a similarity in her appearance to that of the very lady you were then seeking?"

"I did not observe. Her face was all I saw. She was looking directly at me as I stepped into the room."

TOM MIX—WORLD'S GREATEST COWBOY.

It's a fact. Real cowboys don't do it—that is, wear fringe and beads and neck drapery and fancy wristlets, and such. Tom Mix, one of the realest reel cowboys extant, declares that such garb is to feed vanity, and that the genuine cowboy wears simple, serviceable clothes, leather chaps when actually riding, sometimes a leather wrist guard when "steer pluggin'," and a handkerchief tied closely round the neck to keep the dirt from sifting down the collar.

TOM MIX

Tom Mix, who is busy most of the time out at Las Vegas, N. M., canning fresh air into the celluloid for the Selig Company, dropped into Chicago for a two days' visit, returning last night.

Mr. Mix has lived in the west since he was born in Texas a little matter of more than thirty years ago. He was a cowpuncher just naturally in his youth, and then he went to the Spanish-American war, getting a look in at Cuba and the Philippines thereby, and also happening to drop into China for the Boxer disturbance. When he came back he said he was a rover and didn't know what to do with himself, so he did various things over the country, mostly as a United States marshal chasing down outlaws.

On one such occasion he happened to see in Oklahoma City a cowboy picture. "The actors were wearing beads and fringe, with their guns hanging half down their legs, and what looked like a tablecloth draped around their necks to their waists, and I said to myself then that if real cowboy life was that way I'd take off my boots, put on rubber sole shoes, and go to burglarizing for a living."

A little later, after winning a riding championship in Cheyenne, the Selig Company enlisted Mr. Mix's equestrian services. That was six years ago, and there he has been ever since, duplicating cowboy life as he has known it.

"I know the real life, for I've lived it and my folks lived it. A ranch in the west was never any place for a juvenile. It was serious business, with serious, honest-to-God people, and the foolish and bad ones got weeded out always before they had time to do any damage. So the west really never was melodramatic.

"I make my stories simple and wholesome, and I make them tell themselves without subtitles, for I figure that a large part of my audiences can't read. My pictures go to the mill and mine towns, into all sorts out of the way corners. So I make them just as plain as I can, full of life and brawn, but wholesome.

"Cowboy pictures, real ones, are going to be more and more popular. I get letters about them from all over the world."

"From pretty girls?" quoth I.

"No, sir, I don't," quoth Mr. Mix. "I don't believe I've had a hundred mash notes in my life. But I get them from all kinds of people, children and men mostly. I get a lot from England, and before the war I used to get them from Germany and other parts of the continent."

The conversation turned to stunts, which, in Mr. Mix's case, naturally went to bones.

"Yes, I broke my nose. I planned to have a stage coach roll over a cliff with myself in it, and about the first roll I came loose and rattled around like a pea in a pod. My nose caught the damage.

"My arm got broken when I was caught between two four horse wagons. They ran into each other and there were eleven horses and three men down. After that a man sent in a bill of $16 for some scratches one of the wagons got.

"I broke my little finger a few weeks ago when it got caught in my saddle. I set it myself, and it's a little crooked."

"THE MISSING LINKS" STRIKES NEW NOTE.

Somebody in reviewing "The Missing Links" remarked plaintively that nothing happened in it. Therein, it seems to me, it is most commendable. The trouble with the mass of picture output is that too much is always happening, young ladies seduced, automobiles smashed up, trains wrecked, boats sunk, gangs wiped out, robbers killed, and other such horrifiers, until ordinary people, who live ordinary lives, concerned with the price of steak and the speed with which tucks must be let out in Susy's dresses, stay at home from the movies to read magazines.

But here comes a movement in photoplay production that approximates the writing that has gone home to human consciousness. It is creating atmosphere with the incidents to carry it out only incidental.

So in this picture, though things happen, and rather exciting things at that, the atmosphere is the thing. And few of us are so far from the memory range of our small town origins as to be beyond the spell of the small town spirit in replica.

This village story has a lot of the home folks quality in it. There are just such people as we have known, just such "parlors" as we have sat in, just such church services as we have attended. The people assembled in the street corner crowds are classics of realism—no vaudeville villagers here, but the real thing.

It is a little story of village romance and of the tragedy visiting most every small town when "the bank fails." There is a villain, but he touches human sympathies because he did not mean to be one, didn't grow up to it, but was flung into sudden crime by an unfortuitous combination of circumstances, when he was trying to reinstate himself in honesty. So there is poignant sorrow, as well as subtle fun, all going to the making of a well wrought cross section of life.

There is, too, Bobby Harron, who has many friends in filmland and who has not been seen before under the Triangle. He renews his hold on his friends and should make new ones for his flippant and forceful, satisfying playing.

Elmer Clifton, seen long ago in "John Barleycorn," is the brother, and the two interplay with splendid effect. Particularly good is the revolver episode when the observer feels the thought formulated by each brother, without any facial distortion. In fact, none of the players twist into facial agonies; they make their points by mental effort, not physical.

A street suit of old bordeaux velour de laine with self color steel embroideries and trimmed with raccoon fur.

London. — [Special Correspondence.]—The tailored suit, which is always with us, is appearing in new and interesting variations this midyear time. The materials from which it can be made are being culled, too, from a wider variety of goods. There are new and charming effects in soft checked, plaided, and striped wools which have a particularly breezy and wintry air about them.

Suits are still abundantly trimmed with fur, but there is a growing abatement of this once universally favored trimming. Leather trimmings, for instance, are steadily increasing in favor. This leather trimming may be applied in bands which are straight or scalloped, according to individual preference. The scallops in leather, however, are not apt to be so effective as the plain bands.

Nor is the use of leather confined to trimmings. Suits are made of it, and one may see in some of the French imported models whole suits of leather.

The suit which I have sketched today is of velour de laine in old bordeaux shade, with self color steel embroideries and raccoon fur. The color of the suit is one which is extremely popular now and becoming also to a large number of women.

UNIFORMS THE THING TODAY.

New York City Feels London Craze for the Military in Dress.

Uniforms are the thing today, even in New York, far away from the war, and white and gold and blue and gold as well as beltings and badges are blossoming on bellboys and ushers in all the hotels, the New York Herald states. Insignia of military and naval orders are peeping from waistcoats and buttonholes to which they have been strangers.

Lobby chatter runs to the military madness of London, especially, because more Americans have been in London than elsewhere abroad in recent months. Tales of the rage for shoulder straps are told in every couch corner.

"The women are mad over them," said one recently returned traveler in the Waldorf-Astoria. "Some homely chap in the full dress of a subaltern will swagger along and the way the women carry on one might think he was the only man in the world. The slaveys are just as bad, and would leave the house burning to hang out of a window to watch a file of recruits march by.

"Why, every butcher's boy I saw was wearing a wrist watch, just because it's military, you know."

Sudden lack of attention from his auditors caused the speaker to look about. His eyes found resting place with the others upon Frederick Eisler and Henry H. Zehner, assistant managers of the hotel, who had just stepped from the elevator to begin their hours of duty.

Both wore frock coats, stiff collars and the aloof expression of the European hotel manager, from London to Vienna. No rule of the Waldorf-Astoria management demands such attire, though managers in some other New York hotels affect it regularly. Mr. Eisler and Mr. Zehner had been delightfully informal for years. They marched past the speechless lobby audience.

"What did I tell you?" the speaker resumed. "Uniforms are the thing. Watch them grow in New York."

LITERARY INSINCERITIES.

Books Writer Has Tried to Read, but Failed, He Confesses.

Picking out the six or ten or twenty greatest books in the English language, or in the world, is still one of the favorite pastimes of literary supplements and reviews, Don Marquis writes in the New York Evening Sun.

How many of us, if we were really honest, could make a list of great works that we have tried to enjoy and couldn't rise to!

We have for our own part a greater sin than that on our conscience. There are a number of books that we habitually pretend we have read which we have never read at all. They are great books, we suppose. At least we've heard a lot about them and read a lot about them, and people who assume to know say they are great books. Some of them we have tried to read and couldn't read, but we have pretended at one time or another to have read all of them. Here is our list of shame!

"Tom Jones." We have tried to read it four times and could never get five pages into it.

"The Vicar of Wakefield." We have attempted it at least six times and taken the count in the first round every time.

"Dante's Divine Comedy." We have been going against the Cary translation which we hear is a good one, at least once a year for twenty years and we can't get interested in it. Yet up to the present moment we have always pretended that we had read all of it and liked it.

"Don Quixote." We have read a little of it and we know all the usual things that are said about it, and we even wrote some stuff about it one time, saying all the things that are usually said about it, for which we got $25, but we don't really like it; it puts us to sleep; it seems long drawn out and clumsy to us.

We have always pretended that we were familiar with Walt Whitman's poetry, but as a matter of fact we never read anything through excepting "When Lilacs Last in the Dooryard Bloomed." But we have taken part in many an interesting discussion of Walt Whitman, and nobody seemed to get wise to the fact that we didn't know what we were talking about. We always pretend when we are cornered that we have read Chaucer's "Canterbury Tales"; it's odd how far you can go with most people by having looked at a bit of this and a snatch of that.

And it's odd how many people will force you into these little literary lies by their attitude; the people that force you into them are always the people you can pull a bluff on and get away with it.

CUTS HIS OWN SALARY.

Self-Sacrifice and Career of the British Attorney-General.

Sir Frederick Smith, the British attorney-general, who has voluntarily resigned $5,000 a year of the salary of that office, in addition to part of the fees which augment the income of the incumbent, is one of the successful young men of Great Britain. The son of a barrister of moderate means, he began to climb early in life, the Philadelphia Ledger says. At 21 he was president of the Oxford Union; at 24, fellow and lecturer of Merton college, Oxford, having in the meantime been first in the list of final honors at the school of jurisprudence. At 34 he entered the house of commons, where he immediately became prominent in debate. At 43 he was called to the cabinet as attorney-general, the recognized leader of the English bar. A brilliant speaker and a fearless fighter, he is an invaluable asset to the conservative party during election campaigns. He was a supporter of Sir Edward Carson in the Ulster agitation, was on active service with the Oxford yeomanry after the outbreak of the war and served for several months as chief censor. His salary, apart from fees, was $35,000 a year; it is now, by his action, $30,000 a year.

Cheese Good Substitute for Meat

Housewives who choose to withdraw meat from the table a part of the time need not, if they exercise discretion in the selection of substitutes injure the health or annoy the palate of the family. A wise use of cheese according to members of the department of home economics of the University of Washington, will prove both healthful and economical.

"Cheese is apt to be used on our table as an appetizer," said one member of the faculty, "whereas its value as a muscle building and energy supplying food makes it one of the most economical substitutes for meat.

"A given amount of money spent for American cheese will buy about twice as much food value as if spent for meat.

"The general belief that cheese is difficult to digest is due largely, perhaps, to the unsuitable way in which it is eaten—at the end of an already sufficient meal for example—and to its careless preparation.

"In making a menu with cheese as a central dish, the cheese should replace foods of similar composition, as meat, eggs and fish.

"As cheese is a concentrated food, some green vegetables such as stewed celery, spinach, cabbage, cauliflower or lettuce should be included in the menu, as well as bread, potatoes and other starchy substances, to give a balanced meal with the proper bulk."

Recipes which will serve the household manager during season are given below.

In cooking the cheese low temperature should be used, so as not to toughen it.

Cheese Croquettes—Thicken 1 cup milk with 1-4 cup flour or farina; cook thoroughly. Add 2 egg yolks; then melt in the sauce 1-4 pound of cheese chopped fine or grated. Season with salt, pepper and a little mustard. Spread in a shallow pan and cool. Shape, roll crumbs, egg and crumbs again, and fry in deep fat.

Cheese Fondue—One cup scalded milk; 1 cup soft, stale bread crumbs; 1-4 pound milk cheese, diced; 1 tablespoon butter; 3 eggs; seasoning.

Mix first your ingredients and add well beaten yolks of eggs. Cut and fold in stiffly beaten whites of eggs. Pour in buttered baking dish and bake twenty minutes in a moderate oven.

Cheese Souffle—Two tablespoons butter; 3 tablespoons flour; 1-2 cup scalded milk; seasoning; 1-4 cup grated cheese; 3 eggs.

Melt butter and add flour, add gradually milk. Season. Remove from fire and add yolks of eggs beaten until lemon colored. Cool mixture, and cut and fold in whites of eggs beaten stiff and dry. Pour into a buttered baking dish and bake twenty minutes in a slow oven. Serve at once.

Bar-le-duc and Cream Cheese Sandwiches or salad—Mash to a paste one cup fresh cream cheese, add 2 tablespoons bar-le-duc (currant) jelly, 3 tablespoons olive oil, 1 cup chopped peacan nuts. Season with salt, paprika and chopped parsley. Mix well and spread between thin slices of buttered whole wheat bread. This filling may be served in form of canapes, by spreading on slices of hot toast and garnishing the tops with slices of stuffed olives. Or the filling may be made and pressed into small balls and served on lettuce leaves. Cream may be used in place of olive oil, and sweet pickles sliced finely and walnuts instead of jelly aind peacans.

"INDIANS" THROW TEA INTO BOSTON HARBOR.

About 142 Years Ago Since Colonists Rebelled Against Unjust Taxation.

The event known in history as "The Boston Tea Party" was a bold and startling prelude to the American war for independence. Under the laws of Great Britain imported teas paid a shilling a pound duty at English ports, but the merchants received a drawback of three-fifths on exports to the colonies, which were required to pay the remaining two-fifths. As they obtained it more cheaply by smuggling from Holland, there was practically no tea trade from England. In 1767 the duty was reduced to threepence, to be collected at American ports. The political purpose made Americans bitterly hostile, associations were formed to abstain from the tea, merchants who handled it lost custom, and the Dutch smuggling went on. In 1770 the other new duties were repealed, but that on tea was retained.

In 1773 the East India Company, having 17,000,000 pounds of unsalable tea stored in London, asked parliament for a colonial drawback in order to undersell the Dutch, the Washington Post recalls. This was granted on May 10, and tea ships were sent to Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Charleston, and consignees, or "tea commissioners," were appointed at each place. The colonies were now resolved that no taxes, external or internal should be paid except under their own control, and set themselves to prevent collection of the duty. In the other cities than Boston this was done by forcing the consignees to resign and at New York and Philadelphia the ships were sent back without unloading.

On November 28 the merchant ship Dartmouth arrived at Boston with 114 chests of tea and was moored at Griffins wharf, a guard of twenty-five men being stationed to prevent unloading. Later two other ships arrived with cargoes of tea, and they were also put under guard. By law the ships could not be cleared until their cargoes had been discharged, and, therefore, it was impossible for the vessels to leave port, as their owners were unable to obtain permission from the royal authorities. Their time of probation expired at midnight of December 16, and on the evening of that day 7,000 colonists gathered in and about Old South meeting house, the purpose of the leaders being to commit the colony to open disobedience of English orders, and have some issue to unite upon with the other colonies.

Addresses were made by Samuel Adams, Josiah Quincy and others, forty or fifty men disguised as Indians waiting nearby for an agreed signal. At last Samuel Adams gave the appointed signal. "This meeting can do nothing more to save the country," and at once the "Indians," followed by about 1,000 other persons, rushed to the wharf, boarded the ships, broke open the chests and then threw the tea into the harbor. The entire 342 chests on the three ships valued at £18,000, were destroyed without a word from the mob, which then dispersed. The immediate result of the "tea party" was the bill closing the port of Boston, but, as the Bostonians had expected, the whole country rallied to their support.

Let us Reason Together.

In recent years science has given much time and study to the human body. Through this study we have learned that our body is largely composed of glands that are linked together in a great grandular system. Our physical well-being largely depends upon the working condition of this glandular system.

The principal glands of the body are the liver, kidneys, spleen, pancreas, tonsils and numerous small glands of the stomach and bowels. If these glands are not working properly we are languid, the vitality is low, our strength is reduced and a general nervous and debilitated condition exists. If these conditions are neglected serious results are very apt to follow. Don't use a gland stimulant. You need a gland tonic.

Glando is prepared to meet these conditions. It is a tonic which restores the glands to action, throws off the poisons and builds up the system.

DARKEN GRAY HAIR, LOOK YOUNG, PRETTY

Grandma's recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur darkens so naturally that nobody can tell.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe for about 50 cents.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

OLD-TIME COLD CURE—DRINK HOT TEA!

Get a small package of Hamburg Breast Tea, or as the German folks call it, "Hamburger Brust Thee," at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the tea, put a cup of boiling water upon it, pour through a sieve and drink a teacup full at any time during the day or before retiring. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieving congestion. Also loosens the bowels, thus breaking up a cold.

Try it the next time you suffer from a cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

RUB RHEUMATISM FROM STIFF, ACHING JOINTS

Stop "dosing" Rheumatism.

It's pain only; not one case in fifty requires internal treatment. Rub soothing, penetrating "St. Jacobs Oil" right on the "tender spot," and by the time you say Jack Robinson—out comes the rheumatic pain. "St. Jacob's Oil" is a harmless rheumatism cure which never disappoints and doesn't burn the skin. It takes pain, soreness and stiffness from aching joints, muscles and bones; stops sciatica, lumbago, backache, neuralgia.

Limber up! Get a 25 cent bottle of old-time, honest "St. Jacobs Oil" from any drug store, and in a moment you'll be free from pains, aches and stiffness. Don't suffer! Rub rheumatism away.

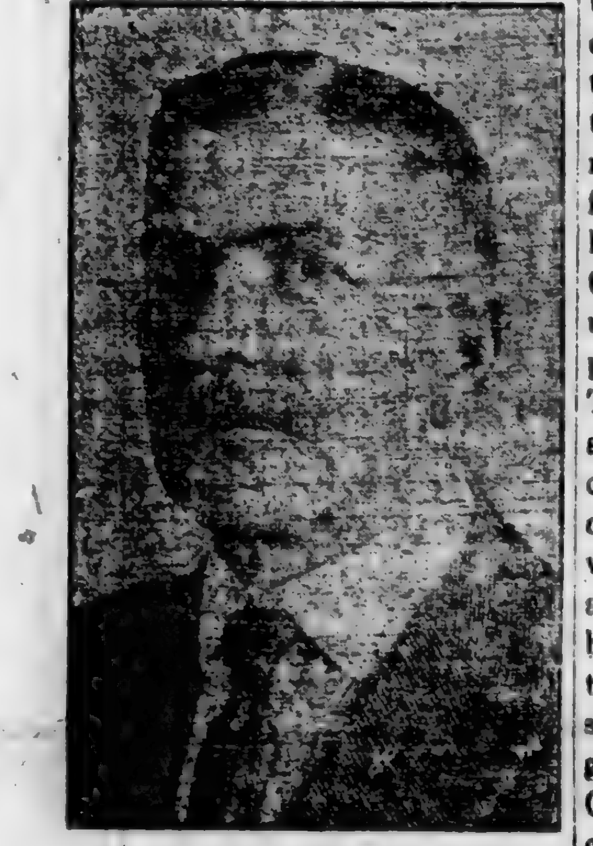
Two Candidates from St. Joe.

St. Joe comes into the March Primary with two candidates for nominations to county offices this year, and men that are qualified in every respect to fulfill the demands of the offices they are seeking. Rolland Bearss, republican, for sheriff and Clark Scholes, democrat for surveyor. The News is non-partisan and will handle all matters of this character on the broad plane of American Citisenship. Mr.



ROLLAND BEARSS

Bearss represented his party two years ago as a candidate for the office he now seeks. Mr. Bearss has lived in the county all his life and is well known. He has been a success in all his undertakings and a few weeks ago moved from the Erick farm to St. Joe Rolland is a man that is well liked by everyone, is honest, upright and a fine citizen. After all it is the man that counts and this should be particularly true, regardless of the party he is running with. The second candidate from St. Joe is Clark F. Scholes, a brilliant young man, who aspires to the nomination for county surveyor on the democratic ticket of old DeKalb. He too is a qualified candidate, having been reared with the surveyors instruments and chains of his father. He has attended college at Angola and studied the business ever since he was old enough to carry the chain. We believe him to be able to meet the demands of this office and in him we believe the voters will store their confidence at the Primary, March 17th.

Bailey, Mich., 1-14-1916.

Editor News:—The News arrived and was a welcome visitor. I have been over to Grand Rapids, Fremont and White Cloud, the past week. I was over this land 31 years ago last week. And now the optomist would say: The world surely is growing better; and the pessimist would sneak off behind a S. S.—Oh well, sand bank for the the saloons are gone and nice, white dwelling predominates. If anyone thinks all pine land is worthless they better get out and take notice. The people are lively, cheerful and prosperous. The farms have fine barns and houses, and the woods are full of Fords going up on high. Beans, potatoes and peaches are the main crops here. The bean dealer employs 12 girls and women picking over beans at 4 cents per lb. They make from 50 cents to $2.00 per day. Land is worth from $20 to $100 per acre; averaging about $75. Farmers are busy hauling potatoes and beans to market. Rain has spoiled the sleding twice this month, but is good again. Many cases of La-Grippe are reported. I like the country very much here.

Times are better than ever before as reported by farmers around Bailey. Richmond Whitney reports as follows; from 29 acres of land laying west of Bailey he sold beans at $3.15 per bushel bringing him a total of $1826.75. Potatoes at 90 cents per bushel netted him $1,258.80. Giving him a total of $3085.55, leaving him 36 bushel of beans for seed, with more crops to be marketed.—Grant Herald.

1 barrel Daily Bread Flour makes 312--5c. loaves of Bread, a total of $15.60 a barrel; flour cost $6.80, making $8.80 for your trouble. St. Joe Mills.

George Swineford, of St. Joe, is among the exhilitors of fine poultry at the big Triangle Poultry Show and Pet Stock exhibit at Ft. Wayne, this week. Many from here have been in attendance at the show this week, and others will go to Ft. Wayne to-morrow and Saturday for that purpose. The Poultry Show at Ft. Wayne this year has been arranged in such a way as to interest everyone who attends—the visitor who doesn't know anything at all about poultry, as well as the man who is engaged in the business professionally. The doors of the show opened Tuesday of this week in a large recently-vacated factory building two squares north of the Transfer corner, on Calhoun Street. A total of 1,025 prize-winning birds have been entered. Some of these captured first honors at the San Francisco exposition, and others scooped the high prises at the Chicago show and the Madison Square Garden exposition. In addition to complete entries in all lines of other birds, the Ft. Wayne show will have an unusually large exhibit of bronso turkeys. In the pet stock division, twenty varieties of rabbits will be shown. This year, the management of the show has decided to admit free all children under twelve years, provided they are accompanied by another person with a paid admission ticket.

Two ears of corn is on display in News office window, grown by Wm. Lucas. Four years ago he found 3 grains on the railroad track and he took them home and planted them in one hill and 3 ears were raised of good sise and quality. From these three grains he raised last year three acres, yielding one hundred bushels of shelled corn per acre. To give you an idea of the magnitude of his crop he stated that while he was husking this field he fed 9 hogs, 4 horses, 200 chickens and filled a crib 16x6-x9 feet. The ears on display are somewhat loose but the corn is there. The ears contains 800 and 1,000 grains.

Obituary.

Helen A. Coburn, Kimes, was born on what is now the Will Maxwell farm, east of St. Joe, Ind., Jan. 13, 1849. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Coburn, lived in the log house which had the unique place in history of having been the home of Eld. Benjamin Alton, when he organized the Christian Church of Coburn's Corners under its sheltering roof, 80 years ago, the first church constituted in DeKalb County. Helen attended school at Coburn's Corners until about 12 years of age, when she with others of that neighborhood were transferred to the new school that was started at Cheesetown near her home. About two years later she suffered an injury which necessitated the amputation of her right leg at the hip. In spite of this severe handicap, she continued her activities in school and in the social life of the community, helped by the use of a crutch which she has used all her life with remarkable efficiency.

On May 31, 1877, she was united in marriage with William Kimes. They spent the first years of their married life on the old Kimes farm near Spencerville, Ind. About 35 years ago they moved to a farm near Fremont, Mich., but at the time of her death Mrs. Kimes lived at Grand Rapids, Mich. Here after a short illness from pneumonia, she died on Jan. 12, 1916, being 67 years of age. Mrs. Kimes, with intelligent faith and a loving heart obeyed the call of the Lord Jesus Christ on Aug. 30, 1863, when about 15 years of age and united with the Christian church at Coburn's Corners in a gospel meeting led by Eld. Lockhart with that congregation. When she and her husband moved to Michigan, they transferred their membership to the church at Fremont, Mich. They have retained their membership. With Mrs. Kimes the enlistment in the army of the Lord was not for a battle or two but for life and so

She yielded not to temptation,
For yielding is sin.
Each victory helped her
Some other to win.

As the end drew near the help of the Lord seemed to increase according to her need. She enjoyed the reading of the Bible prayer with her husband and other faithful Christians and so she quietly fell asleep in the victory of the faith that rests all in the risen and living Savior.

She leaves to mourn her departure, a husband, father, nine brothers, two sisters, a number of cousins and a host of friends. A mother and three sisters preceded her to the better land. Services were held at 2:00 o'clock P. M., at her old home east of St. Joe, by Rev. J. O. Rose, of Angola. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director. Burial at Alton cemetery.

POLITICAL!

To the Republicans of DeKalb Co:

I am a candidate for the republican nomination for congress at the primary election, March 7. I ask your votes, not only because I will be elected, if nominated, but also because, having made the fight to maintain the party principles in two campaigns when success was impossible I want the chance to run when the running promises to be good. It is only fair that I have the chance. I made big gains in the second campaign, showing that it was the party split and not the man, that lost the battle. I know how to perform the services, if elected, because of my long study of political questions. I have always worked for a living and if elected, the habit will stick to me.

You know me and I hope to receive your vote at the primary. I will be a hustler for the election and a hustler in your service, if elected.

Mrs. Stella McNabb had a 70 lb. shoat fall into the rain barrel during the thaw and rainy weather last week. The barrel being sunk in the ground and the ice over the top loosened by the thaw, piggie walked on top and disappeared. The plunge was heard in the house and on going out Mr. McNabb saw the ice going through funny motions, when he removed the ice he saw a faint wiggling of piggie's tail and speedily pulled him out, the pork was nearly a goner but was resuscitated by prompt action. After his icy bath he refused to eat anything during that day but next day acted like a hog again.

It's Dangerous.

Pynine is a preparation that has been especially prepared to relieve coughs and colds and allay the inflammation of the bronchial tubes. This preparation is much more effective than the cheap ordinary pine tar preparations that are usually recommended for coughs and colds.

Ask your druggist for three ounces of Pynine which contains the pure form of White Pine to which other valuable ingredients have been added. Mix this with 13 oz. of syrup or strained honey and you will have 16 oz. or one pint of very effective cough syrup.

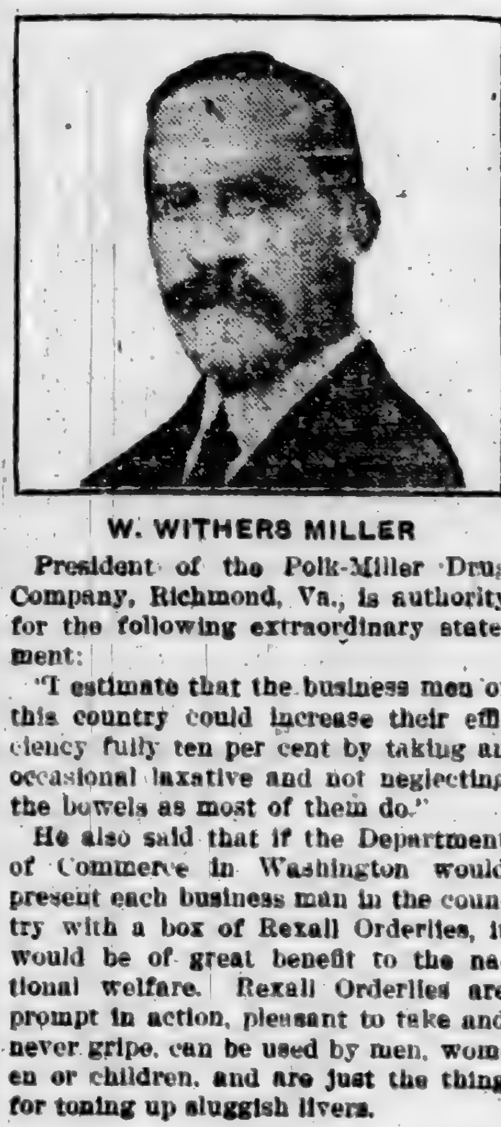
Great Business Losses Due to Neglect



W. WITHERS MILLER

"I estimate that the business men of this country could increase their efficiency fully ten per cent by taking an occasional laxative and not neglecting the bowels as most of them do."

He also said that if the Department of Commerce in Washington would present each business man in the country with a box of Rexall Orderlies, it would be of great benefit to the national welfare. Rexall Orderlies are prompt in action, pleasant to take and never gripe, can be used by men, women or children, and are just the thing for toning up sluggish livers.

The quarentine is lifted and the schools and churches are again at work. There are a few cases of measles yet but not enough to hinder the meetings that are set regularly of the different organizations.

Friday night, 19 of the St. Joe Fire Department boys armed with saws, shotguns and other instruments more or less antiquated; treated Leon Sechler, (a member of the organization) to an old fashioned belling. The affair, though much belated, was a success, at least from a gastronomic viewpoint, for the boys brought with them a liberal quantity of oysters and crackers, which were served by the Misses Avis and Agnes Sechler, and Ethel Wallace. "Jayboy" Bleeks armed with a shot-gun gave the signal for the outburst of melody that apparently interrupted a very pleasant flinch game between Mr. and Mrs. Sechler, the latter who made a hasty exit, to change apparel more suitable for the occasion. Mr. Sechler then passed the Havanas to the boys, and after a very social time all went home feeling the evening had been pleasantly and profitably spent.

Mrs. Buckingham and Mrs. Bishop attended the funeral of Mrs. C. B. Jones at Garrett, last Friday.

C. R. Brunson and wife, of Chicago, Ohio, returned home Monday after a weeks visit with relatives here and his parents, north of town.

Don't stay stuffed up! Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist now. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic cream in your nostrils, let it penetrate through every air passage of the head; soothe and heal the swollen inflamed mucous membrane giving you instant relief. Ely's Cream Balm is just what every cold and catarrh sufferer has been seeking. It's just splendid.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Hall Wants A Fair Show

Frank A. Hall, the former Garrett coal dealer, was brought into the court room Friday morning. Hall has been in the DeKalb county jail for several months unable to secure bond. He was brought to DeKalb county after the expiration of a sentence at the state penal farm several weeks ago.

Frank A Hall is a changed man from what he was when he was flying high in Garrett. In those days he dressed well and had the air of a man who is usually called a leading citizen. He is bleached out by his long confinement in jail and the confident poise he used in Garrett is all gone. He is nothing but an ordinary prisoner living on a prison diet and under prison discipline. The grand jury of this county found five indictments against him and on the charge of obtaining money under false pretenses he was brought into court.

A C. Wood of Angola, and E. M. McKennan of Garrett appeared as his attorneys. They waived the reading of the indictment and also arraignment and filed an affidavit signed by Hall asking for a change of venue.

In the affidavit Hall sets forth that he cannot on account of the wide prejudice in the county receive a fair trial if the case is tried in DeKalb county. After a consultation between the prosecutor, the attorneys for Hall and the court, the case was sent for trial to the circuit court of Allen county.

Hall, following his smash-up went into bankruptcy in the federal court at Ft. Wayne and since that time it has been discovered that he swore falsely to his assets and may have to face a federal judge on the charge of perjury.—Evening Star.

Obituary

Edward Wayne Funk, third son of Nicholas and Pearl Funk, was born near Mt. Pleasant, Aug. 1st., 1915, and died January 16th., 1916. Age 5 months and 15 days. Little Edward's life was short and full of suffering and he has left us only at the Great Master's call "For of such is the kingdom of Heaven". Our loss is his gain. He taught us a lesson of patience and endurance, while we only had him so short a time. And now our arms are empty and an unspeakable grief is in our hearts. We know he has gone to be happier in the Heavenly land. We shall see him again with great happiness if we accept the lesson he taught us. While we loved him so dearly and our hearts are so broken we will yet say, 'Thy will be done, Lord Jesus". He has left to mourn their loss, father, mother, two brothers, Henry W. and Howard N., who will try and meet him where parting will never come. The funeral services were largely attended by friends and neighbors, and the sermon was preached by Rev. John T. Keesey in the home, and burial was in Riverside cemetery at St. Joe, last Tuesday.

Resolutions of Respect

St. Joe Lodge No. 400 K. of P., at its regular meeting on last Wednesday evening, passed the following resolutions:

Whereas, God in his wisdom has seen fit to remove from our midst the infant son of Brother and Sister Funk;

Therefore, be it resolved, that the Officers and Members of St. Joe Lodge No. 400 K. and P., extend to Brother and Sister Funk their heartfelt sympathy in this their sad hour of bereavement. And would point them to the Supreme Ruler who doeth all things well. And that this Flower only been transplanted from this world to the Realms above.

Resolved: That these resolutions be spread on the minutes of this Lodge, a copy sent to the bereaved family and also printed in the St. Joe News.

Last Thursday while Paul Perry was carrying mail on Route No. 2, he had the misfortune to have his horse run away while putting mail in a box. The rig was turned over and smashed and Paul was unconscious for a time. He was brought home but was soon able to get out again. The accident happened at the Maxwell home north of town.

A deal was made last week where by Frank Sechler became owener of the Hollis Dilley residence on Widney Avenue and Hollis in turn became owner of Mr. Sechler's interest in nhe Widney residence. The ill health of Mrs. Sechler necessitated a change of this nature and S. S. Widney will still retain his home in the old home and be cared for by Mr. and Mrs. Dilley. Monday Mr. Sechler began to rebuild the Dilley house. A room will be built on the west, the ceilings will be lowered in old part and thus afford a fine upstairs. A porch will be added. Abner Copp is doing the work and if the nice weather continues it will be rushed to completion.

THE

Bread Pancakes—Take one and one-half cups of flour, one cup of stale breadcrumbs, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one teaspoonful of salt, two tablespoons of sugar, one-half cup of boiling water, three-quarters cup of milk, one egg, well beaten, and two tablespoonfuls of melted butter. Add the boiling water to the breadcrumbs and let stand for five minutes. Add the milk, sift together thoroughly the flour, salt, sugar and baking powder and add to the bread mixture. Then add the egg and butter.

Corn Pancakes—Three cups level full of cornmeal, one cup heaped full of flour, one teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of strong hop yeast and one egg. Add enough warm water to make a thin batter. Make at night. In the morning add half a teaspoonful of soda, dissolved in a little warm water.

Cornmeal and Rice Pancakes—One-half cup of cornmeal, one-half cup of flour, one cup of boiled rice, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half a teaspoonful of salt, two eggs and one cup of milk. Mix the dry ingredients and the beaten yolks with the milk. Combine the two mixtures and fold in the whites, beaten stiff.

Cream Waffles—One cup of flour, three heaping tablespoonfuls of cornstarch, two cups of sour cream, one teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of salt and one egg. Beat the egg, add the cream, in which soda has been previously beaten, then the sifted flour, with salt and cornstarch.

Baked Easter Rabbit—Make a sponge of one quart milk, one cake yeast; add one cup sugar, one-half cup butter and lard creamed, one teaspoon salt and bread flour to make as stiff as bread. Let it rise. Make a pattern of a rabbit running, on heavy paper. When dough is raised roll it out one and one-half inches thick, lay on the pattern and cut around it with a sharp knife; put it in the pan. Use a raisin for an eye. Let rise again. Brush with beaten egg or milk and bake. If too much dough for rabbit, roll out, spread with melted butter, cinnamon and sugar and you have a coffee cake.

Imitation Angel Cake—Use neither butter nor eggs or cake will be yellow. Cream together one cup and one large tablespoon granulated sugar, one-third cup lard (add large pinch of salt to lard); then stir in alternately one cup milk, two cups flour into which you have put one heaping teaspoon baking powder. Stir or beat until it looks like ice cream. Flavor with heaping teaspoon lemon extract. Makes two large layers and is pure white. Filling may be made by taking one-half cup milk, four tablespoons sugar; let boil, thicken with cornstarch, let cook until very thick; flavor with lemon, spread between layers while warm, so layers will stick together.

Lima Bean Soup—Soak one cup lima beans over night. In the morning wash, pick over and boil till tender. Put through food chopper one carrot, one onion, one turnip and add to the beans, salt to taste and boil till all are cooked. Rub together in a warm bowl one tablespoon of butter, same of flour, same of cold water. With this very carefully thicken the soup. By using same rules this can be changed into quite a variety of soups—for instance, in place of beans use lentils or peas, and to either can be added a pint of canned tomatoes. All are delicious.

Rice and Wheat—Simmer pint of rice in quart of water till soft. When it is lukewarm mix well with one quart flour. Add a yeast cake dissolved in a little warm water and a pinch of salt. Knead well and set to rise. When light make into loaves and bake as for any bread.

Fried Bacon, Southern Style—Cut slices of bacon half inch thick. Pour boiling water over them and let stand five minutes. Put the slices in the frying pan and sprinkle Indian meal lightly over all. Cook over a hot fire until crisp and brown. Serve on a warm dish.

Peanut Salad—Wash a head of fresh lettuce. Put in icebox until ready to serve. Shell a pound of roasted peanuts. Put them among the lettuce leaves on individual plates. Pour over a French dressing.

Banana Pie—Line a deep earthen pie dish with a thin crust. Fill it three-fourths full with bananas sliced crosswise and thin. Cover thickly with sugar, add the strained juice of a large lemon and dot with bits of butter. Put on a lattice crust and bake in a quick oven for twenty-five minutes.

Health Notes.

The eye itself needs daily care and an eye cup is as necessary as a toothbrush. Many believe in pure, cold water, but some oculists do not agree to this idea, and recommend that a weak solution of boracic acid be used.

The peanut is a mine of riches, containing more protein, or lean meat value, than any other nut known and a immense store of fat, so that as a food it is a rich treasure, but it should be recognized and used as a solid food and not as a between meal tidbit, for it is anything but a delicate or light food. This however, may be said of all nuts, and one should avoid overloading the system with them, for by this is indigestion formed and undeserved reproach to nuts as food.

Investigations made in regard to weight, both over weight and underweight, show interesting results. The physician who has made this study finds that the mortality rate increases with the increase of weight—above the normal. But leanness seems far more to be dreaded than slight overweight. Lean people are six times as likely as plump people to contract tuberculosis. Among 2,500 people who have been studied not one overweight lived to be eighty years old; two underweights, however, lived to the age of 90.

A Stitch In Time.

If you mean to save your sheets and pillow slips and towels, you must give them a glance before they go into the laundress' hands. Often a stitch set then will mend a little break that washing would develop into a hole. The hemstitching of a towel which has begun to break may be caught up in two minutes now. If you wait until the towel comes home you will find the hem hanging in a strip which will require an hour's task if it is to be repaired properly.

Add a sprig of mint to the water in which you boil your potatoes and an odd and delicious flavor will be imparted to them. A sprig of mint added to your lemonade makes it delightful and refreshing.

Table Conversation.

The table is often the only place where the family are all together during the day, and while the weather is hot the conversation is liable to be irritable. To avoid this introduce topics that are cheerful, interesting and instructive. A meal that is seasoned with cheerfulness is more easily digested than one during which the silence is broken only by the clatter of the tableware.

A family that is much interested in church work has a pleasant custom. The daily reading from the Bible in connection with the Sunday school lesson is read each morning at the breakfast table.

As a rule long anecdotes or a continuous stream of chatter from one person are not appreciated. When selecting subjects for conversation avoid descriptions of illness, accidents and death and news items savoring of "blood and thunder." Gossip and growling are not pleasant and much less so at the table, as both are apt to become mere fault finding and extend beyond the table in course of time. Rejoicing over Mr. Jones' good crops and sympathy for Mr. Brown's bad luck is not gossip.

The food served is not so important as the frame of mind in which we come to the table, because "Better is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox and hatred therewith." Loud talking should be avoided unless some members of the family are deaf. Then it is well to practice speaking in a slow even tone.

TROUT ABOUND IN ILLINOIS.

Thousands of Eggs Sent to Brooks in Lake and McHenry Counties.

The spring brooks of Lake and McHenry counties will be richly replenished with trout this year, according to information given out from the office of the Illinois fish and game commission.

Twenty-five thousand brook trout eggs have just been received from the Federal hatchery at Leadville, Col. These eggs are now being hatched at the Spring Grove hatchery. The fry from these eggs, together with 50,000 rainbow trout fry already hatched, will be distributed throughout Lake and McHenry counties in the spring and summer. These are the only counties in the state in which there are many good spring brooks.

The state fisheries bureau is planning to raise and distribute this year 40,000,000 black perch, 1,000,000 black bass, 60,000 brook and rainbow trout, and 15,000,000 buffalo trout fry.

Making the Home Comfy

How to Sleep Like a Post.

A sufferer from insomnia retails a number of counsels he has received, of which the first comes from the poet M.Leconte, who says:

"Open your windows wide. Lie with your head as low as possible and you will sleep like a post."

Another well known man writes: "Accustom yourself to take an hour or two's rest in a deck chair after every meal. Take down from your shelves some old fashioned novel of which you have an affectionate remembrance as one of the joys of your youth, and read it while you are in your desk chair. The more you are wearied by it the better you will sleep. The secret of a good night is not to tire yourself out in the evening, but to idle away the time, to get comfortably bored until the time comes for going to bed. The more your brain is dulled, the better night you will have.

"An important point tho a difficult one, is to avoid any dread of insomnia. Personally I derive benefit, tho it may just have the opposite effect on another person, from calculating the multiples of 2 or 3 as far as I can go; thus 2—4—8—16—32, etc. Or else I count elephants; one elephant and one elephant make two elephants, two elephants and one elephant make three elephants, etc.

"Finally knock off your black coffee, even your morning cup on rising, and take no meat in the evening. For lunch eat nothing but fruit, stewed for preference, and for dinner a vegetable soup, vermicelli, mashed potatoes and one or two biscuits.

"If this does not do the trick, as a last heroic remedy put a damp napkin round your head at night covered with a piece of oilskin and tied on with a bandage. Sleep should come in ten minutes. But I look upon this device as calculating in the long run to impede the natural action of the organs of the body.

Another of my fellow sufferers recommends magnetism, which he says has cured him after ten applications. Another writes: "No drug should be used except in the case of very obstinate insomnia, when it is necessary, at all costs to get three good nights. No other person should be in the room. The sound of their sleeping is irritating. Smoke very little in the evening and abstain from all stimulant—tea, coffee, grog, etc. Don't read in bed. If sleep refuses to come, get up for a few minutes and occupy yourself with some trifling duties, such as arranging papers, folding up your clothes, washing your hands. Don't let business come into your head. Don't mind a slight feeling of chill and get into bed again at the end of ten or twelve minutes.

"If in spite of all this, sleep refuses to come, try reading. But don't read anything lively or interesting. In my own case it is very rare that insomnia does not succumb to two or three pages of Plato's 'Phaedo.'"

An eminent doctor of Lyons says much the same thing. Another suggests: "Count slowly from 1 upward. It is very rare one gets up to 200 without going off to sleep. It is on record, however, that one victime got up to 16,987, and then it was time for him to get up.

Pithy Points

This would be a happy world if we could only believe everything we say.

If we could only recognise our duty we should be in a position to dodge it.

A man may be a good talker and still have serious impediments in his thoughts.

Nothing is easier to understand than how we couldn't make the mistakes we see other people make.

Moral suasion is all right in its way, but there are times when it should be backed up with a gun.

ALL AROUND THE FARM

UNCLE SAM'S HOG CHOLERA ADVICE

In a recent bulletin from Washington the Department of Agriculture makes the following concise suggestions for the benefit of farmers:—

To Keep Hog Cholera Out of the Herd:

1. Locate your hog lots and pastures away from streams and public highways, and do not allow the hogs to run free range.

2. Do not visit your neighbor or allow him to visit you, if either of you have hog cholera on your premises.

3. Do not drive into hog lots when returning from market or after driving on public highways.

4. Do not use hog lots for yarding wagons and farm implements.

5. Do not place newly purchased stock, stock secured or loaned for breeding purposes, or stock exhibited at county fairs with your herd. Keep such stock quarantined at least two weeks, and use care to prevent carrying infection from these to other pens in feeding and attending stock.

6. Burn to ashes or cover with quicklime and bury under 4 feet of earth all dead animals and the viscera removed from animals at butchering time. They attract the attention of buzzards, dogs, etc., which are liable to carry hog cholera infection.

7. Confine your dogs and do not keep pigeons unless you confine them.

To Rid the Premises of Infection:

Remove all manure and saturate with quicklime.

Wallow holes and cesspools should be filled in, drained, or fenced off.

WINTERING THE BROOD SOW.

I consider that there is no other place so well fitted for the successful wintering of brood sows as a good sized woodlot. With such a place and a house erected for them at some convenient spot in which they can sleep and go when the weather is extremely cold the conditions are simply ideal. Unfortunately I have no woodlot on my farm and consequently I have to winter my sows in a different manner.

It is of the greatest importance that sows be kept dry and warm. It is my custom to keep them enclosed during the greater portion of the winter in some one of my fields which I expect to break up during the coming season. This is usually a tough sod of clover and timothy which the hogs harm little even though they root and dig some.

In a ten acre field of this kind I now have ten brood sows. I have comfortable quarters provided for them in the form of well equipped "A" shaped hog nests, built roomy and comfortable for all kinds of weather, and set upon high ground where the quarters will be dry at all times. The hogs can have all the necessary exercise and if they refuse to take the proper amount of it, I endeavor to give it to them by feeding them at some distance from their nesting quarters, thus compelling them to go back and forth for their daily rations.

I find alfalfa one of the best of feeds for the in-pig sow during the winter. I feed it to them both dry and steamed. Steamed alfalfa is given when the weather is very inclement, but on bright days when the weather is not very cold, the alfalfa is fed dry.

In steaming I place the alfalfa in a large kettle, pour water over it and cook until tender. The sows will consume every morsel. I also feed some corn but not much of it. Corn is too fattening for pregnant animals and is only needed to help maintain heat and balance up other portions of the ration. The sows also get the kitchen slops and some milk mixed with bran and oil meal in moderate quantities.

Proper feeding is more important than any other one thing. If the animals do not get enough of the necessary elements to maintain their own bodies and at the same time build up the bodies of the pigs they are carrying the pigs will be small, weak and few in number. The ration should possess a large amount of protein, which element is demanded more than any other.

I am very careful about the water supply for my sows. I want it to be just as pure as that I drink myself. It makes no difference how much water may be supplied in their feed, hogs need clear water to drink just the same. On very cold days I warm their drinking water and also the sloppy portion of their feed. They are glad it's fixed that way and I know it does them more good than when given cold.

Every farm should be named. Every farmer ought have a printed letterhead and return envelopes.

BIRDS FEAR AND SUSPECT.

Crow, Burroughs Says, Is Embodiment of Caution and Cunning.

Fear and suspicion are almost constant companions of most of the wild creatures, John Burroughs writes in Harper's Magazine. Even the crow, who has no natural enemies that I know of, is the very embodiment of caution and cunning. That peculiar wing gesture when he alights or walks about the fields—how expressive it is! It is a little flash or twinkle of black plumes that tells you how alert and on his guard he is. It is a difficult problem to settle why the crow is so suspicious and cunning, since he has few or no natural enemies. No creature seems to want his flesh, tough and unsavory as it evidently is, and we can hardly attribute it to his contact with man, as we can the wildness of the hawk, because on the whole, mankind is rather friendly to the crow. His suspicion seems ingrained, and probably involves some factor or factors of his biological history that we are ignorant of.

On the whole, it is only the birds and animals that are preyed upon that show excessive caution and fear. One can well understand how the constant danger of being eaten does not contribute to the ease and composure of any creature, and why those which are so beset are in a state of what we call nervousness most of the time. Behold the small rodents—rats, mice, squirrels, rabbits, wood-chucks and the like—they act as if they felt the eyes of the mink or the weasel or the cat or the hawk upon them all the time.

Among the birds some are much more nervous and "panicky" than others. The woodpeckers are less so than the thrushes and finches; the jays less than the starlings and game birds. The seed-eaters and fruit-eaters are probably preyed upon much more than the purely insect or vermin eaters, because doubtless their flesh is sweeter.

Birds of prey have few enemies apart from man. Among the land animals we ourselves prefer the flesh of the vegetable eaters, and the carnivora do the same. We all want to get as near to the vegetable as we can, even in our meat eating.

ONE POUND OF RAISINS WORTH SIX OF APPLES

One pound of raisins represents a food value equal to any of the following: One and one-third pounds of beef, one pound of bread, four pounds of fish, two pounds of eggs, six pounds of apples, five pounds of bananas.

There are all sorts of ways to fix them. Boil them, put them in various kinds of breads, use them for sandwich fillers, make them into little raisin-nut bon-bons. Soak the raisins in cold water for three hours, then, slowly simmer until they are restored to the grape form. They are more delicious than most stewed fruit, and the juice which is cooked out is identical in chemical constituents with grape juice, and has distinct tonic value. In the south the children clamor for raisin corn bread, which the darky mammies make with great skill.

A slice of this highly nutritious food supplies all the demands of the hungry little folks, for it is both wholesome and sweet and much better than the white "bread and sugar" and "bread and jelly" which makes the between meal luncheon of so many youngsters.

LONG BEDSHEET LAW GENERALLY OBSERVED

Madison, Wis.—(Special). — The long bedsheet law, formerly a topic of jest, has come into its own. State hotel inspectors report than 95 per cent of the commercial hotels in the state and 50 per cent of the rest now comply with it. When the old linen supply of the remaining 50 per cent is worn out, it must be replaced by sheets of the full length. The state hotel rules say that wornout bedding should be discarded entirely. The top sheet, according to the state law, must not be less than ninety-six inches long after being laundered, The under sheet must be long enough to cover the mattress completely and fold under on sides and ends.

PROGRESS OF THE LINCOLN HIGHWAY

Complete Story of What Has Been Accomplished by Joy and His Associates

$2,250,000 NOW EXPENDED

Work During the Second Year Has Been Concentrated at Three Points in the Country

The Lincoln Highway association has issued a booklet entitled "A Record of Consistent Progress on the Lincoln Highway," in which is given a complete story of what has been accomplished by President Henry B. Joy and his associates during the year. Practically every state traversed by the coast to coast automobile highway has taken up the matter and construction work is under way all along the line, something like $2,250,000 having already been spent.

The work during the second year has been concentrated upon three points, the marking of the route with the familiar red, white and blue bands, the rapid improvement in hard surface material and the dissemination of educational literature aiming to mold public opinion to the idea of expending public funds in a logical, sane and efficient way upon roads leading from some definite point to some other equally definite point, and built of material which allows of constant use 365 days in the year.

Many Miles Marked.

Practically the entire 3,384 miles from New York to San Francisco are now marked in a way to enable tourists to find their way without asking questions. Mr. Joy makes acknowledgment of the assistance rendered in this direction by automobile clubs, good roads associations, boards of commerce and other civic societies, in many instances the placing of signs being done under the auspices of these bodies. Further acknowledgment is also made of the assistance rendered by the press in stirring up local sentiment along the route.

In the matter of hard surface roads, it is stated that the conditions have improved in every state through which the highway passes. In Ohio alone $350,000 has been spent this year on the Lincoln highway, and the counties through which the road passes have further obligated themselves to the expenditure of $610,000 for next year. In New Jersey the highway between Jersey City and Trenton is perfect for its entire length, every mile being concrete or macadam.

Work in Pennsylvania.

In Pennsylvania efforts have been largely devoted to the abolition of toll roads and grade crossings. Legislation now advocated is expected to remove all toll charges on the highway in Pennsylvania, while the public service commission has undertaken to remove all grade crossings and sharp turns. Some $510,000 has been expended in this state on the Lincoln highway in the past eighteen months.

The progress of the work in Indiana, a state which has no highway authorities, has been notable. Sixty-eight miles of concrete road are either under construction or have been bonded for. Two hundred thousand dollars was spent at South Bend, Ind., while seven miles of concrete road were laid at Fort Wayne and ten miles near Elkhart. All of this has been built in accordance with Lincoln highway specifications. The association has also placed $2,500 worth of cement in Indiana during the year.

What Is Being Done in Iowa.

Iowa is all ready for the hard-surfacing of its roads and a vast sum has been spent during the year. The work of grading, crowning, draining and filling has been done along the entire route of the highway through this state. As soon as legislation can be had permitting the counties to anticipate their road revenues by bond issues, the work of laying the hard-surfaced roads will begin. About $125,000 was spent in the state on the highway during the year.

Five sections of concrete construction are now under way in Nebraska, and in addition a vast amount of grading, levelling, widening and straightening of the route has taken place. Fifty thousand dollars have been spent for a bridge over the North Platte river. The Wyoming section of the highway, while containing no stretches of hard-surface road, has received particular attention in the matter of maintenance, some $250,000 having been spent during the past year.

In Utah and Nevada, states of tremendous area and sparse population, more than $75,000 has been spent during the year and the desert roads to the extent of about 75 per cent are kept in good condition. The maximum amount of aid will be needed in these two states, where a large amount of the land is owned by the government. About $50,000 was spent in Nevada during the year.

Touring on Increase.

The highway from Lake Tahoe on the Nevada-California border, to San Francisco, is practically in boulevard condition. Permanent concrete construction is becoming the rule in California.

In justification of the tremendous amount of effort being expended on the Lincoln highway it is pointed out that there has been an increase in the volume of transcontinental touring varying from 25 per cent to 600 per cent. An official of the California State Automobile association estimates that 25,000 cars have entered the state this year, the majority coming over the Lincoln highway.

Plans for the future contemplate the continuance of the educational work. Every effort will be brought to bear on the authorities of the cities, townships, counties and states through which the route passes toward the end of the completion of the highway. The financial problems of the association will receive the same consideration as in the past. It is expected and hoped that during the year additional founders will be found. The association looks forward to a third year of progress and anticipates the growing public support of every section of the country.

SAYS CHILD LABOR BILL WILL LIKELY BE PASSED

Progressives to Aid in Securing the Reform, and Thus Add to Their Notable Achievements.

Washington.—Congress probably will find time and the inclination this winter to pass a child labor bill. Its friends suggest that this measure is a fit companion for the preparedness bill, and the argument, which is plain on its face, is that child labor legislation will safeguard the future manhood and the future womanhood of the nation.

When a reactionary Congress, reactionary in both parties, nine or ten years ago first had the subject of child labor brought before it in direct bill form there was a majority sneer that any one could hope that a measure so radical, so "subversive of national good order and discipline," ever could find a place on the statute-books. Progress has been having its day, and now there are few reactionaries of either party who care to stand on their feet to oppose a measure charged as is this one with humanitarianism and Americanism.

The fact that men do not dare openly to antagonize the child labor legislation does not mean that the bill necessarily will have an easy path through either house. Men can employ subtle things to defeat bills not to their liking. Technicalities and what Charles Reade called the postponement swindle frequently can be depended upon to work evil. The friends of the legislation, however, this year are alert and will turn to the light, when they discover them, the plans of men who think it is a holy thing that children should be worked to death in order that multimillionaires may add more millions to their hoards.

The child labor bill is championed today in part by Democrats. When Albert J. Beveridge of Indiana introduced his child-saving measure in the Senate some years ago, most of the Democrats were as much opposed to it as were most of the Republicans. The Republicans, who nearly all were reactionaries, objected to its passage because "it would hurt the industries of the country"; that is, those industries that exploit themselves by levying taxes on the flesh, blood and souls of childhood. The Democrats opposed it for the same reason, but of course, they found other reasons to put forward in public, the chief one being that a federal law on the subject would interfere with states' rights.

David J. Lewis of Maryland is the chairman of the House committee on labor, which has the children's bill before it for consideration. An agreement has just been reached by which the measure will be given consideration before other measures. Edward Keating, Democrat, of Colorado, probably will be in charge of the bill when it reaches the floor of the House. He is strong in his advocacy of the measure. Last year the child labor bill failed to get through Congress. It was a short session and things were so tied up in the Senate that little or nothing could be done outside of the appropriation bills and measures for which the President was pressing. This year conditions are different.

The basis of the child labor legislation is to forbid the entrance into interstate commerce of any goods in whose manufacture the labor of children under a certain age has entered. In some of the southern states the greatest child labor abuses exist. The North, however, is not wholly nor anything like wholly exempt from the charge of exploiting the labor of the little ones for the profit of the manufacturers.

Southern members of Congress have opposed child labor legislation for reasons that are plain, but it is needless to say that these reasons never have been given honest expression. There has always been used some states' rights quibble or something else in order to clog the progress of this humanitarian legislation.

WAR BRINGS OUT LADY AUTO DRIVER

Fair Chauffeur Gives Serious Advice to Women Who Make Autoing a Profession

WARNS ABOUT DIFFICULTIES

Declares that Weaker Sex Must at the Start Prove that She is a Competent Motorist

There is a reflection of the war's widespread disturbance of the ordinary processes of life in the following article in the London Daily Mail by G. Ivy Saunders, who styles herself "A Lady Chauffeur," giving serious advice to women who wish to embark on that profession:

"The old order changes slowly, and only with infinite difficulty in this old country of ours; the woman who chooses to make motoring a profession must look for breakers ahead in every direction.

"Considering that the day is still alive in our memory when the petrol engine was distrusted as a means of locomotion and regarded as a suspicious alien, it is not surprising that the idea of the lady chauffeur will for a short while be met with much disapproval. It remains for the woman to prove herself competent and careful in driving, efficient in the care of the engine, and, above all, reliable and serious in her work.

"This is going to be a great task, for it seems but yesterday (certainly it is not more than a year) when a woman driving a car of any size was a most unusual sight and created quite a stir. Today there are hundreds of ladies handling cars with the confidence of a man and navigating the traffic with extraordinary skill. The fact, however, remains that it is experience alone that can make the really competent driver. There are but a few women who have this experience, and so to the great majority remains the worthy task of pioneering this great chance for hundreds of women in the future.

Not Too Strenuous.

"The only way for this to be done successfully is to dispel the general idea that motoring is too strenuous as a profession for the fair sex. Therefore let the woman who is not both mentally and physically perfectly sound stand aside and be driven—not attempt to drive. Certainly, driving and the general care of a car are a strain to both mind and body. The feminine spirit is very apt to allow enthusiasm to run away with discretion and liable to overdo. The lady chauffeur should avoid this above all things; take up her work seriously and soberly, realizing, ere she commences, that while driving a car for pleasure is unrivaled as a sport, it is a far different matter as a work. She must be prepared to face cheerfully and with determination the cold, yet winter days in store.

"With that malign influence that certainly governs inanimate objects to contend with, one can always expect magneto trouble, burst tires, and choked petrol pipes—and the thousand and one petty troubles—to come along just on the day when all the world goes wrong and aching heads are to the fore.

"Disappointments will be many. An early rising (for hours that might have been spent in well-earned rest) to clean the engine will often be rewarded by plug troubles and squeaks; an extra polish on the brass will invariably insure a wet day.

"There are but few cars possessed of sufficient sense of decency to run out of petrol within reasonable walking distance of a supply, unless it be in the middle of Bond street, and when one is open to derision from the men who, having failed to answer the call to fight, are ever ready to jeer and laugh at the woman who is helping at home.

"Another great difficulty to be overcome is the attitude of the chauffeurs with whom one will naturally be thrown in daily contact. The majority are careful not to overlook their thinking capacities, and the only thing that occurs to them is that women are doing their work. They fail to realize that today men must fight and women must work for the old country; and so instead of the goodfellowship usually existing in the garage yard one is apt to find criticism and resentment. The tactful girl will soon realize that an endless stock of good humor and a smiling face will do infinitely more than the affectation of masculine clothes and manners. As long as a woman retains her femininity she will always find men ready to help her. To smoke and swagger about the garage yard may prove amusing for a time, but it will kill both respect and that inborn spirit to help.

With Right Person.

"Lastly, and therefore, of course, the most important thing that occurs to me as being an essential to make a success for the lady chauffeur is discrimination in accepting a post with the right people. Some of us are born to own cars, others to fill the omnibus—but chance has often been overindulgent to the latter and given them cars. These are the owners the lady chauffeur should avoid; for it is only the actual presence of the car at the front door that can reassure them that its possession is not but a dream, and so upon every pretext the car will be expected to be on duty. The result is, of course, inevitable, for no woman could stand the strain and no time could be spared for the engine.

"Care should be taken to choose a position with gentle people, whose kindness and consideration will always be extended in return for faithful service. The pleasure in keeping the car in perfect order will be multiplied an hundred fold.

"It is an ill wind that blows no one good, and certainly it is difficult to find one iota of benefit the great and fearful vampire—war—has brought other than giving to hundreds of women a unique opportunity in many professions in which they have been hitherto barred, particularly motoring. Remember the proof of both car and chauffeur is in the running—and where woman will realize her limitations, man will not admit any—in that fact lies the woman's strength and opportunity."

SAYS ZEPPELIN IS SUCCESSFUL.

Air Expert Tells How It Has Aided Germans.

New York.—The Zeppelin has been a great success in this war, said G. Douglas Wardrop, editor of The Aerial Age, speaking in Brooklyn on the function of the airship in war.

"The Zeppelins have been active intermittently," he said. "Only the Germans have not thought it necessary to report their secret operations for the entertainment of newspaper readers. Under cover of night, Zeppelins have preceded every important move en masse of the German armies. At every dawn they have observed the movements of the allied armies. They have sailed around behind the rear of the allies, and long distances beyond the rear, noting the oncoming reinforcements, the ever-changing position of the various lines of communication, the preparation made for the defense of a line of forts, the manning of intrenched camps, etc. They have reported what they have seen by their long-distance wireless, and they have returned to their hangars with fresh detailed information accurately mapped out and ready for use.

"The aviator has made it practically impossible to execute movements intended to surprise any considerable division of an army.

"One single 'eye of the sky' can observe the formation of an entire army corps more accurately and with less risk and in a much shorter time than a whole squadron of cavalry.

"In the next war the first great move will be in the air. The nation which has a sufficiently large fleet at her command—that is, tens of thousands of warplanes, besides scouting dirigibles—and has that fleet in a highly efficient state of organization, will be the country which will gain most of the initial advantages of any strategic movements.

"No one factor in the scheme of national preparedness will be of such tremendous utility as the adequate provision of aircraft. The testimony of, without exception, all of the men who are leading the vast conflicts in Europe, agrees when they come to state the value of the aeroplanes as the aerial eyes of the modern efficient army."

Not the least desirable kind of preparedness is a bunch of receipted bills.

Still, if it were not for the regular politicians, who would attend to the politics?

ONE CENT POSTAGE PLAN FOR CITIES

Rural Routes From the City Also to Get Rate Cut if the Proposed Bill is Passed

TWO CENT RATE TO OUTSIDE

Penny Extra in Case Letter is Overweight Also Proposed in the Measures Now Before Congress

By Frederic J. Haskin.

ONE CENT POSTAGE—Will the familiar red 2 cent stamp soon be a rarity classed with the $1 stamp and other freaks that only collectors know? The signs begin to point that way. Twenty-one bills have been introduced into the present congress providing for 1 cent postage in one form or another. If the innovation becomes law, it will be a change even more revolutionary than the introduction of the parcel post system.

The 2 cent stamp will stay with us for a while, however. Bills which have been introduced only propose the first step toward supplanting it. Perhaps the most comprehensive bill, and one that may be taken as both typical and inclusive, is the measure fathered by Representative Stafford of Wisconsin. The Stafford bill provides that letters mailed at a post office for delivery within the carrier limits of that office shall be charged a 1 cent rate. The same rate shall apply to letters sent from a city to a rural or star route served by that city's postoffice, and to letters mailed on rural routes for city delivery.

Three Cents for Overweight Letters.

Another innovation no less basic and sweeping which is provided for in the Stafford bill, and also in several others, is the rate on first class letters which go over the maximum weight of one ounce. The rate on the first ounce for such letters will still be 2 cents, when their destination is out of the local district, but the charge for each additional ounce or fraction will be only 1 cent, instead of 2 cents as heretofore. The overweight letter will be carried for 3 cents instead of 4 cents. The difference grows more striking as the envelope in question gets heavier. If papers weighing ten ounces are mailed first class today they must carry 20 cents in stamps. Under the new system the same papers can be mailed for 11 cents.

The effect of the change will be tremendous in cities of any size, where local mail forms a large percentage of the total letters handled. It will cut the cost of communication between people of the same city just in half. All the mass of monthly statements, announcements, fraternal notices, invitations, everything that fills half the letter boxes of a metropolis, will cost $1 to mail where formerly it cost $2. Incidentally and inevitably the receipts of the postoffice department will go down by several million dollars.

This will doubtless be the chief argument of the opposition when the bills come up for debate. Nobody proposes that the department shall be run as a money making concern, but when it is just managing to make ends meet it might seem inadvisable to cut a rich slice out of its receipts. The men who are behind the 1 cent postage movement, however, point out a number of illogical features in the present scheme.

The first class mail matter, the sealed envelope with a 2 cent stamp, is the source of practically all profit in the postoffice service. The first class letter is easily handled, easily sorted and its small weight makes it cheap to transport. If nothing but first class mail were handled, it would be possible to have universal 1 cent postage in the United States and still show a profit. Yet if such a universal 1 cent rate were introduced the present receipts would go down by millions.

It is obvious that there is a big profit made on first class mail, and a consideration of the balance sheet of the postoffice department makes it equally obvious that this profit must be eaten up by some other branch of the service.

Carrying Magazines Expensive.

The loss in transporting and delivering mail matter, according to some of the congressmen in favor of the 1 cent idea, comes largely in carrying the magazines. Then there is the mail of the government itself, the official business of senators and representatives, of the executive departments and of the federal courts, which travels free, under frank. When the grand totals of receipts and expenditures are balanced against each other, there is not much on the profit side.

The 1 cent postage propagandists admit the small margin of profit, but they point out that the real issue is: Who pays the bill? Many persons maintain that magazines are entitled to something in the way of special traveling privileges in consideration of their large educational value. There is no doubt that the significant speeches of congressmen should be distributed by the government through the districts affected by the matter under consideration. Even the traditional package of garden seeds fulfils a purpose important enough to entitle it to a pass in the mail car. But who pays the bill?

Let Nation as a Whole Pay.

Why, say the advocates of 1 cent postage, should John Brown, whose business is of such a nature that he has to mail a thousand sealed envelopes on the first of every month, be compelled to pay for the carrying of magazines and speeches and garden seeds? Yet the profit on John Brown's first class mail is what enables the government to carry the seeds and speeches free. If the government, representing the nation at large, sees fit to carry certain classes of mail matter at a loss, in view of their educational or other value, then the nation as a whole should pay for it, and not that single class which happens to make use of the first class mail service.

Such is the contention of the statesmen backing 1 cent postage. They say that for the government to regard the profits and losses of the postoffice department as a whole, without a recognition of which branch is earning and which branch falling behind, is bad bookkeeping as well as class discrimination.

The application of the zone system idea, which made its first appearance in this country with parcel post under Stafford's plan, is applied also to letter mail. The country would be divided into two zones for letter mail, a local zone with a 1 cent rate and a foreign zone with a 2 cent rate. That a series of different charges for letters according to the distance of their destination would result from this innovation is highly improbable. To classify each out of town letter into the proper zone would be an impossible task.

Effect of Overweight Charge.

The other provision of the Stafford bill and of some of the other measures providing for a 1 cent an ounce overweight charge is expected to have far-reaching results. In support of the innovation these congressmen point out that the cost of handling a two ounce letter is only infinitesimally greater than the cost of handling an envelope weighing an ounce. To double the postal rate for the additional ounce is to increase a profit that might already be regarded as excessive.

The extra charge of 1 cent will be a sufficient inducement to the public to keep the weight of its correspondence down as much as possible. On the other hand, it will be cheaper under the new arrangement to send one heavy letter than two light letters, whereas today the postage is the same in either case. By combining as many communications as possible in one envelope, the public will save money. The same process will bring profit to the postoffice, because it can handle one 3 cent envelope twice as cheaply as it formerly handled two 2 cent letters.

The country as a whole is taking a real interest in the penny postage question for the first time. The ranks of the One Cent Letter leagues are swelling.

GIANT AEROPLANE USED BY ENGLAND

New 800-Horse-power Machine Will Carry Nine Men, Besides Explosives and Guns.

New York.—An 800-horse-power aeroplane, with a car capable of carrying nine men besides explosives and guns, is the latest in British aircraft construction according to Charles H. Day, chief engineer of the Sloan Aeroplane Co. who has recently returned from Europe.

Mr. Day stated that the allied flying corps had obtained the mastery of the air of the western front.

Four distinct types of aeroplanes, he said, were now in use, each class for a specific purpose. These include a fairly fast, stable aeroplane equipped with wireless, for artillery fire control; a fast cruising machine, with a speed of from 90 to 100 miles an hour and carrying two guns, to drive off German aeroplanes and Zeppelins; a fast scout machine with a speed of more than 100 miles an hour, carrying one or two men and a small gun for defense, and a bombardment machine, with a comparatively low speed of sixty miles and tremendous lifting capacity. The last named class, he said, could carry a large load of explosives and mounted guns of as large a caliber as two inches.

Swineford Is Winner

In last week's issue we made the statement that George Swineford was represented at the Triangle Poultry Show at Ft. Wayne and today we can again mention the fact that George put St. Joe on the map for prize Barred Rocks, bebause he won first in every entry made. In the first place he did not enter with the thought of cleaning up on the prizes. When the judges had scored the birds the prizes were awarded as follows to the Swineford birds:—

1st. on Cock bird.
1st. on Cockerel.
1st. on Pullets.
1st. and 3rd. on Hen.
1st. on Young Pen.
$20 Trophy Cup for the best display.

Had he made one more entry a $30.00 gold watch would have been awarded him. George is perfectly satisfied with the results however but next year he will make them all sit up and take notice.

To give you an idea of the excellency of Mr. Swineford's Barred Rocks, and the demand for them, he has sold several hens at $25.00 each. The eggs from his pens are also in demand and are engaged a head for hatching purposes. The raising of good blooded stock is a science and is not gained in a short time, it takes years of hard work and experimenting and now Mr. Swineford is able to reap the rewards of efforts in the past.

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES

Our pioneer fathers used to believe that the only good Indian was "a dead Indian;" we believe that the only decent saloon is a dead saloon.

The desire to have other people live according to our ideas seems to be inherent in many of us. No one can explain why we are not willing to let other people live their lives as they see fit, but so radical do some of us become in regulating others that we try to force them by law to live as we think they should live. It may be that this is a survival in us of the old Puritain idea that each man is his brother's keeper. It is easy to see to what absurdities we would come if this idea was put into effect. Each of us would try to regulate our neighbors' conduct, and they, in turn would try to regulate ours according to their ideas. The inevitable conflict would be productive of more evils than we originally tried to overcome. No man is good enough, or so certain in his virtue that he can force other men to be like him. The very fact that he does try to do so shows that, he is like the Pharisee who prayed at the front of the Temple and called all men to witness he was a good and just man. To be self-satisfied with our own virtue is egotism—not virtue. To try to force other people to be virtuous as we think we are virtuous, is the height of egotism and pride which is one of the great sins. The rulers who persecuted the early Christians were trying by law to force their beliefs on an unwilling body of men who believed differently. The result was the martyrdom of thousands of good men and women. Christ suffered and died because he insisted on living His life as he chose and not as the Jewish rulers wished Him to. The whole Christian world has been built on this determination. To try to enforce morality by law is un-Christian, uncharitable and diametrically opposed to the principles of every great Christian teacher.

LADIES! LOOK YOUNG, DARKEN GRAY HAIR

Use Grandma's Sage Tea and Sulphur Recipe and nobody can tell. Brush it through hair.

Gray hair, however handsome, denotes advancing age. We all know the advantages of a youthful appearance. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray and looks dry, wispy and scraggly, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred-fold.

Don't stay gray! Look young! Either prepare the tonic at home or get from any drug store a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." Thousands of folks recommend this ready-to-use preparation, because it darkens the hair beautifully and removes dandruff, stops scalp itching and falling hair; besides, no one can possibly tell, as it darkens so naturally and evenly. You moisten a sponge or soft brush with it, drawing this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, its natural color is restored and it becomes thick, glossy and lustrous, and you appear years younger.

SALTS IF KIDNEYS OR BLADDER BOTHER

Kidney and Bladder weakness result from uric acid, says a noted authority. The kidneys filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it often remains to irritate and inflame, causing a burning, scalding sensation, or setting up an irritation at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread, the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse; again, there is difficulty in avoiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it, because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is really one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast, continue this for two or three days. This will neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs which then act normally again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by uric acid irritation. Jad Salts is splendid for kidneys and causes no bad effects whatever.

Revenue tax In Indiana

That Indiana has given a substantial sum to the grand total of $87,000,000 through the emergency act of October 22, 1914, familiarly known as the special war tax, is shown in the figures compiled by Peter J. Kruyer, revenue collector of the sixth district, which comprises 59 counties in the state. The figures show that $1,175,144.71 was collected in this district, which includes DeKalb county, for the 14 months the act has been in effect.

The emergency act became effective November 1, 1914, and was originally intended for a period of 14 months and was to expire December 31, 1915, but through joint resolution by congress on December 7, 1915, the time was extended until December 31, 1916. Due to the fact that the government fiscal year expires June 30, the payment of such a tax can be made only every six months, this condition having caused much confusion among those who wished to buy the stamps for the entire year and could not understand why they were not permitted to do so.

The figures compiled show that by an additional tax of 50 cents on each barrel of beer the government realized $419,616.07. As the regular tax on a barrel of beer is $1 it will be seen that the government realized $1,258,848.21 from the sixth district in Indiana during the 14 months on beer alone.

An interesting fact is noted in the item of theaters, from which the government realized $29,332.55. In this connection it is explained that approximately 3,000 theaters are operated in the sixth district with approximately 37 moving picture houses to one regular theater. Should the regular theaters which have been changed to moving picture houses be taken into consideration the ratio would be much greater.

During the first six months the revenue from circuses was only $58.34, while the last six months show a total of $429.15. The first eight months covered a period from November to June when circuses were in their winter quarters, while the last six months included the circus season.—Evening Star.

DRINK HOT TEA FOR A BAD COLD

Get a small package of Hamburg Breast Tea, or as the German folks call it, "Hamburger Brust Thee," at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the tea, put a cup of boiling water upon it, pour through a sieve and drink a teacup full at any time during the day or before retiring. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieving congestion. Also loosens the bowels, thus driving a cold from the system.

Try it the next time you suffer from a cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

THE CHIEF LEGATEE

by ANNA KATHERINE GREEN.

AUTHOR OF "THE LEAVENWORTH CASE," "BEHIND CLOSED DOORS" ETC.

SYNOPSIS

Chapters I to III—A few hours after marriage the wife of Roger J. Ransom is missing from the hotel where they have just registered. A detective, Mr. Gerrage, is called into the case. The bride, formerly Miss Georgian Hazen, becomes alarmed over something which happened while passing down the aisle from the altar.

While standing at the hotel desk with the groom the woman disappears. A man with a twisted face was seen whispering to the bride at the reception. Evidently flight was meditated after that meeting.

The bell boy noted peculiarities about the woman and was the only one who noticed her slip away. The detective claims the maid was a substitute for the wife, and rode from the house to the hotel while the wife left by the basement door in the maid's clothes.

Chapters IV to V—The woman who left by the basement door was traced to a meeting with the man with a broken jaw. Ransom receives a note from his wife who claims to have found a long lost twin sister, supposed to have been dead. The twin is of unbalanced mind and stone deaf. Ransom meets the man with the broken jaw and who declares himself to be Mrs. Ransom's brother who was in need of money.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

"She wrote me out a check," was the simple but cold answer.

Mr. Ransom felt the failure of his attempt and stole a glance at Gerridge.

The doubtful smile he received was not very encouraging. The same thought had evidently struck both. The money in the bag was a blind—she had carried her check-book with her and so could draw on her account for whatever she wished. But under what name? Her maiden one or his? Ransom determined to find out.

"I do not begrudge you the money," said he, "but Mrs. Ransom's signature had changed a few hours previous to her making out this check. Did she remember this?"

"And you cashed the check?"

"No, sir; I am not in such immediate need of money as that. I have it still, but I shall endeavor to cash it to-morrow. Some question may come up as to her sanity, and I do not choose to lose the only money she has ever been in a position to give me."

"Mr. Hazen, you harp on the irresponsible condition of her mind. Did you see any tokens of this in the interview you had together?"

"No; she seemed sane enough then; a little shocked and troubled, but quite sane."

"You knew that she had stolen away from me—that she had resorted to a most unworthy subterfuge in order to hold this conversation with you?"

"No; I had asked her to come, and on that very afternoon if possible, but I never knew what means she took for doing so; I didn't ask and she didn't say."

"But she talked of her marriage? She must have said something about an event which is usually considered the greatest in a woman's life."

"Yes, she spoke of it."

"And of me?"

"Yes, she spoke of you."

"And in what terms? I cannot refrain from asking you, Mr. Hazen, I am in such ignorance as to her real attitude towards me; her conduct is so mysterious; the reasons she gives for it is so puerile."

"She said nothing against you or her marriage. She mentioned both, but not in a manner that would add to your or my knowledge of her intentions. My sister disappointed me, sir. She was much less open than I wished. All that I could make out of her manner and conversation was the overpowering shock she felt at seeing me again and seeing me so changed. She didn't even tell me when and where we might meet again. When she left, she was as much lost to me as she was to you, and I am no less interested in finding her than you are yourself. I had no idea she did not mean to return to you when she went away from this hotel."

Mr. Ransom sprang upright in an agitation the other may have shared, but of which he gave no token.

"Do you mean to say," he asked, "that you cannot tell me where the woman you call your sister is now?"

"No more than you can give me the same necessary information in regard to your wife. I am waiting like yourself to hear from her—and waiting with as little hope."

"But this is not like my wife," protested Ransom, hesitating to accuse the other of falsehood, yet evidently doubting him from the bottom of his heart. "Why deceive us both? She was never a disingenuous woman."

"I have candidly answered all your questions, whether agreeable or otherwise," observed Hazen, "and the fact that I am as much shocked as yourself by these mad and totally incredible statements of hers about a newly recovered sister should prove to you that she is not following any lead of mine in this dissemination of a barefaced falsehood."

There was truth in this which both Mr. Ransom and Gerridge felt obliged to own. Yet they were not satisfied, even after Mr Hazen, almost against Mr. Ransom's will, had established his claim to the relationship he professed, by various well-attested documents he had at hand.

"The maze is at its thickest," Ransom remarked as he left a few minutes later with the perplexed Gerridge.

CHAPTER VI.

The Lawyer.

"HUNT up her man of business," suggested Gerridge, "and see what he can do for you. She cannot get along without money; nor could that statement of hers have got into the papers without somebody's assistance. Since she did not get it from the fellow we have just left, she must have had it from the only other person she would dare confide in."

Ransom answered by immediately hailing a down-town car.

The interview which followed was certainly a remarkable one. At first Lawyer Harper would say nothing, declaring that his relations with Mrs. Ransom were of a purely business and confidential nature. But by degrees, moved by the persuasive influence of Mr. Ransom's candor and his indubitable right to consideration, he allowed himself to admit that he had seen Mrs. Ransom during the last three days and that he had every reason to believe that there was a twin sister in the case, and that all Mrs. Ransom's eccentric conduct was attributable to this fact and the overpowering sense of responsibility which it seemed to have brought to her—a result which would not appear strange to those who knew the sensitiveness of her nature and the delicate balance of her mind.

Mr. Ransom recalled the tenor of her strange letter on this subject, but was not convinced. He inquired of Mr. Harper if he had heard her say anything about the equally astounding fact of a returned brother, and when he found that this was mere jargon to Mr. Harper, he related what he knew of Hazen and left the lawyer to draw his own inferences.

The result was some show of embarrassment on the part of Mr. Harper. It was evident that in her consultations with him she had entirely left out all allusion to this brother. Either the man had advanced a false claim or else she was in an irresponsible condition of mind which made her see a sister where there was a brother.

Ransom made some remark indicative of his appreciation of the dilemma in which they found themselves, but was quickly silenced by the other's emphatic assertion:

"I have seen the girl; she was with Mrs. Ransom the day she came here. She sat in the adjoining room while we talked over her case in this one."

"You saw her—saw her face?"

"No, not her face; she was too heavily veiled for that. Mrs. Ransom explained why. They were too absurdly alike, she said. It awoke comment and it gave her the creeps. But their figures were identical though their dresses were different."

"So! there is some one then; the girl is not absolutely a myth."

"Far from it. Nor is the will which Mrs. Ransom has asked me to draw up for her a myth."

"Her will! she has asked you to draw up her will!"

"Yes. That was the object of her visit. She had entered the married state, she said, and wished to make a legal disposition of her property before she returned to you. She was very nervous when she said this; very nervous through all the interview. There was nothing else for me to do but comply."

"And you have drawn up this will?"

"According to her instructions, yes."

"But she has not signed it?"

"Not yet."

"But she intends to?"

"Certainly."

"Then you will see her again?"

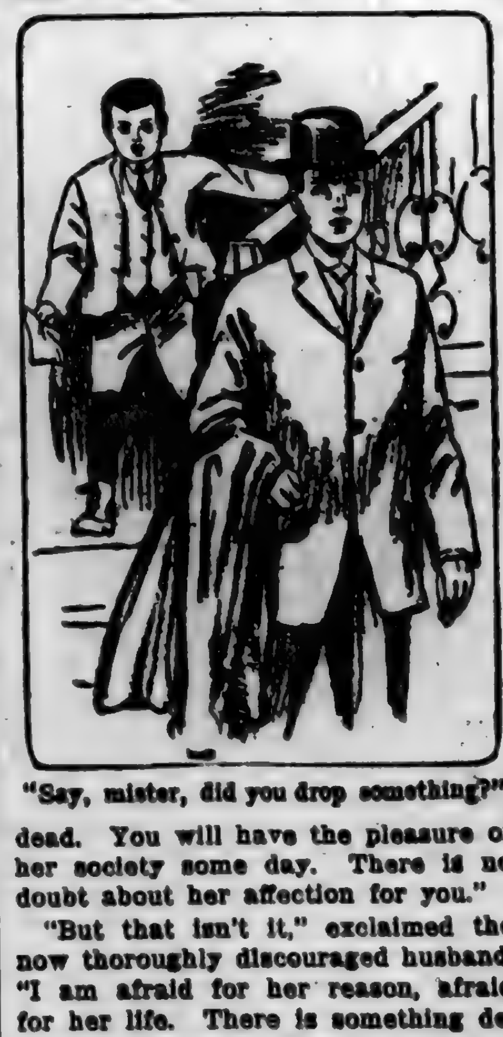
"Naturally."

"Is the time set?"

The lawyer rose to his feet. He understood the hint implied and for an instant appeared to waver. There was something very winsome about Roger Ransom; some attribute or expression which appealed especially to men.

"I wish I might help you out of your difficulty," said he. "But a client's wishes are paramount. Mrs. Ransom desired secrecy. She had every right to demand it of me."

Mr. Ransom's face fell. Hope had flashed upon him only to disappear again. The lawyer eyed him out of the corner of his eye, his mouth working slightly as he walked to and fro between his desk and the door.



"Say, mister, did you drop something?"

"Mrs. Ransom will not always feel herself hampered by a sister, or, if you prefer it, a brother who has so inconveniently come back from the dead. You will have the pleasure of her society some day. There is no doubt about her affection for you."

"But that isn't it," exclaimed the now thoroughly discouraged husband. "I am afraid for her reason, afraid for her life. There is something decidedly wrong somewhere. Don't you see that I must have an immediate interview with her if only to satisfy myself that she aggravates her own danger? Why should she make a will in this underhanded way? Does she fear opposition from me? I have a fortune equal to her own. It is something else she dreads. What? I feel that I ought to know if only to protect her against herself. I would even promise not to show myself or to speak."

"I am sorry to have to say good afternoon, Mr. Ransom. Have you any commands that I can execute for you?"

"None but to give her my love. Tell her there is not a more unhappy man in New York; you may add that I trust her affection."

The lawyer bowed. Mr. Ransom and Gerridge withdrew. At the foot of the stairs they were stopped by the shout of a small office boy behind them.

"Say, mister, did you drop something?" he called down, coming meanwhile as rapidly after them as the steepness of the flight allowed. "Mr. Harper says he found this where you gentlemen were sitting."

Mr. Ransom, somewhat startled, took the small paper offered him. It was none of his property but he held to it just the same. In the middle of a torn bit of paper he had read these words written in his own wife's hand:

HUNTER'S TAVERN,
Sitford. Connecticut.
At 9 o'clock April the 15th.

"By Jove!" he exclaimed, "no one will ever hear me say again that lawyers are devoid of heart?"

CHAPTER VII.

Rain.

MR. RANSOM had never heard of Sitford, but upon inquiry learned that it was a small manufacturing town some ten miles from the direct route of travel, to which it was only connected by a stage-coach running once a day, late in the afternoon.

What a spot for a meeting of this kind! Why chosen by her? Why submitted to by this busy New York lawyer? Was this another mystery; or had he misinterpreted Mr. Harper's purpose in passing over to him the address of this small town? He preferred to think the former. He could hardly contemplate now the prospect of failing to see her again which must follow any mistake as to this being the place agreed upon for the signing of her will.

Meanwhile he had said nothing to Gerridge. This was a hope too personal to confide in a man of his position. He would go to Sitford and endeavor to catch a glimpse of his wife there. If successful, the whole temper of his mind might change towards the situation, if not toward her. He would at least have the satisfaction of seeing her. The detective had enough to do in New York.

April the fifteenth fell on Tuesday. He was not minded to wait so long but took the boat on Monday afternoon. This landed him some time before daylight at the time-worn village from which the coach ran to Sitford. A railway connected this village with New York, necessitating no worse inconvience than crossing the river on a squat, old-fashioned ferry boat; but he calculated that both the lawyer and Mrs. Ransom would make use of this, and felt the risk would be less for him if he chose the slower and less convenient route.

He had given his name on the boat as Roger Johnston, which was true so far as it went, and he signed this same name at the hotel where he put up till morning. The place was an entirely unknown one to him and he was unknown to it.

The coach ran late in the afternoon. This was to accommodate the passengers who came by rail. But Mr. Ransom had not planned to go by coach. That would be to risk a premature encounter with his wife, or at least with the lawyer. He preferred to hire a team, and be driven there by some indifferent livery-stable man. Neither prospect was pleasing. It had been raining all night, and bade fair to rain all day. And the road—he had never seen such a road, all little pools and mud. And there were to be ten miles of this. Naturally he turned to his thoughts and they were all of her. One question in his mind was answered through his reflections. This spot was not an unknown one to her. It was connected with her childhood days. There was reason back of her choice of it as a place of meeting between her and her lawyer, or if not reason, association, and that of the tenderest kind. They finally splashed into Sitford and stopped before the tavern. The house, dripping though it was from every eave, had such a romantic air that he thought he could venture to cite other reasons for his stay there than the prosaic one of business.

When the landlady showed herself he at once gave her credit for being all he could wish in the way of credulity and good-nature, and, meeting her with the smile which had done good execution in its day, he asked if she had a room for a writer who was finishing a book, and who only asked for quiet and regular meals before his own cosy fire. This to rouse her imagination and make her amenable to his wishes for secrecy.

She was a simple soul and fell easily into the trap. In half an hour Mr. Ransom was ensconced in a pleasant room over the porch, a room which he soon learned possessed many advantages. For it not only overlooked the main entrance, but was so placed as to command a view of all the rooms on his hall. In two of those rooms he bade fair to be greatly interested, Mrs. Deo having remarked that they were being prepared for a lady who was coming that night. As he had no doubt who this lady was, he encouraged the good woman to talk, and presently had the satisfaction of hearing her say that she was very happy over this lady's coming, as she was a Sitford girl, one of the old family of Hazens, and though married now and very rich was much loved by every one in the town because she had never forgotten Sitford or Sitford people.

She was coming! He had made no mistake. And this was the place of her birth. He realized how fortunate he was, or rather how indebted he was to Mr. Harper.

CHAPTER VIII.

Elimination.

AT about three o'clock in the afternoon Mr. Ransom left his room. He meant to search the cemetery for the graves of the Hazens and see what he could learn from them.

He met three persons on his way, all of whom turned to look at him. This was in the village. On the hillside he met nobody. Wind and rain and mud were all; desolation in the prospect and all but desolation in his heart. At the brow he first caught sight of the broken stone wall which separated the old burying place from the road. There lay his path. Happily he could tread it unnoticed and unwatched. There was no one within sight, high or low.

He spent a half hour among the tombs before he struck the name he was looking for. Another ten minutes before he found those of his wife's family. Then he had his reward. On a low brown shaft he read the names of father and mother, and beneath them the following lines:

Sacred to the memory of
ANITRA
Died June 7, 1885
Aged 6 years and one day.
Of such is the Kingdom of heaven.

The twin! Georgian was mad. This record showed that her little sister lay here. Anitra,—yes, that was the name of her other half. He remembered it well. Georgian had mentioned it to him more than once. And this child, this Anitra, had been buried here for fifteen years.

Deeply indignant at his wife's duplicity, he took a look at the opposite side of the shaft where still another surprise awaited him. Here was the record of the brother; the brother he had so lately talked to and who had seemingly proven his claim to the name he now read:

ALFRED FRANCESCO
only son of
Georgian Toritti afterwards Georgian Hazen.
Lost at sea February, 1895.
Aged twenty-five years.

An odd inscription opening up conjectures of the most curious and interesting nature. But it was not this fact which struck him at the time, it was the possibility underlying the simple statement, "Lost at sea." This, as the wry-necked man had said, admitted of a possible resurrection. Here was no body. A mound showed where Anitra had been laid away; a little mound surmounted by a headstone carved with her name. But only these few words gave evidence of the young man's death, and inscriptions of this nature are sometimes false.

The conclusion was obvious. It was the brother and not the sister who had reappeared. Georgian was not only playing him false but deceiving the general public. In fact, knowingly or unknowingly, she was perpetrating a great fraud. He was inclined to think unknowingly. He began to regard with less incredulity Hazen's declaration that the shock of her brother's return had unsettled her mind.

Distressed, but no longer the prey of distracting doubt, he again examined the inscription before him and this time noticed its peculiarities. Alfred Francesco, only son of Georgian Toritti, afterwards Georgian Hazen. Afterwards! What was meant by that afterwards? That the woman had been married twice, and that this Alfred Francesco was the son of her first husband rather than of the one whose name he bore? It looked that way. There was a suggestion of Italian parentage in the Francesco which coresponded well with the decidedly Italian Toritti.

Perplexed and not altogether satisfied with his discoveries, he turned to leave the place when he found himself in the presence of a man carrying a kit of tools. Why he should come into this place with tools was more than Mr. Ransom could understand.

"Hello, stranger." It was this man who spoke. "Interested in the Hazen monument, eh? Well, I'll soon give you reason to be more interested yet. Do you see this inscription—On June 7, 1885; Anitra, aged six, and the rest of it? Well, I cut them letters there fifteen years ago. Now I'm to cut 'em out. The orders has just come. The youngster didn't die it seems, and I'm commanded to chip the fifteen-year-old lie out. What do you think of that? A sweet job for a day like this. Mor'n likely it'll put me under a stone myself. But folks won't listen to reason. It's been here fifteen years and seventeen days and now it must come out, rain or shine, before nightfall. 'Before the sun sets,' so the telegram ran. I'll be blessed but I'll ask a handsome penny for this job."

Mr. Ransom, controlling himself with difficulty, pointed to the little mound. "But the child seems to have been buried here," he said.

"Lord bless you, yes, a child was buried here, but we all knew years ago that it mightn't be Hazen's. The schoolhouse burned and a dozen children with it. One of the little bodies was given to Mr. Hazen for burial. He believed it was his Anitra, but a good while after, a bit of the dress she wore that day was found hanging to a bush where some gipsies had been.

ried into Mrs. Ransom's room. The contrast in the way the two trays had baen received struck him as showing the difference betwen the two women, especially after he had been given an opportunity, as he was later, of seeing the ferocious way in which the food brought to Anitra had been disposed of.

But I anticipate. The latter tray had not yet been pushed again into the hall, and Mr. Ransom was still smoking his first cigar when he heard the lawyer's voice in the office below asking to have pen and ink placed in the small reception-room. This recalled him to the real purpose of his wife's presence in the house, and also assured him that the opportunity would soon be given him for another glimpse of her before the evening was over. It was also likely to be a full-face one, as she would have to advance several steps directly towards him before taking the turn leading to the front staircase.

He awaited the moment eagerly. The hour for signing the will had been set at nine o'clock, but it was surely long past that time now. No, the clock in the office is striking; it is just nine. Would she recognize the summons? Assuredly; for with the last stroke she lifts the latch of her door and comes out.

She has exchanged her dark dress for a light one and has arranged her hair in the manner he likes best. But he scarcely notes these changes in the interest he feels in her intentions and the manner in which she proceeds to carry out her purpose.

She does not advance at once to the staircase, but creeps first to her sister's door, where she stands listening for a minute or so in an attitude of marked anxiety. Then, with a gesture expressive of repugnance and alarm, she steps quickly forward and disappears down the staircase without vouchsafing one glance in his direction.

His vision of her as she looked in that short passage from room to staircase was momentary only, but it left him shuddering. Never before had he seen resolve burning to a white heat in the human countenance. The innocent, affectionate young girl, whose soul he had looked upon as a weeded garden, had become in a moment to his eyes a suffering, determined, deeply concentrated woman of unsuspected power and purpose. What was she going to do? Sign away all her property? Beggar her heirs for— He could not say what. No! There was in her distracted mind something of more tragic import than this; and he dared not question what. What if she were about to will away her fortune to the man she called brother? He himself had no use for her wealth. Her health and happiness were all that concerned him, and these possibly depended on her being allowed to go her own way without interference.

His suspense presently became so great that he could no longer control himself. Throwing up the window, he thrust his head out into the rain and felt refreshed by the icy drops falling on his face and neck. But the roar of the waterfall rang too persistently in his ears and he hastily closed the window again. There was something in the incessant boom of that tumbling water which strangely disturbed him. He could better stand suspense than that. If only the wind would bluster again. That, at least, was intermittent in its fury and gave momentary relief to thoughts strained to an unbearable tension.

Afterwards, only a short time afterwards, he wondered that he had given himself over to such extreme feeling at this especial moment. Her appearance when she came quietly back, with Mrs. Deo chatting and smiling behind her, was natural enough, and though she did not speak herself, the tenor of the landlady's remarks was such as to show that they had been conversing about old days when the two little girls used to ransack her cupboards for their favorite cookies, and when their united pranks were the talk of the town.

As they passed down the hall, Mrs. Deo garrulously remarked:

"You were never separated except on that dreadful day of the schoolhouse burning. That day you were sick and—"

"Please!" The word leaped from Georgian in terror, and she almost threw her hand against the other's mouth. "I—I can't bear it."

The good lady paused, gurgled an apology, and stooped for the tray which disfigured the sightliness of the neatly kept hall. Then, nodding towards a maid whom she had placed on watch at the extreme end of the hall, she muttered some assurances as to this woman's faithfulness, and turned away with a cordial good night. Georgian watched her go with a strange and lingering intentness, or so it seemed to Ransom; then slowly entered her room and locked the door.

The incidents of the day, so far as she was concerned, appeared to be at an end.

Was in a Tight Place.

For many years old Colonel Lee resided in Ninth street, New York, near the Hotel St. Denis. He is still remembered by hundreds of New Yorkers for his bright manner and happy, apt remarks.

When the project for erecting an equestrian statue to General Washington in Union Square was proposed, Colonel Lee was intrusted with one of the subscription papers for circulation. Shortly after receiving it he approached a well-known citizen and asked for a subscription. But the citizen declined to subscribe, stating in a rather pompous manner.

"I do not consider, sir, that there is any necessity for a monument to Mr. Washington. His fame is undying; he is enshrined in the hearts of his countrymen."

"Is he enshrined in your heart?" softly inquired the colonel.

"He is, sir."

"Well, all I have to say," retorted Colonel Lee, "is that he is in a tight place."—New York Press.

A Complete Victory.

It is recorded of a certain Chinese Emperor that, upon being apprised that his enemies had raised an insurrection in a distant province, he said to his officers: "Come, follow me, and we shall quickly destroy them." On his arrival the rebels submitted to him, and all expected that he would take the most signal revenge. Instead of this the captives were treated with the utmost humanity.

"How!" cried his Minister of State. "Is this the manner in which your promise is fulfilled? Your royal word was given that your enemies should be destroyed, and, lo, you have pardoned them all, and then some of them have been caressed."

"I promised," said the Emperor, generously, "to destroy my enemies. I have fulfilled my word, for, see, they are enemies no longer. I have made friends of them."—Christian and Missionary Alliance.

Color Treatment for the Insane.

Chromotherapy—treatment of disease by color—is being tried at Bartonville, Illinois, where eight solariums are in use for the benefit of the insane.

Dr. Zeller, the superintendent, is known as an opponent of the strait-jacket, the cell, and other means of repression in cases of insanity. He advocates the use of the four colors, ruby, violet, amber, and opal, and these are in use at the Bartonville hospital. The incandescent lamps, the glass shades, everything through which the light filters, is in one of the colors, and the influence upon the patient becomes perceptible as soon as he enters the room.

Dr. Zeller reports that the insane display a certain gayety in the red room. The violet room produces an appeasing effect, and the opal and amber solariums are especially efficacious when the alienation is accompanied by tuberculosis.

Paganini's Cab.

On awakening one morning at his hotel in Vienna, Paganini, the celebrated violinist, was informed that the cab man whom the previous evening he had employed to drive him to the concert hall where he was playing was waiting to see him. On being admitted to his presence the man, after having advanced poverty and a large family as an excuse for the request that he was about to make, prayed the great musician to make his fortune. "What do you mean?" demanded Paganini. "Authorization to write in large letters on the back of my vehicle these two words, 'Paganini's Cab.'" was the answer. Consent was given, with altogether satisfactory results.

Columbia Second Largest River.

The Columbia river is the second river in size, measured by volume, in the United States, its maximum flow of 1,600,000 second-feet being only slightly exceeded by that of the Mississippi.

Submarines that destroy passenger vessels without warning should, of course, display the jolly roger.

MISS GAIL KANE

A Well-Known Movie Actress

COST OF CLOTHES CUTS DOWN SALARIES

Los Angeles, Cal.—This talk of big salaries in the movies is mostly bunk. Investigation here, where 75 per cent of all photoplays are made, shows that the stipends range from almost insignificant wages to some large salaries. Most of the big salaries are mythical—the dreams of press agents or of the players themselves. Where one actor makes $100 a week, 100 others are lucky to get $5 a day. Many get as little as $3. In the aggregate, salaries paid to screen players are not much greater than salaries paid in other walks of life.

The expense that a movie player is under, especially an actress, is appalling. Dorothy Dalton, who stars in $2 films for Thomas Ince, gets a salary of $150 per week (not $1,500). This can be taken as a pretty fair estimate of stars' salaries, with the exception of Mary Pickford, the highest paid actress on the screen, and a few others, mostly stars taken from the legitimate drama because their names bring great prestige to the movies.

Most of the film players' salary goes for clothes needed in the parts she plays. Griffith is the only producer who furnishes wardrobe to his regulars. The clothes the star buys must be the real thing. You can't fool the camera with cheap fabrics. The clothes must have the style; they must be ultra-modern. An actress must anticipate the styles in advance. Frequently the picture she is appearing in will not be released for months, therefore the star must have gowns and suits made for a future style. If the scenario calls for Paris gowns, nothing but Paris gowns will do. They cost regular money.

It takes at least five weeks to make a five-reel feature. Dorothy Dalton's salary for five weeks is $750. Here's what happened to one five-week stipend recently:

Coat	$180
Two hats, advanced style, $25 each	50
Ball gown, Bernard, from Paris	85
Afternoon gown	60
Suit for the street, ultra-fashionable	60
Pumps, gloves, jewelry, etc.	100
Total	$535

This leaves a balance of $215 for more than a month's hard work.

"Fortunate, indeed, is the star who plays the part of a poor girl throughout the entire picture," said Miss Dalton. "I like those parts best. They claim more sympathy from our audience and save you hundreds of dollars in gowns. My only hope of realizing any big profit from my work is in being cast for a 'Salome Jane,' where I don't have to spend all I make on clothes."

Jack Pickford, star under the Diamond S trademark, is the younger brother of Mary and Lottie Pickford and, although only 20, he has been a movie star for years. The family resemblance of the Pickford sisters and brother is most striking. Jack Pickford first appears as a Selig star in the multiple reel drama, The Making of Crooks. This unusual drama will be followed by another Selig feature starring Mr. Pickford in Why Love is Blind, a heart-touching drama of circus life.

WRECKS $1,000 GOWN FOR MOVIE FILM

It's no crime to wreck a motor car or a passenger train—in the moving pictures. It's expensive, but it doesn't cause women to wring their hands and cry "for shame!"

But suppose you utterly destroy a beautiful ball gown, costing $1,000 and designed by Lady Duff Gordon (Lucile), the famous modiste! Suppose, just to please your desire for realism, you annihilate a Lucile model!

That, in the mind of the average woman, is as unforgivable as destroying a famous painting.

Well, it has been done. Out in the Essanay studios in Chicago, where they are making The Strange Case of Mary Page, a moving picture series in which Henry Walthall, hero of The Birth of a Nation, and Edna Mayo are to be starred, they have just tossed into oblivion a Lucile gown. For an hour it was given the homage due it. Then it was trampled upon and torn in a murder scene. Now the wife of the ash cart man is probably wearing it as she washes windows.

Lady Duff Gordon designed all the gowns for Miss Mayo in The Strange Case of Mary Page. One, particularly, was Lady Gordon's pride. She does not know that this is the one that Edna Mayo, as Mary Page, wore to the banquet in the first episode of the tale. At this banquet, given for Mary, who is a great actress, she is lured into a private dining room by the man she hates and fears.

There he attacks her. She fights back, drawing a small revolver she carried. She faints. The hero (Henry Walthall) rushes in and finds Mary on the floor beside a dead man. Her revolver, with one chamber empty, lies between them.

That ought to be enough tragedy to satisfy almost any moving picture director. But J. Charles Haydon, who is directing Mary Page, went farther. He insisted on a real fight. The villain was destroyed in the struggle and so was the gown. It appears in about forty feet of film, it is torn and trampled upon, and then is seen no more.

The evening gown is cut only short enough to be comfortable for dancing. The light train is made so that it is easily carried. The gown is of white and silver tulle with a draped overdress of white and silver brocade, faced with flesh satin. The sash of pale green goes round the back only and is finished on the side with a diamond buckle. Hand made flowers in pastel shades are employed both in the skirt, underskirt and bodice.

The coat, of blue taffeta, trimmed with sable, is cut very full. The arm holes are low and point toward the back. When the arms are slipped into the sleeves the material is pulled toward the gront, giving a great fullness in front with the cloth pulled into a comfortable fit across the back. The sable is high in front and low in the back.

"Merely Mary Ann," Eleanor Robson's stage success, written by Israel Zangwill, is being translated into the film by the Fox Film corporation. Vivian Martin, formerly a World Film company star, will interpret the screen version of the role created by Miss Robson.

Blanche Sweet's next play from the Lasky studio will be released about January 17. It is called "The Ragamuffin."

Jules Eckert Goodman's play, "The Point of View," is being adapted for screen purposes by the World Film corporation. Emile Chautard will produce the picture and the following cast has been selected to play important roles: Frances Nelson, June Elvidge, Jessie Lewis, Mildred Havens, Douglas MacLean, Frederick Truesdell, Joseph Flanagan, John Hyland and Henry Thornton.

The Lasky company has undertaken to produce Clara Lipman's play entitled "Elevating a Husband," in which her husband, Louis Mann, starred, in motion pictures. It will be Victor Moore's next offering on the screen.

Pauline Frederick will depart from her familiar adventuress roles which she portrayed in "Zaza" and "Bella Donna" to depict a character filled with mother love. "Lydia Gilmore," the forthcoming Famous Players adaptation of Henry Arthur Jones' dramatic success, will show the actress in a different role.

Dictates of Fashion

New umbrellas are made of bright plaid material.

Bib ball buttons of velvet fasten tightfitting coats.

The tall beaver hat of 1830 is very chic, worn by a beautiful girl.

Novelty pockets are very much liked on both coats and skirts.

Little folks are wearing turbans very like those of grown-ups.

Long coats and short jackets would seem to be the order of the day.

Dance frocks are made entirely of net, and they are one mass of ruffles.

Plaid taffeta is combined with chiffon in the making of pretty new blouses.

Cardigan jackets of golden brown suede, finished with wristbands and collars of knitted ribbed silk, are popular for wear with the lighter weight coats. The jackets fit closely over the shoulders and bust and hang to the hip line. They harmonize with almost any of the tweed mixtures and serge materials.

Duplex coats of gaberdine and leather are being shown in the loose sport coat warm and are worn in the rain as well as in pleasant weather. If the day is warm the leather shell may be removed readily, as it is held in place with snap catches. The coats come in all of the standard serviceable colors.

Fur is vanishing from the winter girl's street costume. She still wears fur trimmed shoes, fur trimmed lingerie, fur trimmed dancing frocks, but buttons and braided ornaments have taken the place of fox and beaver, and such on her outdoor garments.

A speck of fur fringe, the high collar and edges, the oddly shaped cuffs of this midwinter model Mme. Jayne of the Fashion Art league of American is introducing for late season wear, but it is the big ball-like buttons that mark its up-to-dateness.

The short coat with front belted in is an indication that spring coats will be short coats and they'll have a decided flare below the waistline. Velour delane in midnight blue is used by Mme. Jayne in developing this attractive model.

BUTTONLESS BLOUSES.

A new buttonless blouse will meet the need of the woman who is always in a hurry. It is of soft white satin veiled, with white chiffon and the front crosses it, surplice fashion from right to left. A collar of the white satin rises high at the back, turns over and then extends downward the entire length of the surpliced front. A snap button holds the loose fronts at the bust line, and another fastens the waistband. Of course, this dainty blouse has long sleeves, and they bell a little over the hand.

HANDBAGS ARE DAINTY.

Every woman seems to be trying to outdo every other woman these days in daintiness of handbag equipment. Reticules for theater use and for shopping and utility service are alike luxurious of fabric and expensive as to frame and fittings. Leather grows higher in price as the war progresses, and a leather handbag of satisfactory quality is rather costly now; so, if one must pay substantially anyway, why not pay for a really charming bag of brocade or velvet—something that will add eclat to the costume? This is what women seem to think. Lovely, indeed, for matinee use, is a bag of pansy-colored velvet, shirred to a silver frame. The lining is of pansy yellow pussy willow silk. Another bag, of rich mahogany-toned brocade, has a frame of carved imitation ivory in creamy tints. A new gate-top silver bag is attached to a bracelet, very convenient for carrying.

INJURED GET BLAME FOR MAJORITY OF ACCIDENTS

National Automobile Chamber of Commerce Issues Its Report.

The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce has issued a statement to show that street accidents were usually the fault of the injured. The statement says:

"Ninety per cent of the street traffic accidents in New York are due to carelessness or other fault of the injured, according to a report of the police department, which has adopted a system of reporting such accidents on forms that classify them according to cause, location, nature, seriousness, type of vehicle involved, age of injured, and time of day.

"It has been the custom of the public to condemn drivers, particularly of automobiles, for recklessness and to demand rigid regulation, but the police reports now show that it is the person afoot that needs to be controlled and to exercise as much caution as is observed by the operators of vehicles. This will be a revelation to most persons. Of 1,033 accidents in August in which vehicles were involved and the causes of which were reported, 903, or 90 per cent, were due to the fault of the injured, 51 to the fault of the drivers, 45 to defects in the vehicle, 34 to skidding, and 42 to various other causes.

"Of 743 persons struck by vehicles of all kinds, including bicycles, during the month, 679 were killed or injured as a result of their own fault, and only 31 due to the fault of the drivers, while 294 persons were struck by vehicles when crossing streets at other than street intersections. Falls from vehicles accounted for 224 accidents, 171 persons were hurt when getting on or off street cars in an improper way, 137 were killed or injured while playing in the street through no fault of drivers, 90 ran into or in front of vehicles, 26 were intoxicated, and 54 were stealing rides.

"Among other interesting facts shown by the report are that street accidents increase steadily from January to July, and then gradually decrease until the end of the year; that most accidents occur from 11 a. m. to 12 noon and from 5 to 7 p. m.; that about 45 per cent of the persons fatally hurt are children, and that the largest number of children killed and injured are from 2 to 8 years old."

PROPER CARE OF TIRES.

Many motorists do not realize the importance of prompt attention to small cuts or injuries in their tires. It is especially important, at this time of the year, that this warning be heeded.

A cut in the tread or cover of the base has a tendency to expand when that part of the tire is in contact with the road. This permits mud, grit, pebbles and other foreign matter to lodge in the opening. When the injured part of the tire is relieved of the weight of the car, the foreign matter which has accumulated acts as a wedge, and with each revolution of the wheel this foreign matter is forced farther and farther between the cover and the fabric, not infrequently completely separating them.

If this separation of the tread and the fabric is neglected for any length of time, it is often necessary to apply a new cover. If the fabric is in very good condition, this can generally be done in a very satisfactory manner, but how much expense and trouble can be saved by prompt attention when the cut is first made!

It sometimes happens that a tire having a good cover and appearing all right from the outside fails to give long service, and the car owner is astonished when he learns from a repair man that it is not practical to rebuild the tire. This is often due to water working through neglected cuts in the cover and causing decay and disintegration of the fabric. The fabric constitutes the real foundation and strength of the tire, and therefore it is highly important that it be protected.

Examine your tires carefully at regular intervals, and especially after long trips. Tacks, glass or any other matter which may have become imbedded in the tread should be removed before any serious damage is done. Wash away all mud, to permit a thorough examination of the tire.

By the use of preparations intended for emergency repairs, small cuts, punctures or snags can be healed, and thus prevented from growing and becoming serious. Large cuts or injuries should be vulcanized at once by an experienced and competent repair man.

MORE AUTO TRUCKS USED

The Adopting of More Efficient Methods Lead to the Placing of Many Orders for Machines.

In more ways than one the United States government is applying modern efficiency methods in its business. The record made by gasoline motor trucks under the severe conditions imposed by the parcel post, has furnished striking evidence of their possibilities for government work.

The postoffice department has taken the lead in the matter of installing up-to-date hauling equipment. It is understood that large purchases of motor trucks are under way and that the early deliveries are going to postmasters who take the initiative in insisting upon more efficient methods of transportation.

A fleet of seven new type chainless motor trucks was placed in service recently at the Detroit postoffice. These vehicles are fitted with regulation screenside mail bodies and are painted in the national colors, as prescribed by the postoffice department. While designed primarily to carry bulk mail, they have interior seats which can be utilized for transportation of letter carriers. These new trucks have a capacity of one and one-half tons each and are up to the minute in design. They replace a fleet of chain driven trucks.

DENATURED ALCOHOL ANTI-FREEZE MIXTURE

Now that freezing weather is here motorists should remember to supply the radiators of their cars with a suitable anti-freezing mixture.

Denatured alcohol, which can now be purchased at all drug stores at a nominal sum, when mixed with a proper proportion of water, will withstand low temperature, as indicated in the following table:

30 per cent solution—One and one-half quarts of alcohol to one gallon of water freezes at 5 degrees below zero.

40 per cent solution—Two and one-half quarts of alcohol added to one gallon of water freezes at 20 degrees below zero.

50 per cent solution—Four quarts of alcohol added to one gallon of water freezes at about 35 degrees below zero.

As the alcohol evaporates more rapidly than the water, alcohol must be added from time to time to keep up the strength of the solution. A convenient way to test the strength is by the use of a small glass instrument known as the "freezeometer," sold by automobile supply houses at $1.50.

NEARLY 15,000 TIRES USED IN ONE YEAR BY U. S.

Statisticians have been busy lately figuring on prospective consumption of automobile tires in view of the remarkable prosperity the automobile industry is enjoying. It is claimed that there are 2,250,000 cars in use in the United States at present and that 750,000 more will be added to this large total during the ensuing year. Consequently figuring the total at 3,000,000 by the end of 1916 it is suggested that five "shoes" are the average per car a year, so that consumption of tires in the United States will soon reach the dizzy total of 15,000,000. It is figured that this would mean a gross business for tire manufacturers of not far from $250,000,000. War orders are not included in these estimates which are based solely on domestic trade.—New York Commercial.

Auto Notes -:- and Fads

A new luncheon hamper for the running board is in black enameled duck and is fitted with aluminum plates, cups and sandwich boxes. The case is for four persons and a rolling, wooden tray is a feature of the outfit.

Fur trimmed Pilgrim capes of butternut homespun are quaint in appearance and make very smart extra wraps. When they are worn the plain Pilgrim hats of velvet, with buckles on the fronts, are worn with them. Sealskin, Persian lamb and the other flat furs are chosen for the trimmings.

A new limousine case for the smoker's outfit has cigar and cigarette drawer, a place for the matchbox or patent lighter, an ash receiver, a tray for the lighted cigar and a small smoke absorber. They come in leather to match the upholstery of the car.

The luncheon apron is a convenient novelty to protect the gown at luncheon stops. It is made of glass towelling lined with rubber sheeting. It is cut diamond shape, which makes it wide across the lap, where it is needed, and the fourth point is cut off in order to square it into the belt. The band is finished with ample ties so the apron may be worn over a heavy coat if desired.

A distinctive automobile costume is made of leopard skin. The skirt, in one of the new full and rather short models, is trimmed with a four-inch band of sealskin around the bottom. Three sealskin buttons, four inches apart, are run up each front side seam. A smart, black satin, tailored blouse and girdle are worn under the full-skirted, leopard skin sport coat. The coat is edged with the sealskin, has a buttoned belt, narrow cuffs and high choker collar of seal. Another suit is made of tan angora cloth in the same general model and is trimmed in the same way with sealskin.

Let us Reason Together.

In recent years science has given much time and study to the human body. Through this study we have learned that our body is largely composed of glands that are linked together in a great grandular system. Our physical well-being largely depends upon the working condition of this glandular system.

The principal glands of the body are the liver, kidneys, spleen, pancreas, tonsils and numerous small glands of the stomach and bowels. If these glands are not working properly we are languid, the vitality is low, our strength is reduced and a general nervous and debilitated condition exists. If these conditions are neglected serious results are very apt to follow. Don't use a gland stimulant. You need a gland tonic.

Glando is prepared to meet these conditions. It is a tonic which restores the glands to action, throws off the poisons and builds up the system.

A week's treatment of Glando for 50c.

Former Citizen Dies.

Auburn Evening Star.

After an illness of about twenty-four hours of acute kidney trouble, Albert H. Conrad, who has been a tinner all his life, passed peacefully away at his home on West Nicholas street Saturday evening at 5:15. His wife and daugter, Miss Grace, were with him. Mr. Conrad has been in poor health for the past two years, but still continued to attend to business. For the past two weeks he has felt ill and stayed at his home some of the time. Friday he went to his shop on South Main street, but had to go home, where went to bed and never arose.

Mr. Conrad was born near Paris Stark county, Ohio, August 1, 1851 and was the son of Peter and Kathine Conrad. He lived at the old home until he was married when he moved to Paris. He was married to Josephine Keplinger, June 16, 1872, and they were blessed with four children one of who preceeded him in death. They resided in Paris about nine years, when they removed to St. Joe, where they lived until 1897. They then came to Auburn, where they have since resided. Mr. Conrad learned the trade of a tinner when quite young, and always followed that business. The three children, Victor H. Conrad, who lives in Chicago, Mrs. Sam Davenport, of Linton and Miss Grace Conrad, who teaches in the high school at Wolf Lake, were notified of his serious illness at once, Miss Grace being the only one who arrived before the father passed away. The son came Saturday evening and Mrs Davenport and little daughter arrived Sunday. Mr. Davenport arrived Monday.

Mr. Conrad was a member of the Lutheran church and at one time was a member of the Maccabee order. Besides the wife and children he leaves five grandchildren. The funeral services were held Monday afternoon from the home on West Nicholas street, Rev. F. F. Thornburg in charge, and interment was made in Woodlawn.

THE CHIEF LEGATEE

by ANNA KATHERINE GREEN.

AUTHOR OF THE LEAVENWORTH CASE, BEHIND CLOSED DOORS ETC.

SYNOPSIS

Chapters I to III—A few hours after marriage the wife of Roger J. Ransom is missing from the hotel where they have just registered. A detective, Mr. Gerrage, is called into the case. The bride, formerly Miss Georgian Hazen, becomes alarmed over something which happened while passing down the aisle from the altar.

While standing at the hotel desk with the groom the woman disappears. A man with a twisted face was seen whispering to the bride at the reception. Evidently flight was meditated after that meeting.

The bell boy noted peculiarities about the woman and was the only one who noticed her slip away. The detective claims the maid was a substitute for the wife, and rode from the house to the hotel while the wife left by the basement door in the maid's clothes.

Chapters IV to V—The woman who left by the basement door was traced to a meeting with the man with a broken jaw. Ransom receives a note from his wife who claims to have found a long lost twin sister, supposed to have been dead. The twin is of unbalanced mind and stone deaf. Ransom meets the man with the broken jaw and who declares himself to be Mrs. Ransom's brother who was in need of money.

Chapters VI to VII.—Ransom interviews his wife's lawyer, who insists that she has a twin sister. When leaving the office the office boy gives him his wife's address.

Ransom goes to Stitford, Conn., and finds the hotel where his wife has secured rooms. He visits the cemetery and finds a man about to efface from the tombstone the record of the death of the twin sister, which was supposed to have occurred years previously. He also finds the announcement of the death of the man with whom he had recently talked, who claimed to be his wife's brother.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

There were lots of folks who remembered that them gipsies had passed the schoolhouse a half hour before the fire, and they now say found the little girl hiding behind the woodpile, and carried her off. No one ever knew; but her death was always thought doubtful by every one but Mr. and Mrs. Hazen. They stuck to the old idee and believed her to be buried under this mound where her name is."

"But one of the children was buried here," persisted Ransom. "You must have known the number of those lost and would surely be able to tell if one were missing, as must have been the case if the gipsies had carried off Anitra before the fire."

"I don't know about that," objected the stone-cutter. "There was, in those days, a little orphan girl, almost an idiot, who wandered about this town, staying now in one house and now in another as folks took compassion on her. She was never seen agin after that fire. If she was in the schoolhouse that day, as she sometimes was, the number would be made up. No one was left to tell us. It was an awful time, sir. The village hasn't got over it yet."

Mr. Ransom made some sympathetic rejoinder and withdrew towards the gateway, but soon came strolling back. The man had arranged his tools and was preparing to go to work.

"It seems as if the family was pretty well represented here," remarked Ransom. "Is it the girl herself,—Anitra, I believe you called her,—who has ordered this record of her death removed?"

"Oh, no, you don't know them Hazens. There's one of 'em who has quite a story; the twin of this Anitra. She lived to grow up and have a lot of money left her. If you lived in Sitford, or lived in New York, you'd know all about her; for her name's been in the papers a lot this week. She's the great lady who married and left her husband all in one day; and for what reason do you think? We know, because she don't keep no secrets from her old friends. She's found this sister, and it's her as has ordered me to chip away this name. She wants it done to-day, because she's coming here with this gal she's found. Folks say she ran across her in the street and knew her at once. Can you guess how?"

"From her name?"

"Lord, no; from what I hear, she hasn't any name. From her looks! She saw her own self when she looked at her.

"How interesting, how very interesting," stammered Mr. Ransom, feeling his newly won convictions shaken again. "Quite remarkable the whole story. And so is this inscription," he added, pointing to the words Georgian Toritti, etc. "Did the woman have two husbands, and was the Alfred Hazen, whose death at sea is commemorated here, the son of Toritti or of Hazen?"

"Of Toritti," grumbled the man, evidently displeased at the question. "A black-browed devil who it won't do to talk about here. Mrs. Hazen was only a slip of a gal when she married him, and as he didn't live but a couple of months folks have sort o' forgiven her and forgotten him. To us Mrs. Hazen was always Mrs. Hazen; and Alf—well, he was just Alf Hazen too; a lad with too much good in him to perish in them murderous waters a thousand miles from home."

So they still believed Hazen dead! No intimation of his return had as yet reached Sitford. This was what Ransom wanted to know. But there was still much to learn. Should he venture an additional question? No; that would show more than a stranger's interest in a topic so purely local. Better leave well enough alone and quit the spot before he committed himself. He nodded a friendly good-by and made for the entrance.

CHAPTER IX.

Hunter's Inn.

WHEN Mr. Ransom re-entered the hotel, which he did under a swoop of wind which turned his umbrella inside out and drenched him through in an instant, it was to find the house in renewed turmoil, happily explained by the landlady, whom he ran across on the stairs.

"Oh, Mr. Johnston!" she cried as she edged by him with a pile of bed-linen on her arm. "Please excuse all this fuss. Another guest is coming—I have just got a telegram. A famous lawyer from New York. Our house will be full to-night."

"Where will you put him?" inquired Mr. Ransom with a good-natured air. "There seem to be no unoccupied rooms on this hall."

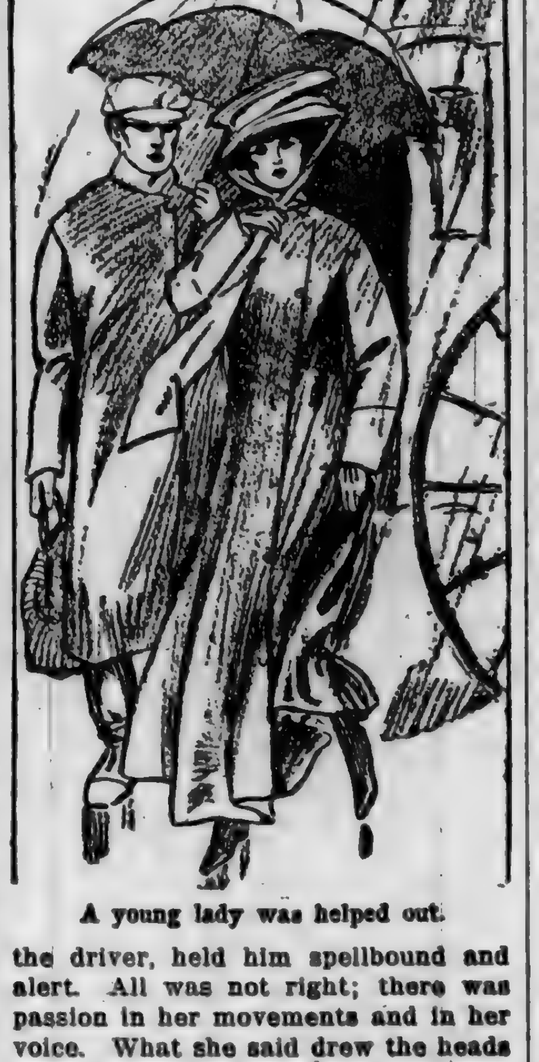
"More's the pity," she sighed, with a half-inquiring, half deprecatory look at this fortunate first comer. "I shall have to put him below, poor man. I'm afraid he won't like it, but—" Mr. Ransom remained silent. "But," she went on with sudden cheerfulness, "I will make it up in the supper. That shall be as good a one as our kitchen will provide. Four city guests all in one day! That's a good many for this quiet hotel."

"Four!" retorted Mr. Ransom as he turned towards his own door. "The number has grown by two since I went out."

"Oh, I didn't tell you. The lady—her name's Mrs. Ransom—brings her sister with her. The little girl who—yes, I am coming." This latter to some perplexed domestic down the hall, who had already called her twice. "I mustn't stand talking here," she apologized as she hurried away. "But do take care of yourself. You are dreadful wet. How I wish the weather would clear up!"

Mr. Ransom wished the same. To say nothing of his own inconvenience, it was a source of anxiety to him that his wife should have to ride these inevitable ten miles in such a chilling downpour. Besides, a storm of this kind complicated matters; gave him less sense of freedom, shut him in, as it were, with the mystery he was there to unravel, but which for some reason, hardly explainable to himself, filled him with such a sense of foreboding that he had moments in which he thought only of escape.

His supper over, he waited feverishly for the coach, which ordinarily was due at seven in the evening. To-night it bade fair to be late, owing to the bad condition of the roads and the early darkness. The wind had gone down, but it still rained. His room was in the gable end facing the road. From it he could look directly down on the porch of entrance, a fact which he had thankfully noted at his first look. As he heard a bustle which now broke out before, and caught the gleam of a lantern coming round the corner of the house, he softly stepped to his lamp and put it out, then took his stand at the window. The coach was now very near; he could hear the straining of the harness and the shouts of the driver. In another moment it drew lumberingly up. A man from the hotel advanced with an umbrella; a young lady was helped out who, standing one moment in the full glare of the lights thrown upon her from the open door, showed him the face and form he knew so well and loved—yes, loved for all her mystery, as he knew by the wild beating of his heart, and the irresistible impulse he felt to rush down and receive her in his arms, to her great terror doubtless, but to his own boundless satisfaction and delight. But strong as the temptation was, he did not yield to it. Something in her attitude, as she stood there, talking earnestly to the driver, held him spellbound and alert. All was not right; there was passion in her movements and in her voice. What she said drew the heads of landlady and maid from the open door and caused the man with the lantern to peer past her into the coach and backward along the road. What had happened? Nothing that concerned the lawyer. Mr. Ransom could see him disentangling himself from the coverings in front where he had ridden with the driver, but the sister was not there. No other lady got out of the coach even after his young wife had finished her conversation with the driver and disappeared into the house.



A young lady was helped out.

"How can I stand this?" thought Mr. Ransom as the coach finally rattled and swished away towards the stable. "I must hear, I must see, I must know what is going on down there."

This because he heard voices in the open hall. Crossing to his own doorway, he listened. His wife and Mr. Harper had stepped into the office close by the front door. He could hear now and then a word of what they said, but not all. Venturing a step further, he leaned over the balustrade which extended almost up to his own door. This was better; he could now catch most of the words and sometimes a sentence. They all referred to the sister. "Temper—her own way—deaf—would walk in all the rain and slush.—A strange character—you can't imagine," and other similar phrases, uttered in a passionate and half-angry voice. Then ejaculations from Mrs. Deo, and a word or two of caution or injunction in the polished tones of the lawyer, followed by a sudden rush towards the staircase, over which he was leaning.

"Show me my room," rang up in Georgian's bell-like tones; "then I'll tell you what to do about her. She isn't easily managed."

"But she'll get her death!" expostulated Mrs. Deo; "to say nothing of her losing her way in this dreadful darkness. Let me send—"

"Not yet," broke in his young wife's voice, with just the hint of asperity in it. "She must trudge out her tantrum first. I think her idea was to show that she remembered the old place and the lane where she used to pick blackberries. You needn't worry about her getting cold. She's lived a gipsy life too many years to mind wind and wet. But it's different with me. I'm all in a shiver. Which is my room, please?"

She was now at the head of the stairs. Mr. Ransom had closed his door, but not latched it, and as she turned to go down the hall, followed by the chattering landlady, he swung it open for an instant and so caught one full glimpse of her beloved figure. She was dressed in a long rain-coat and had some sort of modish hat on her head, which, in spite of its simplicity, gave her a highly fashionable air. A woman to draw all eyes, but such a mystery to her husband! Such a mystery to all who knew her story, or rather her actions, for no one seemed to know her story.

Events did not halt. He heard her give this and that order, open a door and look in; say a word of commendation, ask if the key was on her side of the partition, then shut the door again and open another.

"Ah, this looks comfortable," she exclaimed in great satisfaction. "Is that my bag? Put it down, please. I'll open it. Now, if you'll leave me a moment alone, I'll soon be ready. But you mustn't expect me to eat till Anitra comes I couldn't do that. Oh, she's a dreadful trial, Mrs. Deo; you have a motherly face, and I can tell you that the girl is just eating up my life. If she weren't my very self, deafened by hard usage, and rendered coarse and wilful by years of a miserable and half-starved life, I couldn't bear it, especially after what I've sacrificed for her. I've parted with my husband—but I can't talk, I can't. I would not have said so much if you hadn't looked so kind."

All this her husband heard, followed by a sob or two, quickly checked, however, by a high strained laugh and the gay remark:

"I'm wet enough, but she'll be dripping. I'm afraid she'll have to have her supper in her room. She got out at the new schoolhouse and started to come through the lane. It must be a weltering pool. If I'm dressed in time I'll come down and meet her at the door. Meanwhile don't wait for us; give Mr. Harper his supper."

Her door closed, then suddenly opened again. "If she don't come in ten minutes, let some one go to the head of the lane. But be sure it's a careful person who won't startle her. I've got to put on another dress, so don't bother me. I'll hear her when she enters her own room and will speak to her then—if I dare; I'm not sure that I shall."

And the door shut to again, this time with a snap of the lock. Quiet reigned once more in the hall save for Mrs. Deo's muttered exclamations as she made her laborious way downstairs.

For five minutes, for ten minutes, Ransom watched and listened, passing continually to and fro from door to window. But his vigilance remained unrewarded by any further movement in the hall, or by the sight of an approaching figure up the road. He began to feel odd, and was asking himself what sort of fool-work this was, when a clatter of voices rose below, followed by heavy steps on the veranda. One or two men were going out, and as it seemed to him the landlady too, for he heard her say just as the door closed:

"Let me on ahead; she must see a woman's kind face first, poor child, or we shall not succeed in getting her in. I know all about these wild ones."

CHAPTER X.

Two Doors.

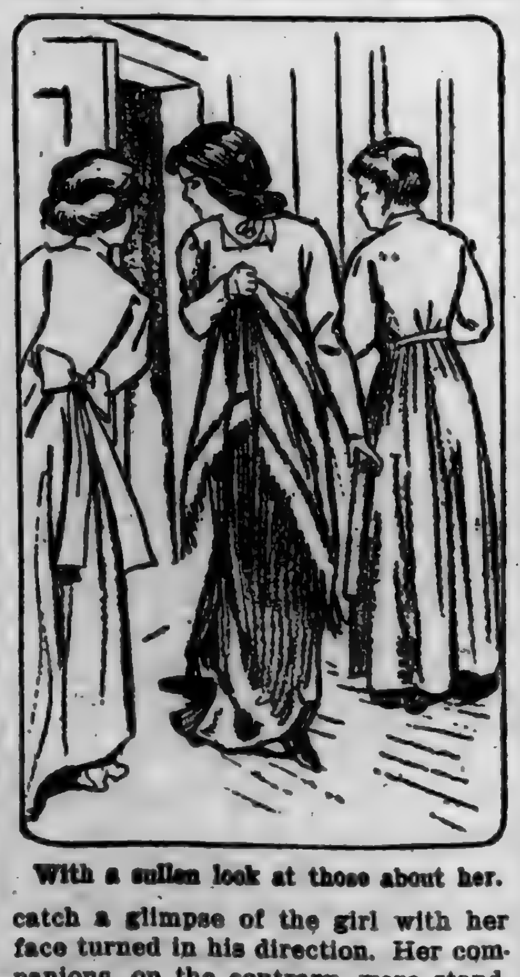
THE enthusiasm, the expectation in Mrs. Deo's voice were unmistakable. This good woman believed in this rescued waif of turbulent caprices and gipsy ways, and from this moment Ransom began to believe in her too, and consequently to share some of the excitement which had now become prevalent all through the house.

His suspense was destined to be short. While he was straining his eyes to see what might be going on down the road, a small crowd of people came round the corner of the house. In their midst walked a woman with a shawl or cape over her head—a fierce and wilful figure which shook off the hand kind Mrs. Deo laid on her arm, and shrank as the great front door fell open, sending forth a flood of light which, to one less wedded to wild ways and outdoor living, promised a hospitable cheer.

"Georgian's form!" muttered Ransom involuntarily to himself. "And Georgian's face!" he felt obliged to add, as the light fell broadly across her. "But not Georgian's ways and not Georgian's nature," he impetuously finished as she slipped out of sight.

Then the mystery of the brother came rushing over him and he yielded himself again to the wonder of the situation till he was reawakened to realities by the shuffling of feet on the stairway and the raised tones of Mrs. Deo as she tried to make herself understood by her new and somewhat difficult guest.

It was a trying moment for Ransom He longed for another glimpse of the girl, but feared to betray his own curiosity to the two women who accompanied her. Should he be forced to allow her to enter her room unseen? Might he not better run some small risk of detection? He finally compromised matters by flinging his door wide open and then retreating to the other end of the room, where the shadows appeared heavy enough to hide him. From this point he cast a look down the hall, which was in a direct line from his present standpoint, and was fortunate enough to catch a glimpse of the girl with her face turned in his direction. Her companions, on the contrary, were standing with their backs to him, one beside the door she had just thrown open, the other at his wife's door, on which she had just given a significant rap.



With a sullen look at those about her.

The girl absorbed all his attention. The shawl—a gay one with colors in it—had fallen from her head and was trailing, wet and bedraggled, over an equally bedraggled skirt. Soused with wet, her hair disheveled, and all her garments awry with the passion of her movements, she yet made his heart stand still, as, with a sullen look at those about her, she rushed into the room prepared for her use and slammed the door behind her with a quick cry of mingled rage and relief. For with all these drawbacks of manner and appearance she was the living picture of Georgian; so like her, indeed, that he could well understand now the shock which his darling received when, in the unconsciousness of possessing a living sister, she had encountered in street or store, or wherever they had first met, this living reproduction of herself.

"No wonder she became confused as to her duty," he muttered. "I even feel myself becoming confused as to mine."

"Bring me up something to eat," he now heard this latest comer shout from her doorway. "I don't want tea and I don't want soup; I want meat, meat. And I shan't go down afterward, either. I'm going to stay right here. I've seen enough of people I don't know. And of my sister too. She was cross to me because I hated the coach and wanted to walk, and she shan't come into my room till I tell her to. Don't forget; it's meat I want, just meat and something sweet. Pudding's good."

All shocking to Mr. Ransom's taste, but more so to his heart. For notwithstanding the coarseness of the expressions, the voice was Georgian's and laden with a hundred memories.

Ransom now decided that if he must keep up his watch—and nothing now could deter him from doing so—he must take a position consistent with his assumed character. Detection by Georgian was what he now feared. Whatever happened, she must not get the smallest glimpse of him, or be led by any indiscretion on his part to suspect his presence under the same roof as herself. Yet he must see all, hear all that was possible to him. For this a continuance of the present conditions, an open door and no light, were positively requisite. But one expedient suggested itself. He would light a cigar and sit in the window. If questioned he would say that he was engaged in deciding how he would end the story he was writing; that such contemplation called for darkness but above all for good air; that had the weather been favorable he would have obtained the latter by opening the window; but it being so bad he could only open the door. Certain eccentricities are allowable in authors.

This settled, he proceeded to take a chair and envelope himself in smoke. With eyes fixed on the dimly-lighted vista of the hall before him, he waited. What would happen next? Would his wife reappear? No; supper was coming up. He could hear dishes rattling on the rear stairway, and in another moment saw the maid coming down the hall with a large tray in her hands. She stopped at Anitra's door, knocked, and was answered by the harsh command:

"Set it down. I'll get it for myself."

The maid set it down.

Next instant Mrs. Ransom's door opened.

"Don't be too generous with me," he heard her call softly out. "I can't eat. I'm too upset for much food. Tea," she whispered, "and some nice toast. Tell Mrs. Deo that I want nothing else. She will understand."

The maid nodded and disappeared down the hall just as a bare arm was thrust out from Anitra's door and the tray drawn in. A few minutes later the other tray came up and was carried into Mrs. Ransom's room. The contrast in the way the two trays had been received struck him as showing the difference betwen the two women, especially after he had been given an opportunity, as he was later, of seeing the ferocious way in which the food brought to Anitra had been disposed of.

But I anticipate. The latter tray had not yet been pushed again into the hall, and Mr. Ransom was still smoking his first cigar when he heard the lawyer's voice in the office below asking to have pen and ink placed in the small reception-room. This recalled him to the real purpose of his wife's presence in the house, and also assured him that the opportunity would soon be given him for another glimpse of her before the evening was over. It was also likely to be a full-face one, as she would have to advance several steps directly towards him before taking the turn leading to the front staircase.

He awaited the moment eagerly. The hour for signing the will had been set at nine o'clock, but it was surely long past that time now. No, the clock in the office is striking; it is just nine. Would she recognize the summons? Assuredly; for with the last stroke she lifts the latch of her door and comes out.

She has exchanged her dark dress for a light one and has arranged her hair in the manner he likes best. But he scarcely notes these changes in the interest he feels in her intentions and the manner in which she proceeds to carry out her purpose.

She does not advance at once to the staircase, but creeps first to her sister's door, where she stands listening for a minute or so in an attitude of marked anxiety. Then, with a gesture expressive of repugnance and alarm, she steps quickly forward and disappears down the staircase without vouchsafing one glance in his direction.

His vision of her as she looked in that short passage from room to staircase was momentary only, but it left him shuddering. Never before had he seen resolve burning to a white heat in the human countenance. The innocent, affectionate young girl, whose soul he had looked upon as a weeded garden, had become in a moment to his eyes a suffering, determined, deeply concentrated woman of unsuspected power and purpose. What was she going to do? Sign away all her property? Beggar her heirs, for— He could not say what. No! There was in her distracted mind something of more tragic import than this; and he dared not question what. What if she were about to will away her fortune to the man she called brother? He himself had no use for her wealth. Her health and happiness were all that concerned him, and these possibly depended on her being allowed to go her own way without interference.

His suspense presently became so great that he could no longer control himself. Throwing up the window, he thrust his head out into the rain and felt refreshed by the icy drops falling on his face and neck. But the roar of the waterfall rang too persistently in his ears and he hastily closed the window again. There was something in the incessant boom of that tumbling water which strangely disturbed him. He could better stand suspense than that. If only the wind would bluster again. That, at least, was intermittent in its fury and gave momentary relief to thoughts strained to an unbearable tension.

Afterwards, only a short time afterwards, he wondered that he had given himself over to such extreme feeling at this especial moment. Her appearance when she came quietly back, with Mrs. Deo chatting and smiling behind her, was natural enough, and though she did not speak herself, the tenor of the landlady's remarks was such as to show that they had been conversing about old days when the two little girls used to ransack her cupboards for their favorite cookies, and when their united pranks were the talk of the town.

As they passed down the hall, Mrs. Deo garrulously remarked:

"You were never separated except on that dreadful day of the schoolhouse burning. That day you were sick and—"

"Please!" The word leaped from Georgian in terror, and she almost threw her hand against the other's mouth. "I—I can't bear it."

The good lady paused, gurgled an apology, and stooped for the tray which disfigured the sightliness of the neatly kept hall. Then, nodding towards a maid whom she had placed on watch at the extreme end of the hall, she muttered some assurances as to this woman's faithfulness, and turned away with a cordial good night. Georgian watched her go with a strange and lingering intentness, or so it seemed to Ransom; then slowly entered her room and locked the door.

The incidents of the day, so far as she was concerned, appeared to be at an end.

An Apprppriate Place.

Mrs. Martin and Mrs. Saunders were discussing the merits and difficulties of waists that button up the back, and Mrs. Martin said definitely that she did not like them; they are treacherous; that one can never be sure of them. Her friend admitted that they are uncertain, but declared that they are so much prettier than the stiff, straight, buttoned-up-the-front kind, that she rather preferred them. "Except in church," she added, with a little shriek of amusement.

"I always take off my coat—St. Thomas's is so dreadfully hot, you know, and then I sit way, way up by the chancel. If I didn't I wouldn't mind for I can stare down anything wrong with the front of my waist—a rip, a tear, a cascade of ink even. I just put my whole personality in my glance, and people never notice. But one's back is so defenceless. And you can't turn round in church."

Mrs. Martin murmured an assent.

"And the other Sunday," went on Mrs. Saunders, "I just felt something was wrong. The minute I took off my coat the congregation's eye seemed glued on me, and then I was certain that those three buttons that I never can manage had again betrayed me."

"What did you do?" asked Mrs. Martin, with interest, for Mrs. Saunders was known to be resourceful.

"Oh," airily, "I just waited for an appropriate place in the service, and then—"

"Why, what in the world do you mean? What appropriate place?" interrupted Mrs. Martin curiously.

"O goosey! Why, when we knelt down and said, 'We have left undone the things that we ought to have done,' of course. Could anything be plainer? I just buttoned them up, then and there!"

Beware of Her.

Beware of the woman who sits and listens while you do all the talking. She probably has a desire to know how big a fool you will make of yourself.

"SIS HOPKINS" IN THE MOVIES.

Rose Melville Contracts with Kalem for Series of Comedies.

An offer made by the Kalem Company to Rose Melville of "Sis Hopkins" fame has coaxed her out of the retirement which she has been enjoying at Lake George, N. Y. Miss Melville signed a long term contract and will be presented first in a multiple reel production and later in a series of one reel comedies. At all times she will depict the rural character which she made nationally famous.

The Kalem Company is gathering a special cast to support its newly acquired star. Among them will be performers of stage and screen prominence. The finished plays will be released on the General Film Company program, replacing the "Ventures of Marguerite" series, which have been discontinued. They will appear on Friday of each week, beginning early in February.

Miss Melville created the character of Sis Hopkins in a play called "Zed" early in the nineties and later in rapid succession she played the same type in "Little Christopher," "1492," "Two Little Jays from Indiana," "The Prodigal Father" and "By the Sad Sea Waves." A tour of the vaudeville theaters followed then in a skit called "Sis Hopkins' Visit" and in 1899 Miss Melville opened in her well known play, "Sis Hopkins." Her engagement by the Kalem Company marks Miss Melville's introduction to the screen.

HAIR TURNS WHITE IN SINGLE TRAGIC WEEK

Zadee Burbank, who has just finished playing the role of an elderly society woman in What Will People Say? the big Metro production, entered the motion picture field when her hair turned white in one week, following three sudden deaths in her family. Her husband, sister and sister-in-law all died within a month. Mrs. Burbank is a comparatively young woman, and with her remarkable pure white hair makes an excellent type for motion pictures.

Mrs. Burbank comes from the famous old Watt family of Philadelphia, and in her youth was a favorite in society. She is one of the very few women in pictures who can play the role of a society woman with a convincing air and grace. After leaving Philadelphia, Mrs. Burbank's family took a house in the fashionable section of Murray Hill, Park av., New York, where they lived until a few years ago. Mrs. Burbank was on the stage when she met her husband, and after they were married she retired.

$500 FOR ONE PHOTO-PLAY STORY

Just at present, a thousand dollars is not considered much of a price for a really good photoplay story. Any play that has achieved a fairly decent degree of success on the dramatic stage will sell for anywhere from $2,000 to $5,000 advance payment on 10 per cent of the gross royalty.

The above is taken from an article in the current issue of Photoplay Magazine entitled Author! Author! by John H. Blackwood. The article then continues:

James Forbes disposed of the picture rights to his Chorus Lady and Traveling Salesman for $10,000 advance on a 10 per cent royalty basis.

Channing Pollock sold eighteen plays in a bunch and promptly bought $45,000 worth of real estate on Long Island. He has just signed two more $10,000 contracts.

Maurice Costello is no longer a Vitagraph star, according to an announcement.

A new ventilating system has been installed in the Lasky plant at Hollywood, Cal. This changes the air in the entire three-story structure every three minutes. Breeve deep!

Margaret Turnbull, novelist, is working on a story for Fanny Ward. Miss Ward will be supported by a full cast, several members of which will be Sessue Hayakawa, his wife, Tsuru Aoki, and Jack Dean.

The new year opened sadly for Sarah Truax, for on Jan. 1 her mother passed away. Mrs. Truax was 70 years of age and went from Seattle to Los Angeles to join her daughter. She was taken ill shortly after her arrival.

Marie Doro, who is as famous as a film actress as she was on the stage, became the wife of Elliott Dexter early this month in California. Miss Doro is a famous Players star. Her next feature will be "The Wood Nymph," a Triangle production.

Frank Daniels has become so enamored of motion pictures and the Vitagraph Company has been so pleased with his work that they have entered into a mutual agreement whereby the ex-comic opera star will appear in pictures exclusively for the Vitagraph company for a long term.

Grant Mitchell, who plays the part of Stephen Weatherbee, a house-party guest, in Essanay's five-act feature, The Misleading Lady, slipped and fell into a fountain while taking a garden scene for that production. He was drenched and had to make a complete change of clothing before the scene could be retaken.

Dictates of Fashion

VELVET AND SILK MUFFS.

Fascinating muff and collar sets are now being shown in velvet, heavy silk, plush and brocade, with trimmings of fur bands, tiny flowers and gold braid and laces. These sets are charmingly becoming, and as they are made in a great variety of styles they may be adapted to any afternoon costume. The woman who wishes to supplement her more important fur sets with several accessories of this sort will not find that they are difficult to make at home, and a seamstress of moderate cleverness can readily turn out a set in a day.

A set of heavy moire silk had a draped muff trimmed with bands of skunk and a collar high at the back and sloping down toward the front. The collar was made of a band of skunk with a high shaped collar of the silk fastened inside the band of fur and flaring away from the face. Inside the silk a delicate ruching of tulle softened the effect against the face. The muff was small, as are almost all of these fancy draped ones. The silk was laid in soft, irregular folds around the central part and ruched at the ends with fur bands marking off these full ends from the central part.

A tiny blue velvet muff was trimmed with very narrow bands of beaver. This muff was draped in such a way that the velvet seemed to be tied around it in a flat bow. The collar of velvet was made of standing ruff set on a straight band. The beaver bordered both ruff and band.

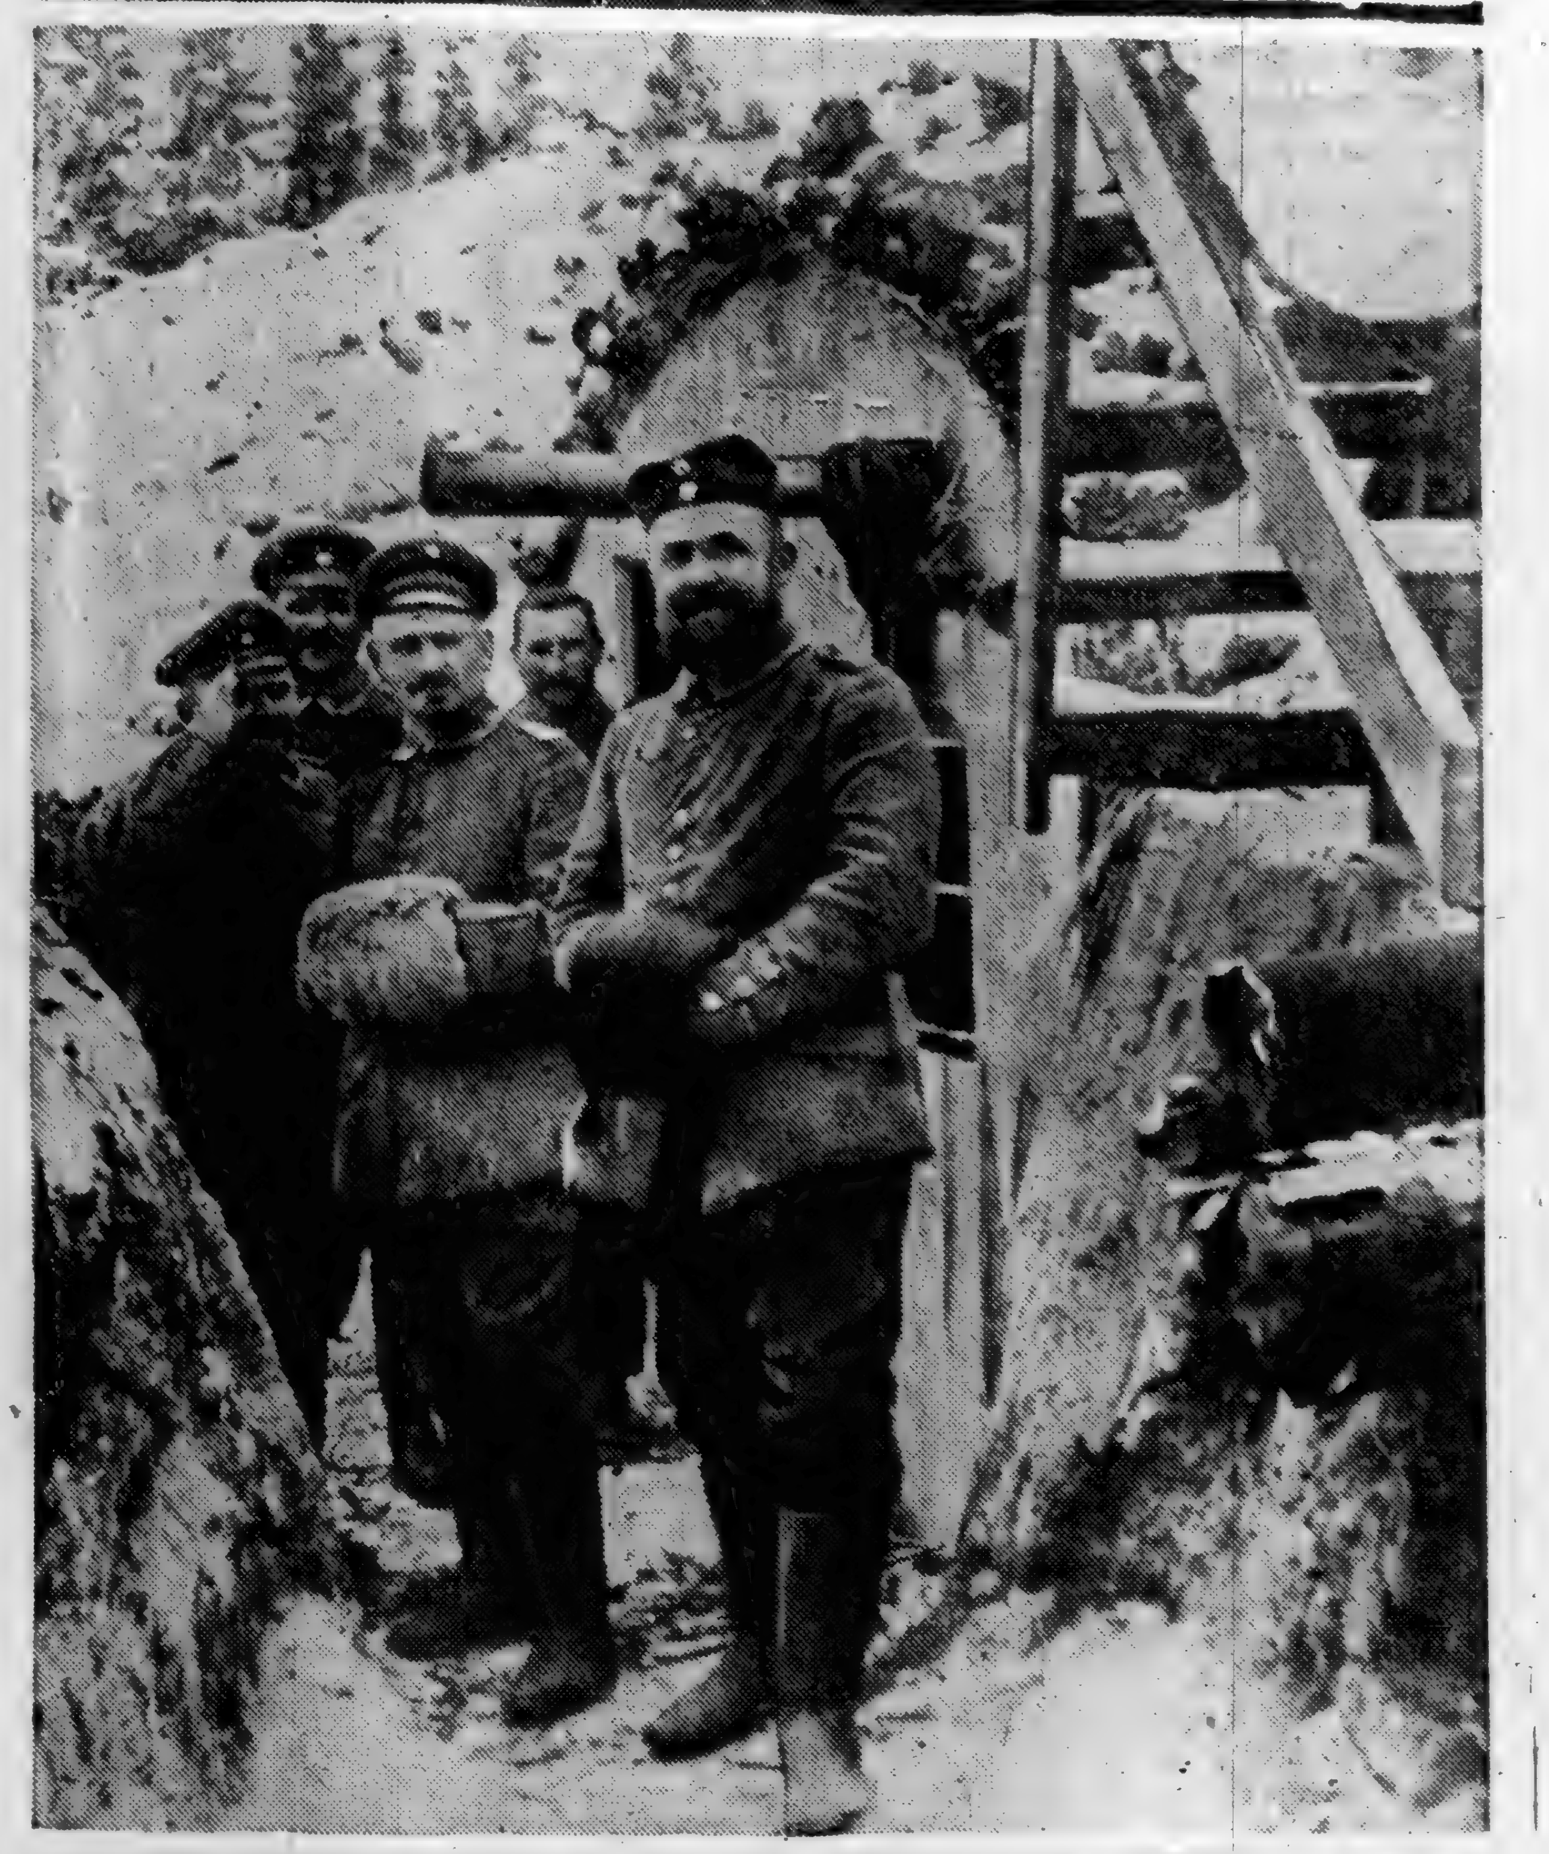
PLAN NEW SHOE STYLES; HUGE INCREASE SHOWN.

NEW YORK.—Shoe styles and new methods of manufacture adapted to the rapid expansion of the shoe trade are the chief topics under discussion in the convention of the National Shoe Retailer's Association here.

Manufacturers and dealers say that there was an increase of $100,000,000 in the shoe business last year, and they predict that the increase will be greater this year. This is attributed to the development of shoe fashions as well as to the war.

High top boots, with color schemes in white, pearl, ivory, champagne and bronze, are again coming in favor, and there will be many innovations in them. High heels are favored, and even walking shoes are to be of smarter lasts in tan and white combinations.

A WINTER SCENE IN THE GERMAN TRENCHES



HOW LIZZIE, THE LORRY, HELPED THE BOYS OUT

By Mary Boyle O'Reilly.

Somewhere in France, January 15. Poperinghe is the shell-battered village six miles west of Ypres. It was as near as I got to the front.

I met a brigadier there and the brigadier introduced to me the driver of a great lorry, saying, "Muldoon, I wish you would tell a little about the work of the divisional supply corps." And Driver Muldoon, cap over one ear, was intent on doing his best.

"I meantersay," protested Driver Muldoon, "this supply column is always on the way somewheres, and never once failed yet. That 'contemptible little army' has got ter be fed."

"Even by the Poperinghe road?" I suggested.

A glint of appreciation shone in his mild blue eyes. "I don't deny them Alleymongs did a good bit of shooting there," he admitted toleratingly, using Tommy Atkins' preferred pronuncia-

Then I knew he was well started. "There was one night ——."

Shell Roads for Convoys.

"You see, everything gets moved after dark, transports, troop trains, supplies, ambulances—all being invisible gray. No lights anywhere. Two thousand tons must go from the base nightly along the lines of communication. Nach'ally, the Alleymongs shell every road for convoys.

"One night the Q. M. G.'s clerk orders me to take a special load from railhead to Poperinghe sailient. 'The boys can't do without it,' he says into my ear, 'they are up an' at 'em in the morning.'

"So Lizzie (that's the lorry) slips off like a cat on the prowl. My watch said arf past two. Dark? Not arf. Way off in the blackness star shells burst over our trenches—orange, blue and white, pretty and silent like fireworks.

"A battalion galled and stung by shelling was limping in. One corporal called to me how Poperinghe had just been peppered with five-point-nine explosives. Along about arf past three I heard rapid fire remarks from a supply service going forward with small arm ammunition. 'Who goes there?' challenges an officer flashing his torch.

"Knowing what I was carrying, I spoke low lest the loaders should hear. 'Muldoon has right of way,' orders the officer. Then to me, 'Returning reliefs report a bad bit of road ahead. Good luck to you. Carry on.'

"'Right, oh, sir,' I says. Then me and Lizzie zips around the vans and nips along where the night reeked of petrol. There wasn't more'n two feet of mud on the road. The snap of boughs underwheel told how the trees were splintered by shrapnel. A bit further along the road took a turn and siege gun projectiles began roaring above.

"The whistling s-s-sh-s-s-sh of a high angle shell whooped down dead ahead. One splinter would send me and Lizzie spouting over a township.

Miles of Wooden Crosses.

"Across the fields a burning wood showed where the women were reaping in the dark. When one could see at all the destruction was pitiful—houses sawn asunder, barns riddled with shrapnel. Then miles and miles of small wooden crosses. The man who threw you a fag for breakfast lying in his raw brown grave long before tea.

"Suddenly a coal box from nowhere hit the road with a bang. Mud and lumps of earth showered around liberal. Poor old Lizzie skiddered and gave one cough. Then I knew them Alleymongs had got our range.

"Considering the load, we cut and ran. Scared? Sure I was scared. It was just like being a fly on a bull's eye.

"What's more, the regiment was waiting.

"Dawn came up as I drove into camp. There they all sat, squatted along the turnpike. If it wasn't for the non com they'd have given Lizzie a cheer. Roads a morass, bogged but never scrapped, she done the trick. That's how the boys held out through the big advance."

"What was Lizzie carrying?"

Driver Muldoon's surprised glance met mine.

"Carrying?" he repeated. "why, I thought I told you. The quartermaster's clerk says to me, he says, 'Muldoon, the boys are up an' at 'em in the morning. They can't do their bit without their tea and marmalade!'"

SPICK AND SPAN GARB FOR HOUSEHOLD TASKS

You would never guess how many women who appear in public gowned in silks and rich costumes delight in the simple wash frock for house wear. You would also be surprised to know how many otherwise well-groomed women "just slip on any old thing around the house." Certainly it is far more in keeping with the general idea of good dressing to see a clean wash frock or apron of gingham or percale than draggled finery which has decidedly seen better days.

Every woman, no matter how much of her work is done for her, finds use for an enveloping apron while she ties up a few packages, sorts out her bureau drawers or arranges a few flowers. Indeed, many women like to have on hand several full-length enveloping aprons to slip on right over the good frock when the maid is out and dinner must be prepared. As for the woman who does her own work, the necessity of the cover-all is apparent. An apron need not be a homely affair just because it is used for lowly tasks. The first one pictured is a Russian blouse of natural colored crash or linen. Gingham, percale, chambray and chintz are all appropriate for this design, but linen or crash will be found to absorb moisture better than the other materials and will give more protection. The huge pockets will hold plenty of useful bits of string, tacks, a duster, etc., etc. This model slips on over the head. It may be stitched in a color to give it a slight decorative touch. If one should so desire, a deep hem may be turned up on the right side and stitched into various sized pockets for convenience.

The other cover-all apron is a trifle more elaborate, but none the less useful. It too may be lengthened into a fairly attractive house frock. Chambray may be prettily smocked and bound with a contrasting color to raise this apron above the average. This may also be a slip-on over the head if one side at the raglan sleeve stitching is left free to be snapped in place after adjusting.

Cretonne is a cheerful fabric for the fashioning of the apron. The model showing bib and suspender arrangement is made from gay flowered cretonne and makes a pleasant step from the utility apron to the small lace affair. Deep pockets make this a practical model as well as pleasing.

The house dress with striped trimming is from striped blue and white bordered linen. The collar and cuffs are of white linen and made separately to be adjusted at will. The collar may be basted in place and the deep cuffs can be buttoned on to make the frock long-sleeved or removed at dishwashing time.

Gingham will never go out of style for wash dresses. Clean gingham somehow or other spells neatness in every line. Green and white plaid gingham trimmed with bands of plain dark green linen makes the very trim model with the turnover stock of white organdie. This stock can also be made separately, as can the cuffs of the same material. Several sets of collar and cuffs will keep the dress freshened up beyond the usual length of time between washings.

A dainty sewing apron of fine white material and lace is not to be despised even for stocking darning purposes. It is a relief to shake the homely apron for such a pretty confection as the first lacy model pictured. It makes even mending a festive process. A deep pocket is turned up, or rather faced on to the right side of this pointed apron, to hold scissors, thread, etc., or a bit of needlework which is waiting for a few stitches when the stockings are done. Black velvet ribbon bows ornament the front and velvet ribbon runs through the lace beading for strings. The bib may be used or omitted as one desires.

A bit lacier and not quite so utilitarian is the last apron. German val lace and handkerchief linen will make this more durable than would at first seem. If the German val is used the belt and streamers of the lace insertion will be found practical enough.

THE THING AT HAND

There was once a clever little housekeeper who desired to rejuvenate the things which furnished her home. Her husband was a salaried man, and his salary wasn't large enough to allow her to be extravagant. In fact, its size often gave her the opportunity to let her mind become active. In this instance, it became very inventive. In fixing over her bedroom she bought a great quantity of scrim to form curtains and all sorts of covers. She realized that it was economical to buy in great quantity. Failing to find a design which could be used to ornament these dainty articles, she happened to gaze at the wallpaper. Sure enough, there was the very design for her. With pencil and tissue paper she went to the wall. Placing the tissue paper on the wallpaper, she carefully traced its conventional design. This she sewed—paper and all—to one of her covers. She realized that this would be firmer and more durable. The pattern outlined by the thread could be traced over and over again by the aid of carbon paper and the embroidering could be done right over the basting stitches. The little housekeeper's face flushed with pride as her husband thanked the heavens above for giving him such an ingenious little sweetheart.

LINGERIE PILLOWS.

The advantage about making lingerie pillows is that they are sure to be used, for they do equally well in milady's chamber and in the baby's coach. They are usually feather filled and covered with silk in a dainty shade. To soften the colored slip a cover of fine white handkerchief linen or batiste is made and is elaborated with a floral design, an artistic initial, rows of lace or merely ribbon. Only one distinction might be made between the pillows used for the two classes, and this is, that for a baby the embroidery should not be so elaborate. The forget-me-not posies are about the most appropriate for this purpose, while garlands of tiny rosebuds are not to be considered out of place.

A CHANGE.

Just for variety's sake, why not try to buttonhole that new luncheon set in solid black? If you are to fashion the set from odd pieces of linen or damask where the initial cost will not be a great consideration if the set should grow tiresome, the black will be a relief from the usual white or blue or green. Cut out your plate doilies and tumbler doilies and centerpiece or runners just a trifle larger all around than the size you wish them to be. Turn in a small hem and either roll it by hand or stitch it on the machine. Then with a fast black mercerized embroidery cotton buttonhole over this, making about five buttonhole stitches radiate from one point where the needle is inserted above the hemmed edge. You will have a serviceable and unique luncheon set that will set off a bold or dainty patterned china to perfection.

TO PROTECT GOWNS.

From blue or tan linen the most satisfactory kind of a protector can be made to slip over gowns as they hang in one's wardrobe. Such a protection is necessary even when the greatest precaution against dust is taken. Make an oblong bag of linen. Let it be sufficiently long to cover the longest of dresses. Make a seam across the bottom of the bag. At the top of the bag slope off the corners for a few inches over what would be the length of a coat-hanger blade. Set in pieces of linen about an inch and a half wide along the length of these sloped ends to make the protector fit easily over the garment and hanger it was meant to cover. In the center of the top, between the two shoulders, cut a small hole to allow the hook-neck of the hanger to come through. Down the front of the bag, from the neck to within two feet of the bottom, make an opening and fasten it with snap fasteners. This large opening makes it possible to slip the protector on and off the gowns without mussing them. If desired, small sachet bags can be tacked inside the bag.

An apple a day, it has been wisely said, will keep the doctor away. But so will plenty of water, and water is cheaper and handier than apples. Because water is to be had for the asking and taking, we do not value it. We are careful to wash our outer bodies, but we fail to realize the value of flushing our inner bodies. Doctors say that if we all gave the body eight glasses of water each day doctors would have less practice. "Most of us would starve," said one doctor lately, "if we followed this schedule": 1 glass of water upon rising, 2 glasses of water between breakfast and luncheon, 2 glasses of water between luncheon and dinner, 1 glass of water upon retiring. That is certainly not an impossible achievement. "But," added this doctor, "although there are two opinions about drinking water with meals, the weight of medical opinion is against asking food to swim in water. Before and after meals is the safest rule for drinking water, and then plenty of it." It is worth thinking about: if we can get good health at so cheap a price.

LADIES! SECRET TO DARKEN GRAY HAIR

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant; remove every bit of dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use tonic, costing about 50 cents a large bottle, at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared. After another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant and you appear years younger.

HEAVY MEAT EATERS HAVE SLOW KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if you feel Backachy or have bladder trouble—Take glass of Salts

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which excites the kidneys, they become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood, then we get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, stop eating meat and get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate the kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

Prohibitionists Nominate

The Prohibitionists of the 12th., District met in the Court House at Auburn, last Saturday, and elected a District Chairman and Secretary, and also nominated a candidate for Congress.

A very enthusiastic crowd of the Prohibitionists of the 12th., district elected Mr. William Moudy of Churubusco, as District Chairman, and Mr. Ward Jackman, of Butler, as District Secretary. The office of District Treasurer was left vacant for the present, but will be filled at a later meeting.

The Twelfth District nominates a strong man for Congress. Prof. W. O. Bailey who for a number of years was head of the Department of Education of Tri-State College of Angola, and who is now head of the Department of English and History in the same school.

Prof. W. O. Bailey was born in 1854 and remembers very well the stirring events of the Civil war. His father being one of the men that enlisted in the Union Army. He well remembers the sorrow that came into their home when President Lincoln was assassinated. His early education was gotten in the rural school and later by alternate teaching and going to college graduated from college at Ada, Ohio, with the Degree of Bachelor of Science in 1883, and in 1888 he was given the degree of Master of Science. He has been connected with several schools among which were the schools of LaRue, Ohio, and Angola, Indiana, and in both of these Prof. Bailey was the Superintendent. His work as Superintendent of Schools had proven him to be an educator of the highest rank. In 1893, he became a stockholder in Tri-State College, Angola, Indiana, and at the same time took charge of the Department of Education. Later, he became head of the English and History Department in the same college and holds this position at the present time.

The Twelfth District also places a candidate in the field to be offered at the State Convention, June 6 and 7, as the Prohibition standard bearer for Governor. Prof. A. L. Moudy, of Waterloo, was unanimously endorsed as the choice of the Twelfth District.

Mr. Moudy is a man of sterling integrity, who is known in every township in the district. He is a man that is always found on the side of right and if elected to the office of Governor would be a credit to all who support him.

OLD-TIME COLD CURE—DRINK HOT TEA!

Get a small package of Hamburg Breast Tea, or as the German folks call it, "Hamburger Brust Thee," at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the tea, put a cup of boiling water upon it, pour through a sieve and drink a teacup full at any time during the day or before retiring. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieving congestion. Also loosens the bowels, thus breaking up a cold.

Try it the next time you suffer from a cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. THE KITCHEN

Tried Cooking Recipes

Scotch Cookies—Mix one cup of fine oatmeal, one cup of rolled oats, two cups of flour, two tablespoonfuls sugar, one teaspoonful of salt, one saltspoonful of soda; work in two tablespoonfuls butter or lard; moisten with hot water, using a little more than one-half a cup. The dough should be very stiff. Roll very thin, shape and bake.

Small Chile Recipe—most recipes for chile sauce call for large quantities, but here is one to make use of a few tomatoes. Chop fine twelve tomatoes, three green peppers, and two onions; add one tablespoonful cinnamon and salt each, three tablespoonfuls sugar, and three cups of vinegar; cook slowly for one and one-half hours.

German Sweet Pickle—take three dozen cucumbers of medium size, one pint of string beans, two cauliflowers and one pint of pearl onions. Put all these in brine for several days, then soak in vinegar and water for a day or two. Cut the cucumbers lengthwise, the beans in half and the cauliflowers in sections, discarding all the green leaves. Cover these with fresh grape leaves and add a little allum and put over the fire for a few minutes to green them. To seven pounds of this mixture take one quart of vinegar, two and one-half pounds of brown sugar, plenty of mace, cinnamon, cloves, and broken white ginger root. Boil this for two or three hours, then set away to get cold; the next morning boil again for the same time and then pour over the pickles.

Shrimps Au Gratin.—Season a pint of stewed tomatoes with salt and pepper. In a buttered fireproof serving dish sprinkle a layer of soft bread crumbs slightly moistened with melted butter. On the crumbs place a layer of shrimps, canned or fresh, as the season affords; then add a layer of the tomatoes; continue in this fashion until all the ingredients are used, having the last layer of buttered crumbs. Place in a hot oven and bake until heated thru and the crumbs are delicately browned.

Tomato Jelly—With gelatine, may be cut in squares and served with lettuce and celery and mayonaise for a salad. It is easily made by dissolving a box of gelatine in a cupful of cold water. Cook the tomato, season and strain it, and then heat it again. Use a quart of this to the cup of gelatine and stir well until the latter is dissolved. Pour into shallow dishes or little molds and serve in individual plates prettily arranged. An old-fashioned way to make tomato jelly without gelatine is to fill a stone jar with ripe tomatoes sliced. Cover it tightly, put the jar in a pot of water and boil it for four or five hours, strain the juice thru a fine seive and to each pint of juice put a pound of brown sugar. Add the whites of six eggs to each gallon of juice and boil until thick; then put it in glasses. This is a rich odd jelly. If preferred more spicy, put only half as much sugar, pepper, and salt to taste, and mace and nutmeg.

Spiced Grapes—Spiced grapes are a splendid relish for cold meats and easily made. Wash ten pounds grapes cover with cold water, and cook until tender. Press thru a sieve and remove stones and skins. Add five pounds granulated sugar, two quarts vinegar, one tablespoon cinnamon, one tablespoon allspice, and one whole nutmeg, grated. Boil down to the consistency of thick catsup; seal while hot.

Veal Klopps—With one pint of finely chopped cold veal mix one teaspoonful of salt, one quarter of a teaspoonful of white pepper, ten drops of onion juice and the unbeaten whites of four eggs. Wet the hands and mold into tiny balls. Have ready a shallow saucepan partly filled with slighted salted boiled water. Drop in the klopps and poach for five minutes, then skim out, arrange on rounds of thin buttered toast, and pour around them this sauce: Melt in a saucepan one tablespoonful of butter, add a half teaspoonful of salt, a dash of cayenne, and one half of a cupful each of thin cream and veal stock. Stir until smoothly thickened, simmer for five minutes. When ready to take from the fire add one egg yolk with a spoonful of cream.

Chicken Pie—First cook chicken or fowl as for fricassee, then take all the meat from the bones and chop the gizzard and heart. Now, make a pie crust, same as for any pie, only use butter for shortening and mix with milk. Roll a little thicker than usual and cover a deep pie plate, then put in the chicken meat, having the light and dark evenly distributed, add the giblets and gravy (which has been thickened), enough to show thru the meat, not too much or it will run out, then cover and tuck in the edge of crust and press down with finger-tips or fork. Have slits cut in top crust, bake till nicely browned. To brush over with milk before cooking helps it to brown. Serve hot with plenty of gravy. It is well to cook the chicken or fowl the day before you want the pie, then remove all fat from the broth. Season your gravy to your taste. You can use the bones with rice, potatoes, onion, carrot, celery and any broth or gravy left over and make a nice soup for the following day.

It is easier to break the will of a dead man than the will of a live woman.

WHEN BUTTER AND EGGS ARE HIGH.

Some one has said that the best way to make a strange cat feel at home is to cover the animal with butter. By the time she has licked all the butter from her body she will have forgotten that she had ever lived any other place. In this day, when butter is worth its weight in gold, the thrifty housewife is more apt to cater to the noisy hen than to the gentle fireside companion, for eggs, too, are an item in the household budget. A number of valuable suggestions for economizing in the use of these two important foods are thrown her way in the article which follows.

During the winter months, when the price of butter and eggs soars to undreamed heights, and the housekeeper views with alarm her rapidly diminishing table allowance, it is a good plan to look over cookbooks and collections of recipes with a view to finding a number of dishes which call for little or none of these expensive ingredients. It is surprising, when one comes to make a study of the matter, to find what a number of good things can be made without eggs and with a minimum of butter.

A little experimenting will show that in many dishes where butter has always been considered a necessity drippings can be satisfactorily substituted for it. In muffins, cakes, gingerbread, for making sauces and gravies, for flavoring vegetables, baked beans and spaghetti, for sauteing potatoes, corn fritters, etc., for bread stuffing for fish, chicken or meat, the use of drippings will save a considerable amount of money in the course of a month and give surprisingly good results. Each kind of dripping should be kept by itself and used according to its flavor. Bacon and ham fat will be found especially good for flavoring lima beans, baked beans, lentils, etc.; sausage fat for stuffing; lamb and beef drippings as a foundation for sauces and gravies; chicken fat for sauteing potatoes, and as a shortening for muffins; rendered beef suet for shortening hot breads, cakes and pastry. In fact, the uses for bland and savory drippings are endless, limited only by the housekeeper's ingenuity.

When it is desired to curtail the supply of butter for the table, many ingenious makeshifts may be resorted to without being noticeable. When a good Yorkshire pudding is served with the roast beef, little bread and butter will be eaten with the dinner; light, fluffy dumplings with the stew, or a meat pie with biscuit crust, also reduces the amount of bread with butter consumed at that meal; French toast, sauted in chicken fat and served hot for luncheon, with sugar and cinnamon, makes the use of butter superfluous; and triangles of bread, fried to a delicious brown in bacon drippings and served as an accompaniment to the morning rasher of bacon, are quite as acceptable as toast. The use of fruit butters and marmalades, too, will often reduce the amount of butter eaten with biscuits or muffins, and make an agreeable change for the family.

At first glance it would seem impossible to reduce the number of eggs used for breakfast without cheating some member of the family of his breakfast entirely! But there are ways of reducing the egg bill, even here. If there are but three eggs in the refrigerator, and four or five persons to be served, prepare a "rice scramble" and see how well it will serve and how well liked it will be. In a tablespoonful of ham or pork dripping cook a half cupful or more of cold boiled rice, not letting brown, but merely heat through. When hot, add three slightly beaten eggs, mixed with three tablespoonfuls of milk or water, season with salt and pepper and stir until the eggs are set. Arrange on a hot platter, garnish with parsley and serve piping hot.

For a plain omelet calling for only three eggs, beat together the eggs and 2 tablespoonfuls of cornstarch; add 1 cup of milk, season with salt and pepper, and saute in a hot, greased omelet pan until set, then fold and serve.

Another delicious omelet is made by first cutting three slices of bacon into tiny pieces and frying until crisp. Two or three cold boiled potatoes, cut in small dice, should be added to this and well seasoned with salt and pepper. When hot, pour over the bacon and potatoes two slightly beaten eggs and cook until set and browned on the bottom. Fold and serve piping hot.

Another good breakfast dish is an omelet of cold boiled rice and eggs, with chopped green peppers sprinkled over the omelet before folding.

The number of desserts that can be made without eggs is legion, and such dishes should figure on the bills of fare to the exclusion of custards and similar puddings. Gelatin desserts are particularly good and cheap; tapioca and rice puddings are likewise cheap and good, if well made. Fruit is a good standby for winter desserts, and can be served in a multitude of ways. Scalloped apples, apple brown betty, apple tapioca, apple pudding, baked apples and apple compote are but few of the many ways of preparing this good fruit. Steamed puddings, graham, suet and carrot are easily made and call for no eggs. Cornstarch puddings, chocolate blanc mange (made of cornstarch), fig tapioca, brown suger pudding and pies, tarts and turnovers will give plenty of variety in the matter of desserts. Ices are good, inexpensive and not difficult to prepare, and a very good ice cream can be made of condensed milk that reduces the expense of that much-liked dish. The sweetened variety should be used, and for chocolate ice cream can be used in the proportion of a 10-ct. can to one-quarter cake of chocolate, which has been cooked in two cups of fresh milk and one tablespoonful of vanilla. Beat well together and freeze. A good coffee ice cream is made of a can of condensed milk, 2 cups of fresh milk, 1 cup of strong black coffee and 1 tablespoonful of vanilla. For peach ice cream use one can of the milk, 1 cup of fresh milk, 3 cups of mashed peaches and sugar to taste.

TILE FISH REAPPEAR IN MYSTERIOUS WAY

NEW YORK—The arrival of 8,000 pounds of tilefish on the fishing sloop Stranger at Fulton market recently was an event to be noted. Old market men remember the year of the great tilefish tragedy, when, in 1882, within a few months the tilefish were almost exterminated.

The first news of the disaster came when, in March of that year, the master of a fishing craft put into this port and reported that he had sailed sixty-two miles through dead and dying tilefish.

Other vessels in March and April of the same year came into port and reported similar experiences. From these and other accounts it was estimated that the dead fish covered an area of 170 miles long and 25 miles wide and that upward of 1,400,000,000 tilefish had perished.

Come and Go Suddenly

Now comes the news that tilefish are again to be caught in sufficient numbers to make them a staple article of food. The discovery, the almost complete extermination, and the re-establishment of this large, handsome and potentially valuable species, all within the space of a few years, is one of the remarkable stories of marine biology.

So far as is known, local fishermen had never seen this fish until May, 1879, when Capt. Kirby of the fishing schooner William V. Hutchins, while fishing near the 100 fathom curve, south of Nantucket, caught several thousand pounds of a "strange and handsomely colored fish." He sent a specimen to the United States fish commissioner. It was found to be new and was described and named lopholatilus chameleonticeps.

Too Cold for Them.

What killed the tilefish has never been known for certainty, but investigations of the water temperatures at the bottom, made by the bureau of fisheries, indicate that it may have been due to the sudden chilling of the water.

The tilefish, like cod, is a bottom dweller, but unlike the cod, it is of a family accustomed to the warmer waters of the tropics. It finds a congenial temperature where the edge of the gulf stream touches the bottom, on a slope as steep as a mountain side, and there is, therefore, but a narrow strip on which the water is neither too shallow nor too deep.

American business enterprise should look before it leaps. Certain Jamaicans are mildly indignant because Yankee trade seekers solicited them by means of catalogues printed in Spanish. Not only do the Jamaicans speak English, but the village negroes speak it with a strong cockney accent.

CRITICISM FOR RECKLESS.

Secretary of State Addresses Convention on the "Bug" Driver.

"Motorists would be well advised if they could more appreciably understand that public opinion has been hardening considerably of late against the motor car driver who operates it under conditions and at a speed which is not in accordance with a consideration that ought to exist among all users on the public highways. They would also be well advised if they would not further provoke the state and local authorities to go to the extreme length 'antimotorists' have often advised, which these authorities would be very reluctant to do.

"Every day, all over the state, and it would seem in increasing numbers, drivers of motor cars are prosecuted and fined for reckless driving. Reports of accidents, fatal and serious, from motoring are also, it would appear, on the increase, and each year a large number of amendments of a drastic character are introduced in the legislature.

"Sometimes prosecutions are uncalled for. The police may have been overzealous or may have exaggerated the speed at which the accused were traveling. But often it is to be feared the innocent are made to suffer for the folly of others; the antics of some mad motorist have outraged the public feelings of the district and the police are on the lookout for some one to punish. But when all these qualifications have been made, there remains the fact that a considerable number of persons who drive motor cars are not fit to be trusted with them.

"A minority sufficiently large to be a dangerous nuisance behave on some roads very much as do certain persons who make themselves intolerable on the hunting field. They are the terror of all other persons driving or walking upon the highways. They tear through congested centers of population, and seem to take particular delight in causing every one to scatter out of their path. Moreover, they make their wild flights on journeys on which it is of no earthly consequence to any human being at what hour they reach their destination, and they set up a standard of speed which those engaged on real business are not slow to imitate. No wonder a serious accident happens often. The time has arrived for drastic action.

"Those who have studied the problem realize that a real and permanent remedy lies to a great extent in the hands of the motorists themselves, for actions must not be left entirely with the police and other authorities, and it behooves all motorists, and especially the motor organizations, to make common cause and to bestir themselves to sustained and strenuous efforts. Every motorist who has the general welfare at heart will readily lend his efforts, either in his individual capacity or through the organization to which he may belong, to effect a permanent discontinuance of the practice of reckless driving."

GRAPHITE FOR FRICTION.

Motor Discomfort Eliminated by Use of Proper Lubricants.

Much of the expense and annoyance that accompanies owning an auto can be done away with by studying the problem of lubrication. If perfect lubrication were obtainable, there would be practically no wear out to a car.

The substance that nearest approaches the ideal lubricant is selected flake graphite. By its use friction is reduced to a minimum, unpleasant noises are subdued and repair cost is materially cut down.

Graphite lubricants are now being used to prevent cutting and seizing, and to guard against rust and corrosion. As a reducer of friction, graphite has no equal, as it is unaffected by temperature change and is immune to the squeezing effects of pressure.

One of the attractive leather costumes for motoring is of grass green suede, made with a fitted skirt buttoned down the front and back, from belt to hem, with suede buttons. The coat, in Norfolk model, has a high choker collar of beaver fur and cuffs to match. The hat to go with the suit has a tasselled crown of the suede, with a band of the fur trimming. Of course the suit is completed with velvet pantalettes edged with the fur, the velvet matching the suede in color.

LIBERAL IN ROAD WORK.

American Automobile Association Man Says Coasts Should Be Linked.

Roads of America may mean the very existence of the nation, according to A. G. Batchelder, chairman of the executive board of the American Automobile association. Roads that go somewhere, arteries of communication that bind the nation together, roads serving to the fullest extent commercial and social and possibly military needs—these are the highways now demanded and obtainable by that logical federal co-operation with the several states which has been accentuated by the facts set concisely forth in the stupendous European conflict, according to Mr. Batchelder. The chairman points to the fact that in exactly the same manner as it became necessary that the states should help their county units in the construction of comprehensive road systems, it is now essential that the national government shall lend aid to its state parts in the early realization of a road plan that will in the greatest degree weld together coast and coast and lakes and gulf.

Mr. Batchelder says that the country must have a maximum opportunity for the maximum transport of men and munitions and the motor car and the roads are the means for its accomplishment. Thirty thousand miles of road would gridiron the entire United States with interconnecting and interlocking highways, and would embrace every state in the Union, giving each one a big main artery for highway travel, according to Mr. Batchelder, who believes that four direct east and west roads from the Atlantic to the Pacific, with one "Y" from the Great Lakes to the Pacific coast along the northern border, five north and south roads—border to border—and three prominent diagonals for important interconnections would be included in this total mileage. At $10,000 per mile, Mr. Batchelder estimates that this would mean a road requirement of $300,000,000. This $10,000 per mile is based on an average of extremes from low cost because of topography and nearby material to high cost per mile because of contra-conditions, and the figures also include bridges and culverts.

At the present population and the normal increase during the period of ten years, this would mean an equated payment of 31 cents per inhabitant per year. Mr. Batchelder points to the fact that a state which does not provide interstate road connection with adjoining states is plainly at a disadvantage, and says that a road brings commensurate value for the expenditure, and is available to those living in the territory traversed, as well as those who come from a distance. He believes that the commonwealth should build arteries of communication, and meet the wants of the largest number of people just as it is done by the railroads.

The leather turban trimmed with a band of fur and having the long velvet streamer scarf coming from under the brim at the right side is very much liked for motoring wear. The streamer is intended to be twisted around the neck like a scarf.

Scarfs of white camel's hair, with Roman stripes at the ends and deep knotted fringes, are warm and have almost taken the place of the silk and knitted scarfs. They come also in dark colors.

In the large assortment of footwarmers there is one brown earthen jug which, after being filled with boiling hot water and tightly corked, is slipped into a padded plush cover which is fastened with snap catches. It holds the heat for several hours and is almost equal to the old-fashioned soapstone. The usual varieties of fur footmuffs are offered, but women seem to prefer the fur-lined boots, which are quite as warm and allow greater freedom.

Pithy Points

Hawaii has a volunteer army of 3,000 men, thus setting a fine example for its big sister states.

Was it not fortunate that Europe was skilled in preventing needless waste of life? Otherwise, where would the soldiers come from?

Among the good ideas that should receive attention is that looking to the reservation of the cemeteries as sanctuaries for wild song birds.

If China does not expect to pay the European war debt it is time that it effected an alliance with the prospective winners—if anybody can pick them.

One of the most lovely coincidences in history and mathematics lies in the fact that presidential candidates are always chosen by their friends on leap year.

TWO BILLS CLASH IN CONGRESS

Radically Different House and Senate Measures May Result as Ruinous to Defense

WILSON LACKS IN LEADERS

Conflicting Projects in Congress Bring Out a Marked Difference of Opinion on Suqject

WASHISGTON—A curious situation involving preparedness exists in Congress today. The Senate committee is going ahead with one measure and the House committee is going ahead with another. The two bills are radically different. The upshot probably will be confusion which may result in a compromise which will spell ruin.

President Wilson has no leader in either branch of Congress to direct his legislative campaign. Senator Kern has the title of leader and it is barely possible that he has the qualifications, but he seems in no mood to make use of them. Of course, the situation in the House is well understood. Mr. Kitchin is a pacifist and, therefore, in consicence bound to oppose anything like preparation to save the country from an enemy's assault.

The chairmen of the Senate and House committees on military affairs are at odds on questions relating to the militia and the continental army.

Would Depend on National Guard.

Ranking army officers for the main part are in favor of some kind of continental reserve system and are opposed to complete dependence upon a National Guard, even if it be recognized, paid and made into what might be called a coherent body. It is possible that the service men would approve a plan to make the militia seviceable if the state troops under the law could be in a high sense nationalized.

The reserve system was recommended by some of the higher commissioned officers of the army, but they buttressed their recommendations in a way that Congress is not likely to buttress any law governing the matter. As many of the army men view it, the National Guard never can be a force entirely to be depended upon on the instant that it is needed, so long as it has forty-eight different commanding officers in the persons of forty-eight different governors of states. The friends of the plan to utilize the militia to the utmost have in mind, of course, a strengthening of the law so that the guardsmen can be used instantly and together, but there are many obstacles in the way if some of the army men are looking at the matter in the right light.

Lawmakers Cannot Agree.

These differences of opinion have been discussed time and again in public print. The matter for concern today is that members of Congress seemingly cannot agree upon any kind of a program. The Democrats are divided into half a dozen different camps. The Republicans also are divided, but their divisions are kept more or less from the public eye. The minority party apparently intends to wait for Democratic developments and then get its membership in compact form and to make an assault on the Democratic opposition.

It readily can be seen why it is that the administration needs a leader. A strong man in each House, with the good of the administration at heart, probably could force his fellow Democrats into line so as to make them stand for something concrete. All the Democrats want party success at the next election, or at least it is supposed that they do. The members of the different factions are telling each other day after day that they must get together on something definite, and yet neither faction is showing any willingness to yield to the wishes of the other. It is fight, fight, fight, all along the lines, and there are a good many of them.

Trouble Over Naval Plans.

There is as much trouble in the Democratic party in Congress over the navy program as there is over that for the army. Some of the Democrats want battleships, cruisers, torpedo boats, submarines, hydro-aeroplanes, destroyers and all the rest. Other Democrats want battleships only; still others want submarines only, and still others do not want any increase in the navy whatsoever.

The continued opposition of Mr. Bryan, Mr. Kitchin and some others to the President's legislative plan is strengthened, it is said, by the known belief of the men concerned in the assault that Mr. Wilson at heart is just as much of a pacifist and an antipreparedness advocate as they are. Therefore, they think that their cause will be aided in Congress by the adhesion of Democrats who do not think it is right to be compelled to vote for something which the compelling power does not believe in, the power being used largely for political purposes.

MOVABLE GUNS MAY DEFEND U. S. COAST.

Army Experts May Recommend the Building of 300 Huge Cannon and Transport Cars.

Boston—Railroad carriages to transport huge guns from one part of the coast line to another are being contemplated by our army experts, says The Transcript. These cars will weigh with their guns, about 270,000 pounds. The cars will be moved about the country by locomotives and left wherever they are needed. Concrete bases to which the cars can be firmly locked will be built in large numbers on spur tracks at every possible vantage point along the Atlantic coast. It is estimated that about 300 will be necessary to give adequate protection to the coast. Three hundred cars will also be necessary. The cost of the entire undertaking would be in the neighborhood of $20,000,000.

WAR AND RED CROSS FOR FRENCH YOUTH

Womam Visitor Returned From Over Seas Tells of Relief Work in Battle Region

"Only two games are played by the children of France; for the boys it is 'war' and for the girls always 'Red Cross,'" said Mrs. Edgar N. Dickson, who recently returned from Europe and is a guest at the home of Miss Gertrude Bean, 4 Prospect Avenue.

While in France, Mrs. Dickson assisted Mrs. Berkley Smith, daughter of the noted American artist, in the work of relief she is doing among the French and Belgian children. Mrs. Smith maintains a large home, not far from the sea, where from time to time she takes the sons and daughters of French and Belgian officers, clothes and feeds them and brings into their drab child lives a ray of sunshine. This work of relief is made possible by popular subscriptions.

Child Cry Pierces.

"Above the tragedy of war," said Mrs. Dickson, "it is the cry of the helpless children that pierces our hearts. Their ever uncomprehending, 'O, mother, why must such things be?' their patient acceptance of hunger, cold and little aching bodies, their pathetic gratitude for possible pleasures—pleasures that should be counted among the rights of childhood—I am sure appeals to the sympathies of us all.

"In the midst of so much physical suffering among the brave men and so much mental anguish among the braver women, the rights of childhood are almost forgotten and life among the children is sometimes resolved into a struggle for a crust of bread or a cup of water.

"They are all so tiny, so patient, so unable to fight for themselves and because of this they are among the greatest sufferers from the terrible monster of war, which spares not even the little children.

Suffer From War.

"Last winter their bodies were half frozen and starved; last summer, still starving, wasted by terrible heat and deadly humidity, their little minds and hearts filled with the horrors of war—is it any wonder their child faces are drawn and old, that they are sad, little beings?"

Mrs. Dickson related an incident in a hospital where she was doing relief work. Long trains, usually cattle trains, brought many wounded, "gray faced men, some of them mere boys, whose clothing was covered with mud and dirt and stiff with great red-brown spots."

"All we could do for these poor fellows," said Mrs. Dickson, "was to make them less miserable, give them a cooling drink and gently close the eyes of those whose earthy journeys were forever ended.

The Light Goes Out.

"Among the wounded was a dusty, pain racked face. The eyes opened and a smile flickering across the tired feature of the soldier. He whispered: 'May I kiss you little madame; it would seem almost as if I were kissing my own little girl.' I kissed him as the last ray of life went out. O, how I longed to help that little unknown daughter!"

Mrs. Dickson says she will be pleased to receive the contributions of Milwaukeeans, who wish to give something in support of the relief work being carried on in France.

"And we would be very glad to know," said Mrs. Dickson, "whether the contribution is for some little boy or some little girl."

SEE CANAL BARRIER TO DREADNAUGHTS

LOCKS ARE 1,000 FEET LONG

Future Usefulness of the Waterway and Its Effect on Sea Forces is Experts Problem

Washington, D. C.—Secretary Daniels' recent report to congress that it "would be unwise to build dreadnought so large that could not easily pass through the Panama canal" has raised the question in Washington as to how long it will be, in view of the recent advances in naval architecture, before the Panama canal will be obsolete so far as the passage of up to date battle ships is concerned. It is no secret that more than a year ago naval officials were seriously disturbed over the prospect that within a decade the canal would have outlived its present usefulness for the larger battle ships, but a recent tendency in naval construction for greater length and less beam in the heavy ships has, for the present, dissipated most of the fears then entertained.

Width of Locks 110 Feet.

The usable width of the Panama canal locks is 110 feet and the usable length 1,000 feet. The ships of the California class in the navy, of 32,000 tons, are 600 feet in length, 97 feet 4½ inches in beam, have a draft of 30 feet and a speed of 21 knots. These ships will carry 12 14-inch guns. It is the opinion of naval experts that the beam of future dreadnoughts intended to use the Panama canal cannot exceed 105 feet, which would give a leeway of only two and one-half feet on each side. In length it is obvious that an increase from 600 to 975 feet could be accomplished, and, in view of the fact that speed is now being increased in the construction of all kinds of battleships, it is apparent that the length of ships is likely to prove one of the principal developments in the ships of the immediate future.

Warships Near Breadth Limit.

"The big battleships of the United States navy have almost reached the limit in breadth, so far as the Panama canal is concerned," said Franklin Roosevelt, assistant secretary of the navy, today. "The modern tendency in naval construction, however, as developed by recent naval events, is for an increase in the speed of all types of naval vessels, and speed is attained, in part, by increasing length in proportion to beam. The torpedo boat destroyer, for instance, is a vessel 300 feet long with a beam of only thirty feet, the proportion being about ten to one. In a general way, the battle cruiser follows the same lines, being approximately 800 feet long and eighty feet wide, in round figures. So far as the Panama canal is concerned, it would probably be possible to build battleships of a width of 104 or 105 feet and 970 feet in length, all of which will increase their tonnage greatly, and would probably compel the carrying of the heavy armor near the center of the ship, add greatly to the weight of the machinery and increase the cost to $30,000,000 or more each."

Four factors enter into battleship construction and so closely are they related that an emphasis on one factor must be accomplished in the present day battleship at the expense of the others. The offensive power of the ship is confined largely to the big guns carried, and their weight and position enter into the final reckoning in a large degree. The defensive power lies in the armour carried and the weight of the armour must be carefully distributed. The motive power is, of course, supplied by the engines, and the endurance of the ships or steaming radius depends upon the fuel supply aboard.

Must Increase Tonnage.

It is obvious, therefore, that if the California, which is of 32,000 ton burden, is carrying practically all the big guns, of which the ship is capable, there must be an increase in tonnage, and, therefore, in size, before more guns can be added. If, however, the ship is increased in size, there must be an increase in the weight of engines, if modern requirements in speed are to be met. An increase in engines means more fuel and the question of increased armour must be considered in connection with increases in size. It is estimated by the naval experts that an increase of guns by 25 per cent on the California would easily mean an increase of from 10 to 12 per cent in displacement, to say nothing of the length and breadth which would go to make up the additional weight. In other words, the question of placing more big guns on a vessel of the type of the California enters largely into the question of how long the Panama canal will be available for the use of that type of vessel.

Navy Yards May Be Obsolete.

The problem of the draft of vessel of increased size does not enter so much into the Panama canal question as it does into the ability of the ship to use the navy yards and ports of the country. Rear Admiral Sanford has just testified before the house committee on naval affairs that there is only one dependable navy yard in the United States for battleships of all kinds, and that is Puget Sound yard. While New York harbor has a channel for commercial purposes of forty feet, there is no such depth as that available for vessels trying to reach the Brooklyn navy yard. The depth in many other important harbors is far less than it is in New York.

The tendency to build big battleships will not, in the opinion of naval experts, decrease as a result of the experience thus far in the European war. In fact, control of the seas depends upon big ships of the best type available, and more of them. When the Panama canal was begun the United States was laying down battleships of 14,000 and 16,000 tons displacement. Today this country is building 32,000 ton battle ships, and naval officers two or three years ago told congress that the 40,000 ton ship was in sight, and that, mechanically there was no limit to which the size of battleships might go. It is possible that a 50,000 ton battleship might go through the Panama canal, if built in such a way as to clear the locks, but there is no certainty that other nations would stop at such a limit and it might be that a time not far distant would develop a new type of naval architecture which would practically "scrap" every battleship now building, just as the English dreadnaught in 1905 practically rendered obselete every battleship then in existence.

"It is the general opinion of naval men," said Mr. Roosevelt, "that all our naval eggs should not be placed in one basket. By that I mean to say that there is believed to be a positive value, numerically, to units of the best type."

This sentiment was expressed recently by Secretary Daniels to congress and it is echoed among the best officers of the navy. They do not feel that it would be safe for this country to trust itself to a few all big gun naval monsters, rather than to a considerable number of fighting units which measure up to the highest standards of naval architecture as maintained by other powers. The "eggs in one basket" maxim is prevalent throughout the entire navy department.

Canal Treaty with Nicaragua.

A year or more ago this government negotiated a treaty with Nicaragua which is now pending for ratification in the senate. That treaty gives to the United States the right to construct another canal between the Pacific and Atlantic oceans. It is recalled that one of the main arguments which decided the canal question in the early days in favor of Panama was that a sea level canal could be built at Panama, but not in Nicaragua. The government built a lock canal at Panama, and in view of the trouble which has since developed with slides at Culebra cut it is evident that had a sea level canal of the present width been attempted it might have been some years before the canal would have been ready for traffic, if ever. If the time shall come when the lock canal at Panama is no longer available for the biggest battleships the question may be raised again whether this country wants a "two fisted navy" or will build another canal in Nicaragua capable of sending a whole fleet from one ocean to the other.

FORTUNES IN LITTLE THINGS.

One does not have to live in a large town to find an opportunity to make a fortune. The opportunities are everywhere. It is only the man with his eyes open who sees them. Druggist Dimmitt of Rochester, Mo., who remembered the demand for quinine during the civil war, had his eyes open, for he bought 10,000 ounces of quinine a little more than a year ago at 14 cents an ounce. His judgment proved correct, for the quinine that cost him $1,400 is now worth $25,000, and it may go higher.

He has had nothing to do with increasing the price. It is the demand that is putting it up. A philanthropist might argue that it is a crime to make money out of the necessities of the sick; but philanthropists who refuse to turn an honest penny when the opportunity offers are few and far between. Some of them do not indulge in philanthropy as a recreation until they have accumulated a large surplus by squeezing the last cent of profit from every transaction. In the meantime the Dimmitts of big towns and little ones are doing their best to qualify themselves for benevolence by making hay while death wields the scythe.—Philadelphia Ledger.

EVERY BRANCH OF TRADE IS RUNNING AT CAPACITY

The United States is enjoying a degree of prosperity that seems to almost defy the wholesome belief that the economic interests of all nations are best served by a general state of prosperity shared by all.

Every branch of industry in the United States is busy practically to the limit of its capacity. Our exportations of the products of the farm and factories are upon a scale beyond all precedent, and great sums in the form of gold, corporation securities and the obligations of foreign governments are being transferred to us.

Customers Get Poorer.

Of course, this in itself is not enduring prosperity. No good business man likes to feel that the buying power of his customers is steadily diminishing, and we must recognize that this is the case with the countries of Europe now making enormous purchases in this market.

The end of the war will see an end of the sales of munitions and many kinds of war supplies and there will have to be a shift of activities, but the world will have greater need for the tools and implements of industry than ever before.

Many Needs to be Supplied

There may be some temporary confusion and hesitation, but the wants to be supplied will be so numerous that there is good reason to believe that several years of good business will quickly ensue, if we keep our heads meantime, and do not allow the cost of production in this country to be seriously inflated. We must study the problem of accomplishing efficient and cheap production with good wages. It can be done, if the hearty co-operation of the wage earner is obtained.

It has been a number of years since we have had a really courageous spirit of enterprise in this country. Large enterprises have not been freely planned since the panic of 1907. There is a vast deal of construction work which may be advantageously done here at home. We have such diversified interests that we have an enormous trade among ourselves when confidence prevails, and at this time a very hopeful spirit is felt.

South Takes Lessons.

The south has been taking some lessons in the past year, of which the value of crop diversification is the principal. Its chief money crops, cotton and tobacco, will bring more money under moderate yields than when every acre is given up to them, and the acres reserved for corn, wheat, oats, potatoes, hay, pasture and garden truck can be made to yield a good living to the southern people.

The first duty of the south is to provide these necessaries for itself out of its own soil, and co-operate with the good work of the agricultural department in developing the livestock and dairy interests. It has greater opportunities of crop diversification than any other section of the country.

SMALL TOWN PAPERS HAVE THE BACKBONE

Newspapers in smaller towns are much more independent than those of the big cities, according to Basil Manly, director of investigation in newly formed committee on industrial relations.

"Take for instance a recent story we sent out on preparedness," he said. "The only Chicago paper which published it, according to my information, was the Herald. And in that the article was so condensed as to be almost unrecognizable. We have sent out good stories and we are going to send out more good stories. The newspapers of the smaller cities and towns 'eat' our stuff. The Socialist and labor papers invariably print it in full.

"There is undoubtedly a conspiracy to suppress certain kinds of news, but whether the news is killed at the source or whether it is carried over the wires and killed in the individual newspaper offices is hard to say.

"The reason papers in smaller cities are more independent is that they have no way of acting in common policy as newspaper publishers of the great metropolitan dailies have.

"But people are waking up. The standard of news values is changing to them, although it may not be in the eyes of millionaire newspaper publishers. We are not discouraged in the face of this conspiracy. We have several plans through which we hope to break into the news columns of every paper in the country. We are also going to send out a number of speakers. The movies will also be used in this campaign of industrial education.

"There has been opposition. We have made many enemies. The National Manufacturers' Ass'n doesn't like us a little bit. Another particular foe is the Nat'l Security League and the Navy League. They are not in sympathy with our idea that all preparedness should be paid for out of the income and the inheritance taxes. They don't like our demand for a democratic army which will give the private a chance to graduate from the ranks."

In an interview Manly gave out the tentative program of the committee:

Get the report published.

Take the profits out of manufacturing war munitions by making U. S. Government owners of such munition plants.

Have national expense paid out from income and inheritance taxes.

Pass law for uniform selection of juries, so workingmen will be as fairly represented as employing class.

Pass law prohibiting interstate shipment of armed guards or war munitions except when consigned to military authorities.

Get act passed calling on federal trade com'n and sec'y of labor to prosecute employers who exploit labor, classing it as unfair competition.

Keep grievances of unorganized workers before public until conditions are remedied. Example, Western Union employes and Pullman workers.

Keep public informed as to important development affecting industrial relations.

A. E. LERCHE

"If you ever get the blues," he said, "it is well to know the simplest and best way to get rid of them. Crankiness, nervousness and general upset condition preceding the blues usually are due to the relentless grip of constipation on the nervous system. The simplest way to meet this condition is to have a box of Rexall Orderlies in your pocket and the best way is to take one when you feel the attack coming on. It is the finest laxative for men, women and children I know of, and is a regular antidote for the blues—the best ever."

What is a Kilowatt?

To a person knowing nothing about the technicalities of electricty, the kilowatt hour basis for measuring electrical current remains a profound mystery. It is a term to them nothing else.

A watt is a unit of measure for electricity just as the quart is the unit of measure for milk and the bushel is a unit of measure for corn. Kilo is a Greek word meaning 1000 and a kilowatt is 1,000 watts. The watts takes his name from James Watts, the famous physicist.

Here are a few things a kilowatt of electricity will do:

It will run an electric clock for 10 years.

It will light 3,000 cigars.

It will warm enough water for shaving purposes every morning for 30 days.

It will heat a curling iron 3 minutes every day in the year. Sunday included.

It will heat the bedroom for an hour in the winter, or keep the room cool for 21 hours in the summer if a small ventilating fan is used.

It will propel an electric automobile 3 miles, knead 8 sacks of flour into dough or operate an electric piano for 10 hours.

It will light an old 16 candle power Edison lamp for 15 hours.

Or a 25-watt Tungston lamp for 40 hours.

Or a 40-watt Tungston lamp for 25 hours.

Or a 60-watt Tungston lamp for 16 hours.

Run a 9 inch electric fan for 25 hours.

An electric meter is used in determining when one kilowatt hour of current has been consumed. As electricity runs through the meter a little disc inside turns around just as a water wheel turns around when a stream of water runs through it and strikes the paddles. After a thousand watts have run through the meter, the dial at the front registers one kilowatt hour.

The World IS On Fire

says President Wilson and the danger of the conflagration spreading is so great he has commenced a tour of the country explaining to the people, as best he can, without disclosing state secrets, the neaessity for united support of the Goverument.

He makes it particularly plain that in these times of international stress the best minds and the men of the greatest experience are needed to successfully guide us free from entanglement in the international broils.

Cyrus Cline, by reason of his experience, hard work and boundless energy is peculiarly qualified to represent you. This is the reason for the wonderful and enthusiastic support his candidacy has received from men of all factions and all walks of life.

It is never good policy to "trade horses in the middle of a stream". It would be particularly disastrous in view of the existing situation to do so now. The Nation needs every bit of energy, experience and loyalty possessed by our lawmakers.

It is your duty—the duty of every citizen—to do your share in the present crisis, and with this in mind the candidacy of Cyrus Cline for Congress should strongly appeal to all citizens, irrespective of party affiliations.

The money is distributed at the rate of twenty-nine cents per ton of beets grown. In the past four months sugar has averaged $5 29 a hundred pounds, which is about 80 cents higher than the average price normally.

THE KITCHEN

For a steamed plum pudding, which calls for no eggs, mix together 1 cup each of suet finely chopped, molasses, raisins and currants, 2 cups of fine breadcrumbs, 1 teaspoon each of salt, soda, cloves, cinnamon, allspice and 1 cup of milk. Add flour to make a stiff batter, and pour into a well-greased mold. Cover tightly and steam four hours. Serve with hard or hot sauce.

A very good hot dessert, known as "fruit puffs," is made as follows: Sift together 1 cup of flour, 2 teaspoons of baking powder, ¼ teaspoon salt and 2 tablespoons of sugar. Add 1 tablespoon of melted butter and ½ cup of milk. Put a spoonful of this batter in the bottom of a greased custard cup, add a spoonful of sliced peaches, or a half of a canned peach, or an equal amount of any preferred fruit, cover with another spoonful of the dough. Arrange the cups in a baking pan and bake in a hot oven for half an hour. Serve hot with a sauce made of the fruit, heated, thickened with cornstarch and sweetened to taste.

The recipe for fig tapioca, which makes a very rich and appetizing dessert that does not betray its humble origin, calls for 3 tablespoons of granulated tapioca cooked in 2 cups of boiling water, with 1 tablespoon of butter, until clear. In a separate saucepan cook together ½ lb. of chopped figs, 1 cup water and 1 cup sugar until smooth and thick. Then add to the tapioca, beat well together, add ½ teaspoon of vanilla and serve cold with cream.

For brown sugar pudding, 2 cups of brown sugar are cooked in 2 cups of boiling water and thickened with 2 heaping tablespoons of cornstarch rubbed smooth with a little water. Cook until smooth and thick, allowing sufficient time for the cornstarch to be thoroughly cooked, then add ½ cup of walnut meats and ½ teaspoon of vanilla. Serve cold with cream.

To make light breakfast muffins without eggs, sift together twice 2 cups of flour, 2 tablespoons of sugar, 2 teaspoons of baking powder and ½ teaspoon of salt. Add gradually 1 cup milk, 1½ tablespoons of melted butter and the same quantity of melted lard. Beat vigorously and pour into buttered muffin tins. Bake 20 minutes in a quick oven.

For cornmeal muffins mix and sift together 1 cup of cornmeal, ½ cup of flour, ¼ cup of sugar, 2 heaping teaspoons of baking powder and ½ teaspoon of salt. Add 1 cup of milk and 2 tablespoons of melted butter or drippings, beat well and bake for 25 minutes.

Delicious griddle cakes are made without eggs and require to be mixed the night before. Scald 1 cup of cornmeal with 1 cup of boiling water, then add 2 cups of flour, 2 cups of milk, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 tablespoon of molasses, 1 tablespoon of drippings, melted, and ½ yeast cake dissolved in a tablespoon of lukewarm water. Beat well and let rise overnight.

Buns that the children will like are made of biscuit dough, rolled thin, spread with warm butter and 1 cup of brown sugar. Roll up and then cut in slices. Place in a buttered pan and bake 30 minutes in a moderate oven.

A rich, moist cake that will keep fresh for a week or more calls for two eggs, but requires no butter. To make it, put into a bowl 2 eggs, 1 cup of sugar, 1 cup of sour cream, ¼ teaspoon of salt and ½ teaspoon soda sifted with 1¾ cups of flour. Beat well for three or four minutes, flavor as desired and bake in layers. This may have spices added and be baked in a loaf, or with melted chocolate and ½ teaspoon of vanilla added to it, be made into a very acceptable "devil's food."

For a light cake without eggs, cream together ¼ cup of butter and lard mixed, and ¾ cup of sugar. Add ½ cup of milk, ¼ teaspoon of salt, 1 cup of flour, 2 teaspoons of baking powder, ½ teaspoon of vanilla and 4 drops of almond flavoring. Beat very thoroughly for five minutes before baking. May be baked in a loaf or in layers.

A delicious chocolate cake is made of 2 cups of brown sugar, thoroughly creamed with ½ cup of lard or dripping, 1 cup of thick, sour milk, 1 teaspoon of soda dissolved in the milk, 2½ cups of flour, 4 heaping teaspoons of cocoa, and 1 teaspoon of vanilla. This may be baked in layers and put together with boiled frosting.

A good dark cake that calls for neither butter, milk nor eggs is made as follows: Fill a cup ⅝ full of sugar and fill to the top with molasses. Put in a bowl and add 3 tablespoons of melted lard or dripping. Beat thoroughly, then add ⅝ cup of warm water, 3 cups of flour, 3 level teaspoons of baking powder, a pinch of soda, 1 cup of chopped raisins, and spices to suit the taste.

Another good dark cake calls for 1¼ cups of sugar, 1 tablespoon of butter, 1 teaspoon of cinnamon, ¼ teaspoon each of cloves and nutmeg, 1 cup of sour milk, 1 small teaspoon of soda dissolved in 1 tablespoon of water, 2 cups of flour and 1 cup of raisins, mixed in a little of the flour. Half cup of nuts may also be added, if liked. Bake 1 hour in a slow oven.

A delicious gingerbread without eggs is made by beating 1 cup of molasses with 1 tablespoon of lard. When hot beat well and add 1 teaspoon of ginger, ½ teaspoon of cinnamon, ½ teaspoon of cloves and a little nutmeg. Dissolve 1 teaspoon of soda in 1 cup of sour milk and add to the mixture. Add flour to make a stiff batter, pour into a greased tin and bake 30 minutes.

For molasses cake cream together 2-3 cup of shortening, which may be butter and lard mixed, or butter and dripping, and 1 cup of brown sugar. Add 1 cup of molasses and 1 teaspoon of soda dissolved in 1 cup of boiling water. Add 1½ cups of flour, ½ teaspoon of salt, ½ cup of raisins, ½ cup of currants, and ¼ cup each of citron and figs which have been finely chopped, mixed with ½ cup more of flour. Mix well and bake slowly for an hour. This cake will keep moist indefinitely.

To make chocolate wafers, cream 3 tablespoons of butter, with 1 cup of sugar, and add 4 tablespoons of melted chocolate. Add a pinch of salt, ½ cup of milk and 2 cups of flour sifted with 2 teaspoons of baking powder, working the flour in gradually. Roll out, cut, and bake for 20 minutes.

For spice drop cakes, cream 1 cup of brown sugar and ½ cup of shortening in ¾ cup of hot water, a pinch of salt, 3 cups of flour, 1 teaspoon of cinnamon, ¼ teaspoon of cloves and a little nutmeg, and 1 cup of raisins and currants mixed. Bake in muffin tins, or drop on a buttered tin and bake for 20 minutes in a moderate oven.

ACORN BREAD EXCEEDS DREAM OF THE FRUGAL.

Although the Germans are making bread out of all kinds of materials, they will have to go a long way before they invent an entirely new kind of bread. Beans, peas, maize and other substances have been mixed with wheat or rye in the past.

Mashed potatoes, mixed with wheat or maize flour, were used by people on the continent years ago. Rice flour makes fine yellow bread, while the chestnut bread that forms the chief food of the Corsican mountaineers is very agreeable to taste, and keeps fresh over a fortnight.

Bread has been made from acorns, especially by the peasants of France. Mosses, dried and powdered, are still used for bread by Norwegians, and other substances that have been used without the addition of cereal flour include the roots of colchicum, iris and mandragora.

SCISSORS USEFUL IN PREPARING GRAPEFRUIT.

The uses of kitchen scissors are so many that some cooks have two pairs, one large and one small. For cutting very fresh bread sandwiches, for trimming around the edges of pies, for shaping fancy cookies to please children, they are excellent. In the making of savories and salads, shredding green peppers and preparing grapefruit, scissors are way ahead of knives. They must be carefully cleaned and boiled often to prevent the lodgment of filth between the blades.

There is conflicting opinion about the poultry shears, which are trying to usurp the place of the carving set at the table. Men carvers seem to be attached to the old style, but women find the shears a great help it seems.

WHY RAISE CHICKENS WHEN AEPYORNIS EGGS SELL FOR $1,000 EACH.

Mrs. Robert Gilfort, wife of a well known acrobat with old time circuses, has sold for $1,000 to the Denver museum of natural history an egg of the aepyornis, an extinct member of the ostrich family which lived in the wilds of Madagascar. This, with other curios, was gathered by Mr. Gilfort in his world travels. There are but a few of these eggs now in existence and the one in Mrs. Gilfort's possession weighed five and a quarter pounds and was 35½ inches in circumference at the longest distance and 30 inches around the middle.

POULTRY

Health of Poultry

Grit, charcoal and green food in addition to the regular grains will be found necessary to keep the flock in the best condition. The best poultry breeders know that the fowl on free range will probably obtain plenty of grit but they keep it before the birds at all times as it is not expensive and they wish to be sure that every hen receives the proper amount to keep her strong and well.

Clean out the poultry house at least once a week. We have found says a writer, that scattering a few shovelfuls of garden soil under the roosts is a first class method of saving the manure. The dropping boards are then easy to clean and the soil, according to experiment station reports will fix the nitrogen in the manure and make it more valuable for spreading back on the garden. A frequent cleaning of the house results in a healthier flock as birds cannot prosper and roost in an atmosphere saturated with devitalizing gases.

The hay chaff from the barn floor should be dumped into the poultry house. The hens will like it and if you dump a few bushels on the poultry house floor in the evening you will find them scattering and singing the next morning and working up the kind of appetite which means a good feeder and a good producer.

Plan to improve your poultry plant whenever possible and you will note a general improvement in the health and appearance of your fowls. The improvements may consist of larger ranges, cleaner houses, stronger and more vigorous males, plenty of dusting places and sufficient shade. All of these improvements will make you a real poultry farmer and the health of your flock will in direct proportion increase your receipts from both eggs and stock.

To keep fowls healthy never feed them so-called egg foods which are only patent condiments suitable to inflame the organs and reduce the real value of the bird. Some of them may seem to stimulate the hens for a while but the stimulation is unnatural and of very temporary value. Pepper is not good for poultry and also may inflame the organs. The poultry breeders who are successful stick to the balanced rations of good substantial foodstuffs and do not experiment with "patent medicines."

The open front poultry house seems like the most practical method of housing poultry that has been devised. It insures a plentiful supply of fresh air for the birds and prevents draughts. I have never seen an open front house that seemed damp if it was properly cleaned and the houses with glass windows nearly always seem damp and close. The open front house costs less money and is the only sure way of keeping the flock in good condition.

Small Flocks Better

My experience of over ten years in poultry keeping has taught me that hens lay and do better when kept in small flocks, says a writer. I have noticed repeatedly that when during the breeding period, I placed part of my hens in pens of ten or twelve, the hens so penned, always laid better than the hens kept in the general flock.

When kept in small flocks hens keep in a more thrifty state of health. In small flocks contageous diseases such as roup and cholera can be more effectively treated, without subjecting all the chickens on the place to the contagion. And besides, when kept in small flocks scattered over the farm, the range offers a large supply and a better variety of food, thus effecting quite a saving.

Fifty hens in a flock should be the limit. Where a farm carries two hundred or more hens it will be found more profitable to house them on the colony plan than to keep them in one flock. Of course, when so kept, the labor of caring for the flock is much greater, but the increased egg production and the saving in food will more than compensate for the increased labor.

The main reason why so many fail in the chicken business is because the hens are kept in large flocks. Most of those who fail, have, in the past, been successful in managing a small flock, and this success has been instrumental in causing them to embark in the business on a big scale. I say unreservedly that the man who decides to keep one thousand hens will stand a better chance of succeeding if he keeps them in twenty flocks of fifty, than will the beginner who attempts to manage one thousand hens in one flock. The beginner who attempts to keep one thousand hens in one flock will find his experience in managing a small flock of little value. On the other hand the man who starts in business with twenty small flocks can apply the experience gained in managing his one small flock.

The man who keeps his hens in small flocks can keep close watch on them. Whenever disease manifests itself it is quickly noticed and the sick birds promptly removed. In the care of large flocks however, diseased birds may not be noticed for some time and when finally noticed, the contagion may have spread to the entire flock.

ALL AROUND THE FARM

Every farm should be named. Every farmer ought have a printed letterhead and return envelopes.

Next to having a comfortable home and a contented family, the real test of farm success is in securing a steady increase of acreage profits. Many progressive land owners, especially those occupying small places, have caught the vision of this kind of farming.

The corn crop the country over averages about thirty-five bushels an acre, giving a gross return not above $24, and a net profit of about $15. All grain farming is on the same level, sometimes returning a little more profit and often considerably less.

Capable farmers grapple with this problem of raising acreage profits in various ways. Naturally the first idea is to improve the methods of cultivation—to rotate crops, build up soil fertility, use great care with seed and put in a little extra work all along the line. Those who think of an improved system and are determined to get out of the rut will get results in proportion to their skill and efforts. Expansive ideas will come with the disposition to do things.

For instance, M. D. Crow of Audubon county, Iowa, secured acreage profits of nearly $170 by combining corn, rape, and hogs as a farm feature. He had formerly raised corn at $15 to $20 an acre. Some difference! Just before he laid by his corn in June two years ago he sowed Dwarf Essex rape broadcast in ten acres of it, using five pounds of seed per acre. The cultivator covered it and about six weeks later 170 spring pigs were turned into this ten-acre field. They remained there until early winter, when the corn had been cleaned up and the rape killed down by freezing.

When winter came he found he had a numerous bunch of thrifty, half-grown hogs with nearly unappeasable appetites and a surprising capacity for further growth. He fed them corn, mill feed and tankage until March, when they were sold at $7.50 per 100 pounds, bringing $2,640.75.

Up to the time they were sold these hogs had consumed 2,160 bushels of corn, valued at 40 cents per bushel, or $864; also mill feed and tankage costing $80.50. Thus their total feed bill was $944.50, leaving a profit of $1,696.20.

As Mr. Crow figures it, this $1,696.20 represents the returns from the ten-acre field of rape and corn, since full allowance has been made for all other feeds. Hence he realized $169.62 per acre from this field. The same kind of an experiment last year brought similar results, so that this farmer has demonstrated a method of making his corn return an acreage profit far beyond what people ordinarily dream of.

Eight experiments with rape and corn have been conducted at the Iowa station with results strikingly like those obtained by Mr. Crow. By averaging the results of these experiments, using precisely the same values for pork and corn as were given by Mr. Crow, it is found that the average production of pork per acre was 3,845 pounds, worth at $7.50 per 100 pounds, $288; that the average cost of corn and other feeds

A number of experiments made in different states show that a really good corn crop pays from $50 to $100 an acre, instead of $15 to $20. In addition to this, expert corn growers often add to their profits by selling a high quality of seed to their neighbors and city dealers. It is evident the crop can be made worth much more than ordinary by skill and care.

HOW THE PEANUT GROWS.

Here's a plant mother that buries her children to protect them. While the children of other plants are being kidnaped by animals and birds, these youngsters are carefully hidden away beneath the ground so they can grow in safety. But man won't permit the mother to keep her children long. He digs them up—and eats them. The plant is the peanut.

Its leaves look like a four-leafed clover. Its blossoms are a dainty yellow, shaped like those of the sweet pea. When they wither and fall off the mother plant begins to worry about her seed children, for if the birds and animals kidnap them before they ripen they won't have a chance to grow and produce more plants next year.

So she bends her stalks downward, and each head where the flowers have fallen off she pokes into the ground. There the little seeds develop inside of wrinkly, paperlike pods. Sometimes the little tunneling moles find them and eat them, or maybe hogs will come and root them out. Usually, however, they're safe from all marauders.

America gave the world the peanut. It was found first in Brazil. Since its commercial value was discovered it has been planted all over the world. Since 1866 it has been a staple product of southern United States.—Philadelphia North American.

Congress will either help the president worry or help worry the president.

YOUR MONEY AT WORK.

Encouragement for Foreign Trade.

Taking the figures for the last twelve months, it is nearly accurate to say that we do one-fourth as much foreign trade as domestic. Our domestic trade is in excess of twenty billions, and our foreign trade is now running at about five billions a year.

The average man—workman, storekeeper, farmer—is bound to be affected by the success or failure of the campaign to hold and increase our foreign trade. He is interested in what the government's attitude toward it is likely to be.

Recently, Mr. Redfield, secretary of commerce, pointed out some concrete evidences of the government's purpose to help.

The department of commerce has eight offices in the United States to assist exporters. The one in New York, during last October, received 5,000 letters and sent out 3,500 announcements of opportunities for European trade.

The department keeps twelve trade specialists abroad. These men have studied our output and travel constantly.

Our consular service and our commercial attaches are sending a constant stream of information as to foreign needs and prejudices to Washington, where they are digested and published for the 12,000 business men who subscribe to the department's daily paper, Commerce Reports.

Mr. Redfield's department maintains a tariff division, where information as to new tariffs and tariff changes is free to business men.

The department is sending a commercial officer on tour of this country with every foreign commercial delegation that visits us.

An expert in foreign trade from the department is making the rounds of American factories to advise about ways of getting foreign trade and stirring up the desire for it.

These services are not offered merely as emergency measures due to abnormal war order demands. They are to be developed in order that our after the war trade may grow. The establishment of American banks and branches is to be encouraged, as well as the investment companies that will carry American money abroad to assist in reconstruction and new development.

HOLLOW BUILDING TILE.

A very interesting test of hollow building tile has been made by the United States bureau of standards. A floor slab six feet wide and thirty feet long continued over three piers fifteen feet apart was made of this class of material. This tile is of a special type for use in floor slabs and is made so that the bottom surface is about two inches wider than the top. In laying the tile in the form of a slab, the pieces touch on the bottom, but are about two inches apart at the top. This space continues throughout the length of the slab, and is filled with a mortar of the composition of one part of cement and two of sand, in which are placed several reinforcing rods bent up at the ends of the slab and continued through the cement beam into the next adjacent slab.

In the present case the two slabs were allowed to age for one month. Tests were made of these, loaded uniformly with pig lead, numerous deflection readings being made as different loads were applied. One of the slabs failed at about 603 pounds per square foot. The other was able to withstand a slightly greater load, 690 pounds per square foot. Failure occurred in the mortar beams, due largely to the inferior grade of reinforcing used. One of the concrete supporting piers also failed near its base. While the load carried was not up to the expectations of the manufacturers of the tile, yet it was considerably in excess of that demanded by most building laws.—Exchange.

CLEVER IDEA.

Have you ever experienced the satisfaction of making something for nothing—or almost nothing? If so, you will want to experience it again. If not, you don't want to miss the first opportunity. Make a baby basket from a common, every-day wire dish drainer. It can be done, so don't scoff at the idea.

Fit the bottom of the basket with a piece of rather heavy cardboard. Cover it with cotton batting. Over this put a cover of satin or crepe de chine, in pink, blue or buff. Over the silk foundation put a cover of white dotted swiss or point d'esprit. Cut a strip of the silk sufficiently wide to cover the side of the basket and long enough to be gathered with an easy fullness. Cut white swiss or point d'esprit of the same size. Now make ruffles of the white and pink materials and after finishing them with a decorative heading, attach the two strips to the top of the basket. Make a heart-shaped pincushion of pink silk, cover it with white material and attach it to the side of the basket. You will have difficulty convincing your best friend that beneath all the prettiness the plainest of wire baskets may be seen. But seeing is believing!

EXPECTS DRASTIC REVOLT OF LABOR

Writer in Century's Says European Peasant and Worker Will No Longer Remain Dull

ACT AT CLOSE OF THE WAR

Changes Coming for Former Sodden and Routine Worker----Taught Violence By His Own Rulers

"When the millions of armed Europeans return to their homes, they will demand that their children be spared a repetition of this inexcusable waste of human life and happiness," writes Hendrik Willem Van Loon in the Century Magazine in a discussion of the economic effects of the war on the various countries of Europe.

"When peace comes back to earth, what will happen? Twenty million men will return to their homes. They will be asked to go back to their old tasks and take up the work which they left when they went to the war. There will be a terrific burden of taxation, and all men will be obliged to work harder. At the same time they will receive less money than they did formerly. Year in and year out they must pay the ever-increasing interest upon a capital the principal of which was destroyed in the form of dynamite, powder, nitroglycerin, warships, Zeppelins, cannon, machine guns, and other unproductive investments.

"Economists shake their heads, and tell me that what I now state is an utter impossibility; but the time will come, probably within two generations, when the citizen, disgusted with the hard work forced upon him by the stupidity of a forgotten ancestor, will simply wipe this debt off the national slate. And who can prevent this?

Peasant's Ideas Hazy.

"The economic notions of the average European laborer or farmer, not to speak of the peasant, who has always formed the bulk of every army, are extremely hazy. The poor fellow struggles through life trying to make both ends meet. Frequently he is not able to do this. Then he is turned out upon the street a pauper. Or if he succeeds in keeping the hungry mouths of his family filled, his life resolves itself into an endless worry lest tomorrow may not provide the food with which the family may manage to live until the day after.

"Now behold what the war has done for him. It has fed him better than he has ever been fed before. It has put him into decent clothes. A heavy winter coat goes with the equipment of every soldier, and often he never saw such a garment before. Without sufficient food and shelter he is of no use as a fighting man; hence he is well fed three times a day. He likes it. He would be very happy if he were always as well looked after.

"But when he comes home from the war he will not be given this food unless he goes to dig coal out of a little black gallery half a mile beneath the surface of the earth or performs the dreariest of tasks in that dreariest of modern inventions, a factory. Formerly tradition and habit made him obey; but will he obey this time?

Labor Will no Longer be Docile.

"All this evidence in the case says no. In this war he has been taught something which his many strikes and his labor warfare did not make clear to him. Before the year 1914, if in an encounter with his masters he used violence, he was regarded as an enemy of the law and was treated accordingly. This time he has with his own eyes and with his own hands noticed that organized violence is the best way to accomplish the desired results of his country.

"Call this statement socialistic, anarchistic, call it the most outrageous thing you have ever heard; but I am reporting what the men who make up the countless armies actually feel, not what they ought to think.

"To make a long story short after the war we may expect a most severe social revolution. We shall see the outbreak of labor troubles everywhere. These troubles will be of such magnitude that they will make themselves felt at once in the United States.

"Of course the difficulties of France and Germany and Russia and England will all be very different. Germany, after more than a century of discipline whether private or public, will act more slowly than the others. The Germans will proceed with order and in decency. They will appoint leaders, and they will obey these leaders as bluntly as they have formerly obeyed military masters. The opposition will be organized by the greatly strengthened socialistic party.

"The question is often asked why this party did not make a definite stand against the war? Why not indeed? Because they did not have the slightest chance of success in any contemplated opposition in August, 1914. In our highly systematized world we often forget the great influence which the small subconscious sentiments have upon our deeds and our words. Socialism is a comparatively new doctrine. It has no traditions. It is not provided with an imaginary background in the minds of the true believers. On the other hand, the idea of state and of empire is based upon ancient tradition, mellowed by age.

Rulers in Disrepute.

"It is no wonder that the reigning family has lost a great deal of the popularity with which it led its men into France and Russia at the beginning of hostilities. If everything had gone well during those first months, yes, if there had been a speedy and easy victory, it would have been a different question; but after years of struggles and suffering there will be a general detestation of the honor of our modern chemical warfare.

"A strongly organized socialistic party, a phalanx of determined and brave men, will work quietly, but steadily, upon the problem of their own class, 90 per cent of the entire population. If the government has the sense to place itself at the head of this movement (and very likely it will do this), it may lead the man toward a completely socialized empire.

"But whatever happens, the good old days of a negligible parliament and a small clique of interested leaders who mysteriously guide the affairs of the nation for some equally mysterious benefit will disappear. And before ten years have gone by the German imperial cabinet will be dominated by socialistic ministers.

Expects Russian Revolt.

"The revolutionary outbreak in Russia will be of rural nature. In the large cities, where the undesirable elements from the country districts have been gathered into hopeless proletariat, there will be violence such as we know from our own strikes and labor struggles. But the main issue in Russia will be fought out far away from cities, on the land. Never was a time so favorable for an uprising of all discontented elements. It is not going to be a charming affair, and there will be much in the nature of the horrible peasant uprisings of the late middle ages.

"The system which the masters of Russia had forced upon their subjects at the time when 200 years of Tartar domination had entirely broken spirit of the people will disappear amid much bloodshed and violence. The old order of things, which was merely a system of organized anarchy for the benefit of those who were in power, will be replaced by a new anarchy, which will not even have the saving grace of a systematized purpose. For the first time in their history the Slavic people will work out their own salvation, and will live as they want to and not as somebody thinks they ought to want to."

FOX TERRIOR AIDS FRENCH SOLDIERS TO ESCAPE FOE.

GENEVA, Switzerland—Two French aviators, Sergeant Georges Madon and Corporal Rene Chatelain, who were interned at Zurich, escaped in a sensational manner to Evian, on the French side of Lake Geneva.

The two aviators obtained permission to take a walk, under guard of a soldier of the Swiss landsturm named Wuest, in the vicinity of the place where they were interned. Accordingly they started out, accompanied by a fox terrier, which later played a part in their escape. The guard, not suspecting any ruse, led them to a copse. There, according to a prearranged plan, Charles Beck, a French territorial soldier on sick leave, whose acquaintance the aviators had made, awaited in civilian clothes with an automobile.

Wuest was stunned, bound and bundled into the car. The others jumped in after him and speeded to Ouchy, on Lake Geneva, by way of Berne and Friburg. At Ouchy they embarked in an autoboat, previously hired by Beck, and sailed off under the eyes of a Swiss gendarme, who made no attempt to stop them, the presence of the fox terrier leading him to believe that the men in the boat were civilians. The trip to French territory was made without further incident.

ONE OF 4 ENDS AWAITS TURKS

Their Country May Eventually Pass Info the Occupation of Russia

NO LONGER WORLD POWER

May be Made Capital of an Inferior and Small Internationalized State Briton Says

(Turkey's ultimate fate and the future of Constantinople are numbered among the most interesting problems of the war. Perhaps no man living is better qualified to discuss this subject than is Sir Edwin Pears, author of Forty Years in Constantinople, which is fresh from the press of D. Appleton & Co. Sir Edwin Pears is a lawyer of international fame, recognized as the greatest English authority on the near east.

New York.—There are four probabilities to consider in any talk about Turkey "after-the-war."

Its destiny may be (1) to remain in the hands of the Turks under the masterful rule of the Germans; or (2) to pass into the occupation of Russia; or (3) to become the capital of a small internationalized state surrounding the Marmora, the Bosporus and the Dardanelles.

The fourth probability that it should be left as now to the Turks, would imply not only that the allies should be entirely defeated, but that Germany and Austria should be so weakened that they would not be able to impose their will on Turkey.

May Become State of Germany.

To anticipate such a conclusion of the war is to pass out of the region of practical politics. Turkey has linked her fate in the war with that of Germany and her ally. If they should win, Turkey will become a state of subject to Germany.

I have had the opinion for many years that Germany has chosen the Turkish empire as her "place in the sun," and that she has steadily worked with the object of bringing Turkey under her rule.

In answer to the second probability, the city being delivered to the Russians, are the following objections: Constantinople would be a Russian port detached from the empire and inaccessible under the present conditions except by the Black sea, which during the winter months, still retains its evil reputation. I need not repeat what three czars of Russia, looking at the matter with the eyes of statesmen, have said against the permanent occupation of the city. By such occupation Russia would loose her prestige in the Balkans as shown in the glorious epithet she has obtained as their "Deliverer and Protector."

Can't Acquire World Importance.

Moreover, I believe that Constantinople can never acquire the world importance which she once possessed. To own a second rate seaport isolated from the rest of the empire would bring the great eastern empire neither profit nor renown.

To find an answer to the question: Can Turkey again become a state entitled to rank among the European powers? Many considerations have to be remembered.

Since 1683, when Turkey's progress as a nation received its first check, she has been steadily declining. With insignificant exceptions, Turkey has never regained territory which she has once lost. The Moslem population of Asia Minor is steadily decreasing. The modern Turk has lost the barbaric delight in fighting.

The present war, whatever its result, will still further weaken Turkey. The allies will either defeat Turkey or be beaten by her.

If they win, most of the provinces in eastern Asia Minor will come under Russian rule.

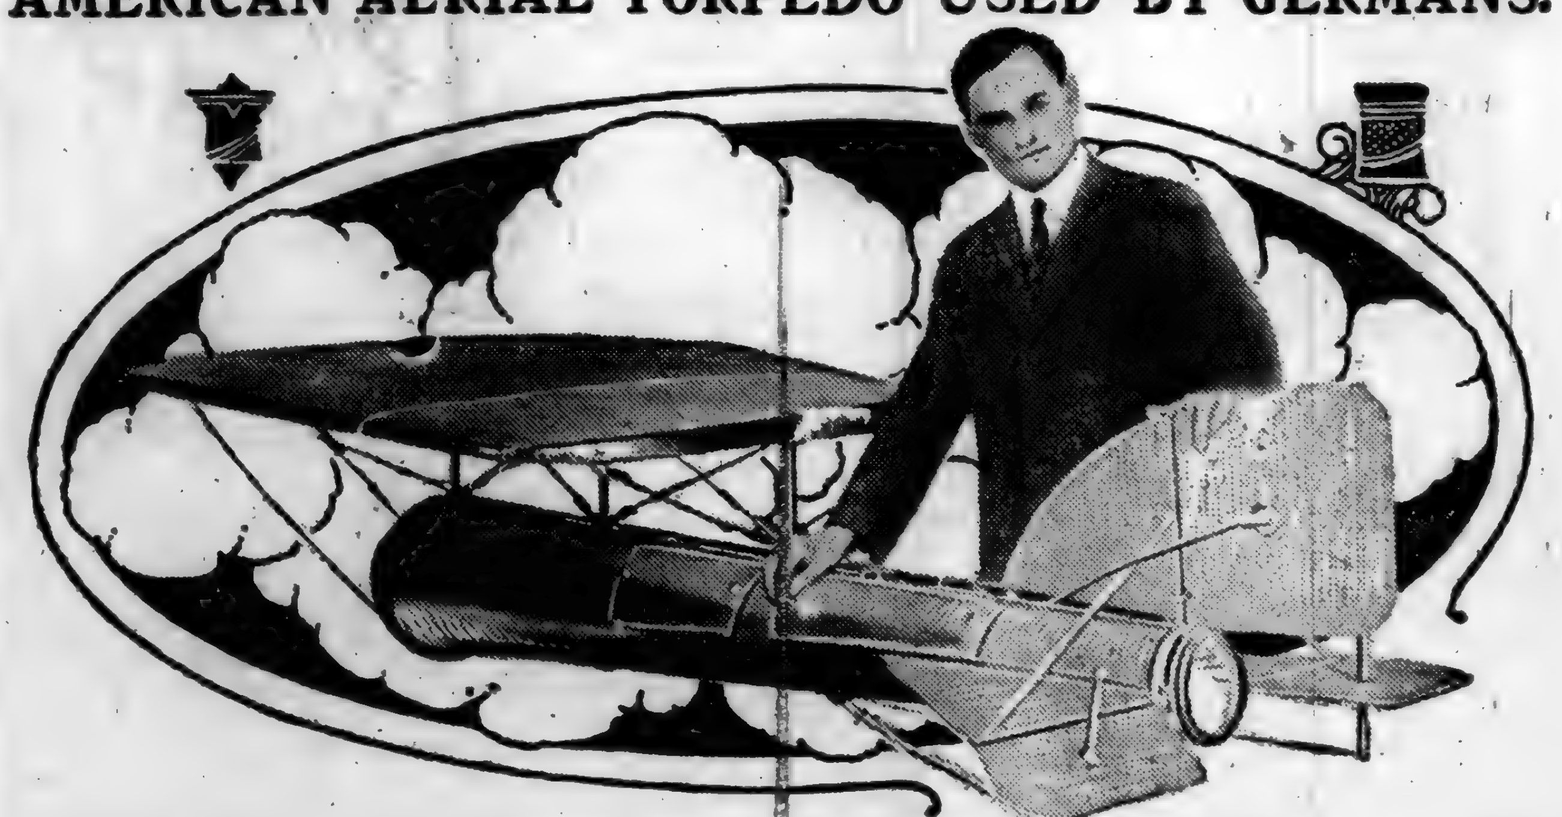
Turkey No Longer a Power.

If they lose, the Armenians will become a more disturbing element to Turkey than they have ever yet been, for during the war they have not only been foolishly persecuted, where they should have been cherished, and have lost all hope of living in harmony with their Moslem masters, but they have gained the hope that they will soon be under Christian, though Russian rule.

From these indications I conclude that it is highly improbable that Turkey can ever again be considered as one of the great powers. Nevertheless, the fact must not be lost sight of that there are probably 7,000,000 Moslems who still say they are Osmanlis (descendants or dependents of Osman founder of the Turkish dynasty).

They have a right to exist as a nation, and a hugh political blunder will be committed if they are not dealt with justly. As to what territory should be left them, that is a question for statesmen.

AMERICAN AERIAL TORPEDO USED BY GERMANS.



George F. Russell, inventor, and his dirigible torpedo now used by Germany. It weighs fifty pounds; net length, seven feet. It is capable of carrying 150 pounds of high explosives and can speed 200 miles an hour. Cost of construction, $75. It is fired from an aeroplane or a balloon.

CHICAGO MARKET FOR WAR HORSES HAS NO 'CORNER'

Dealers Deny That Germans Have Bought Up Visible Supply to Raise Prices

The horse ring at the Union stock yards—from which the armies of Europe receive large shipments of horses—is said to be the most tranquil war order market in the United States. A system has been evolved which has eliminated the possibility of corners or a forced bull or bear movement.

Agents of France buy an average of 400 horses a day at the Union stock yards. It is estimated that more than 2,000 horses a day are bought throughout the whole country and shipped to France from Jersey City and Portland, Me.

Assembly Pens at Crestline.

At Crestline, twenty-five miles from Chicago, the French government has built assembly pens covering an area almost a mile square. Horses bought in the Chicago ring are sent to Crestline until a trainload is assembled.

At times more than 2,500 horses have been in the pens. A special police force is constantly on guard to prevent any persons injuring the horses, and the water and food are inspected by chemists daily.

Numerous reports that German agents were plotting to hamstring and poison horses bought by the French and English governments have been given little credence by the dealers. One report was to the effect that German agents were paying higher prices for the horses in an attempt to keep them from being bought by the other governments.

U. S. Has Plenty of Horses.

The dealers declare that in the United States there are 7,000,000 horses which can be bought for less than $250 each. The standard price at the stock yards for cavalry horses is $135. For heavier artillery horses the fixed price is $160.

W. L. Elder, general manager of the John S. Cooper company, one of the heaviest dealers in horses in the United States, declared there are enough horses in this country to supply the armies of Europe for a period of five years without causing a scarcity.

SLEEPS IN BED FOR FIRST TIME IN 7 YEARS

Banquo, Ind.—John Smelser, fifty-six, is sleeping in a bed for the first time in seven years, the death of his mother, Mrs. Mary Smelser, eighty-six, having released him from his strange pact to sleep on the floor each night at the foot of her bed and within call. She had been paralized seven years, but her death was due to pneumonia. Charles Smelser, sat up with his mother every other night during her long illness.

GRIP BLAMED ON CHEWING GUM TRADES

Hartford City, Ind.—The increase in the grip epidemic in the schools here is blamed on to the practice of the younger children swapping chewing gum. Health officers are making every effort to wipe out the disease.

SUFFERING OF JEWS IN WARRING COUNTRY.

New York—A letter by a Jewish refugee presents the unhappy lot of Jews in the region of war. The communication was received by the American Jewish Relief committee. Here is the text as published in The New York Times:

"It is winter, not a mild winter, a cold one; bitter cold. All day we have been walking. We have no idea where we are going. When a soldier says 'Move' a Jew must obey. So Chaia, Beri and I move. Our furniture we left behind. Chaim, our eldest son, is in the army and we are walking.

"We have not been walking since 6 a. m. Chaia leans on me, I lean on my stick, and Beri is carried, sometimes in my arms and sometimes in Chaia's. return per acre was $164 net.

pork was $123, and that the average required to produce this amount of

"I look at old Reb Srul, bent and worn like a reed in the wind; he, too, walks. Occasionally I talk to him. I try to console him; soon, soon, it shall end, this constant walking. We will be placed somewhere and allowed to remain. But he only sighs, looks up to heaven, and repeats the word, 'Peace.'

"Night comes. We have been walking for twelve hours. Some have fallen by the road, but we cannot stop, we must walk.

"We are crowded into a dilapidated barn; it's cold, bitter cold in there.

"Surah, the feeble-minded one, has just had an epileptic fit. Reb Srul does not feel well. He is pale; I go to the door to speak to a soldier. 'A doctor, please,' I plead, 'The old man is dying.' 'Good,' he laughs. 'Let him die. One less to take care of.'

"All night we watch Reb Srul die. We repeat prayers with him. Nobody sleeps. In the morning Reb Srul is at peace. No more walking for him; the women cry, some of us wish we could take his place. We are glad that he has been excused by the Almighty One from walking.

"Someone suggests burial. We are about to ask for the privilege when the door opens and a soldier commands us to get ready to walk. 'More walking' is the pathetic echo that rings through the room. We point to the body. A soldier commands us to walk. A Jew must obey, so we leave the old man in the hands of his God, and we walk."

HOW TO TRANSFER.

Place a sheet of impression carbon paper between your fabric and the newspaper design, the latter on top. With a sharp pencil or a glass-pointed pen go over the outline. The design will be transferred to the material and will last until worked.

BILL WILL SHUT DOOR OF AMERICA TO ASIATIC RACES

House Soon to Receive Exclusion Measure Which Is Drastic In Provisions

Washington.—Drastic restrictions would be thrown about the immigration of Japanese into the United States and both Hindus and Chinese virtually would be barred from the country by a provision that has been written into the immigration bill to be reported to the house by the immigration committee.

The new features relating to immigrants from Japan would have their most far reaching effect, in the expectation of the committee members, in shutting off effectually the influx of Japanese laborers, whose competition with American labor on the Pacific coast has aroused a pronounced anti-Asiatic sentiment.

Provision Wide in Scope.

As agreed upon tentatively by the committee the exclusion section of the bill includes a paragraph barring "Hindus and all persons of the Mongolian or yellow race and the Malay or brown race." Before a report is made to the house, however, a proposed qualification probably will be added providing that there shall be such exemptions as may be set forth in any existing agreements, as to passports or by treaties, conventions or agreements that may hereafter be entered into.

For several years representatives from the Pacific states have been fighting for legislation to exclude Japanese, Chinese, and Hindu laborers. Two years ago the house immigration committee agreed that in order not to burden the pending general immigration measure with an Asiatic exclusion issue, there should be a separate exclusion bill. The measure later was dropped, however, at the suggestion of state department officials who held that it would seriously complicate negotiations with Japan over the California alien land law

Will Not Exclude Students.

Exclusion of Chinese and Japanese students, business men, travelers, and certain other excepted classes is not expected by members of the committee, but the bill is expected to put into legal form and amplify an informal agreement entered into eight years ago by Secretary of State Root and the Japanese ambassador, under which Japan agreed not to issue passports to Japanese laborers emigrating to the United States.

Both the Asiatic exclusion section and the literacy test provision of the bill are expected to precipitate a vigorous debate when the measure comes up in the house. The requirement for a literacy test has caused the failure of three previous immigration bills through presidential veto.

THE Country Home Weekly Newspaper is eagerly sought, and in passing from hand to hand of the entire family, is reasonably sure to give returns to the advertiser.

GLASS OF SALTS IF YOUR KIDNEYS HURT

Eat less meat if you feel Backachy or have Bladder trouble—Salts fine for Kidneys.

Meat forms uric acid which excites and overworks the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Regular eaters of meat must flush the kidneys occasionally. You must relieve them like you relieve your bowels; removing all the acids, waste and poison, else you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment; the channels often get irritated, obliging you to get up two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's urinous waste get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine and bladder disorders disappear. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpensive; harmless and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then, thus avoiding [illegible] bladder diseases.

FOR SHERIFF!

Candidate for Republican nomination solely to "bust" the ring oust its thieving grafters, save taxpayers thousands of dollars yearly and enforce law for the public good without injustice or illegal favors. I've seen so much I can stand it no longer in silence as seemingly no one else is going after them. Why? Dozens of men of other parties have already voluntarily offered support because they are all loosing money and know I'll stop it. Republicans must have this support to win. Think that over seriously. Why take chance of higher taxes by voting for a man because he is a friend, if he is out for self alone. If he is no honestly outspoken against the rings grafters, has been so and has the nerve to stop it. If not a vote getter and above being bought, scared or persuaded to join the ring. Are you sure? The ring knows better than to try that on me. I am no politician, just a voter, so disgusted and red-hot at their dirty politics, that I want the sheriff's office so I can rout the stinking gang and show them up to the people. I won't smile before election and freeze up afterward either. I am always the same, as in years past, exposing and fighting graft, often, at my own expense.

This is your one chance to down the gang. If you want it done, just hit them between the eyes with an X in front of my name at the Primary to show me you are with me and we will start the good work. I'll prove to you before election time that I mean business. No two faced work here nor hereafter. This is no party fight but a fight for right, principle, justice and the people.

Do you know where your tax money goes. No. You will if I am elected and itemized not merely totals.

Yours for a general clean-up,

THE CHIEF LEGATEE

by ANNA KATHERINE GREEN.

SYNOPSIS

Chapters I to III—A few hours after marriage the wife of Roger J. Ransom is missing from the hotel where they have just registered. A detective, Mr. Gerrage, is called into the case. The bride, formerly Miss Georgian Hazen, becomes alarmed over something which happened while passing down the aisle from the altar.

While standing at the hotel desk with the groom the woman disappears. A man with a twisted face was seen whispering to the bride at the eception. Evidently flight was meditated after that meeting.

The bell boy noted peculiarities about the woman and was the only one who noticed her slip away. The detective claims the maid was a substitute for the wife, and rode from the house to the hotel while the wife left by the basement door in the maid's clothes.

Chapters IV to V—The woman who left by the basement door was traced to a meeting with the man with a broken jaw. Ransom receives a note from his wife who claims to have found a long lost twin sister, supposed to have been dead. The twin is of unbalanced mind and stone deaf. Ransom meets the man with the broken jaw and who declares himself to be Mrs. Ransom's brother who was in need of money.

Chapters VI to VII.—Ransom interviews his wife's lawyer, who insists that she has a twin sister. When leaving the office the office boy gives him his wife's address.

Ransom goes to Stitford, Conn., and finds the hotel where his wife has secured rooms. He visits the cemetery and finds a man about to efface from the tombstone the record of the death of the twin sister, which was supposed to have occurred years previously. He also finds the announcement of the death of the man with whom he had recently talked, who claimed to be his wife's brother.

Chapters IX and X.—Ransom learns that his wife, her sister, and the lawyer, are coming to the inn.

The sister who had left the coach for a walk appears later and he is surprised at the resemblance to his wife. He learns that his wife has had the lawyer draw her will.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XI.

Half Past One in the Morning

NOTHING now held Mr. Ransom to his room. The two women in whose fate he was so nearly concerned, his sister-in-law and his wife, had both retired and there was no other eye he feared. Indeed, he courted an interview with the lawyer, if only it could be naturally obtained; and he had little reason to think it could not. So he went down-stairs.

In a moment he seemed to have passed from the realm of dreams to that of reality. Here was no mystery. Here was life as he knew it. Walking boldly into the office, he ran his eye over the half-dozen men who sat there and, picking out the lawyer from the rest, sauntered easily up to him and sat down.

"My name is Johnston," said he. "I'm from New York; like yourself, I believe."

The lawyer, with a twinkle in his light-blue eye, answered with a cordial nod; and in two minutes a lively conversation had begun between them on purely impersonal subjects suited to the intelligence of the crowd they were in. This did not last, however. An opportunity soon came for them to stroll off together, and presently Mr. Ransom found himself closeted with this man who he had reason to believe, was the sole holder of the key to the secret which was devouring him.

"Did my wife sign the will?" Ransom asked. "All pretense aside, this is a very important matter to me, Mr. Harper; not on account of the money involved, but because the doing of this simple act seemed to require such an effort on her part."

"You are mistaken," was the quick reply, harshly accentuated. "She did just what she wanted to do. She was not in the least coerced, unless it was by circumstances."

"Circumstances! But that is what I mean. They seem to have been too much for her. I want to understand these circumstances."

The lawyer honored him with his first direct look.

"I don't understand them myself," said he.

"You don't?"

"No."

Mr. Ransom set down the wineglass he had raised half-way to his lips.

"You have simply followed her orders!"

"You have said it. Your wife is a woman of much more character than you think. She has amazed me."

"She is amazing me. I am here; she is here; only a few boards separate us. But iron bars could not be more effectual. I dare not approach her door; dare not ask her to accept from me the natural protection of a lover and husband. Instinct holds me back, or her will, which may not be stronger than mine but is certainly more dominant."

"Lawyers do not believe much in instinct as a usual thing, but I should advise confidence in this one. A woman with a tremendous will like that of Mrs. Ransom should be allowed a slack tether. The day will arrive when she will come to you herself. This I have said before; I can say nothing more to you to-night."

"Then there is nothing in the will you have drawn up to show that she has lost her affection for me?"

The lawyer drained his glass.

"I have not been given permission to declare its terms," said he, when his glass was again upon the table.

"In other words, I am to know nothing," exclaimed his exasperated companion.

"Not from me."

And this ended the conversation. Ransom withdrew immediately upstairs.

At ten o'clock he retired. The last look he cast down the hall had shown him the drowsy figure of the maid still sitting at her watch. It seemed to insure a peaceful night. But he had little expectation of sleep. Though the wind had quieted down and the rain fell with increasing gentleness, the roar of the waterfall surged through all his thoughts, which in themselves were turbulent. He did sleep, however, slept peacefully till half-past one, when he and all in the house were startled by a wild and piercing cry rising from one of the rooms. Terror was in the sound and in an instant every door was open save the two which were shut upon Georgian and her twin sister.

CHAPTER XII.

MR. RANSOM was the first one in the hall. He had not undressed himself, expecting a totally sleepless night. It was his figure, then, that the maid encountered as she came running from her post at the end of the corridor.

"Which room? which?" he gasped out, ignoring every precaution in his blind terror.

"This one. I am sure it came from this one," she declared, knocking loudly on Anitra's door.

There was a rustle within, a cry which was half a sob, then the sound of a hand fumbling with the lock. Meanwhile, Mr. Ransom had bent his ear to his wife's door.

"All still in here," he cried. "Not a sound. Something dreadful has happened—"

Just then Anitra's door fell back and a wild image confronted him and such others as had by this time collected in the passageway. With only a shawl covering her nightdress, the gipsy-like creature stood clawing the air and answering the looks that appealed to her, with wild gurgles, till suddenly her hot glances fell on Roger Ransom, when she instantly became rigid and stammered out:

"She's gone! I saw her black figure go by my window. She called out that the waterfall drew her. She went by the little balcony and the roof. The roof was slippery with the rain and she fell. That's why I screamed. But she got up again. What is she going to do at the waterfall? Stop her! stop her! She hasn't steady feet like me, and I wasn't really angry. I liked her; I liked her."

Sobs choked the rest. Her terror was infectious. Mr. Ransom reeled, then flung himself at Georgian's door. It resisted but the silence within told him that she was not there. Neither was she in Anitra's room. They could all look in and see it bare to the window.

"You saw her climbing past there?" he cried, forgetting she was deaf.

"Yes, yes," she chatted, catching his meaning from his pointing finger. "There's a balcony. She must have jumped on it from her own window. She didn't come in here. See! the door is locked on her side."

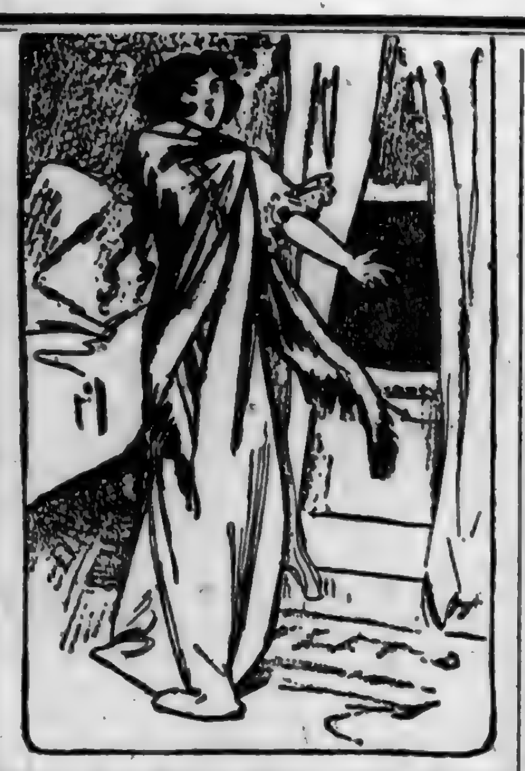
This was true.

"I woke and saw her. My eyes are like lynx's. I got out of bed to watch. She fell—"

The noise of a breaking lock snapped her words in two. One of the men present had flung himself against this communicating door. Immediately they all crowded into the adjoining room. It was empty and bitterly cold and wet. An open window explained why, and possibly the letter lying on the bureau inscribed with her husband's name would explain the rest. But he stopped to read no letters now.

"Show me the way to those falls," he cried, pocketing the letter as he rushed by the disheveled Anitra into the open hall. "I'm her husband, Roger Ransom. Who goes with me? He who does is my friend for life."

The clerk and one or two others rushed for their coats and lanterns. He waited for nothing. The roar of the waterfall had told him too many tales that day. And the will! Her will just signed!



The gipsie-like creature stood clawing the air.

"Georgian!"

They could hear his cry.

"Georgian! Georgian! Wait! wait! hear what I have to say!" thrilled back through the mist as he stumbled on, followed by the men waving their lanterns and shouting words of warning he probably never heard. Then his cry further off and fainter. "Georgian! Georgian!" Then silence and the slow drizzle of rain on the soggy walk and soaked roofs, with the far-off boom of the waterfall which Mrs. Deo and the trembling maids gazing at the wide-eyed Anitra shivering in the centre of her deserted room, tried to shut out by closing window and blind, forgetting that she was deaf and only heard such echoes as were thundering in her own mind.

CHAPTER XIII.

Where the Mill Stream Runs Fiercest.

TWO o'clock.

Three o'clock.

Two men were talking below their breaths in the otherwise empty office. "That 'ere mill stream never gives up anything it has once caught," muttered one into the ear of the other. "It's swift as fate and in certain places deep as hell. Dutch Jan's body was five months at the bottom of it, before it came up at Clark's pool."

The man beside him shivered and his hand roamed nervously towards his breast. He rose and walked restlessly to the window.

"Half the town is up," he muttered. "The lanterns go by like fire-flies. Poor Ransom! It's a hopeless job, I fear." And again his hand wandered to that breast pocket where the edge of a document could be seen. "I have half a mind to go out myself; anything is better than sitting here."

But he sat down just the same. Mr. Harper was no longer a young man. Then all the men looking up, stared. A girl stood before them in the doorway. Anitra, with cheeks ablaze and eyes burning, her traveling dress flapping damp about her heels, and on her head the red shawl she preferred to any hat. Behind her shoulder peered the anxious face of Mrs. Deo.

"I'm going out," cried the former in the loud and unmodulated voice of the deaf. "He don't come back! he don't come back! I'm going to see why."

The lawyer rose and bowed; then resolutely shook his head. He did not know whether she had appealed to him or not. She had not looked at him, had not looked at any one, but he felt that he must protest.

"I beg you not to do so," he began. "I really beg you to remain here and wait with me. You can do no good and the result may be dangerous." But he knew he was talking to deaf ears even before the landlady murmured:

"She doesn't hear a word. I've used every sign and motion I could think of, but it's done no good. She would dress and she will go out; you'll see."

The next minute her prophecy came true: the wild thing, with a quick whirl of her lithe body, was at the front door, and in another instant had flashed through it and was gone.

"It is my duty to follow her," said the lawyer. "Help me on with my coat; I'll find some one to guide me."

"Here is a lantern. Excuse me for not going with you," pleaded Mrs. Deo, "but some one must watch the house."

The New Yorker nodded, took the lantern offered him, and went stoically out.

He met a man on the walk in front. He was faced his way and was panting heavily.

"Hello," said he, "what news?"

"They haven't found her; but there's no doubt she went over the fall. The fellow who calls himself her husband has just been reading a letter they say she left on her bureau for him. It was a good-by, I reckon, for you can't tear him from the spot. He says he'll stay there till daylight. I couldn't stand the sight of his misery myself. Besides, it's mortal cold; I've just been running to get warm. Who was the girl who just went scurrying by out of here? It's no place for wimmen down there. One lost gal is enough."

"That's what I think," muttered the lawyer, hurrying on.

He was not a very imaginative man; some of his best friends thought him a cold and prosaic one, but he never forgot that walk or the sensations accompanying it. Dark as it still was, the way would have been impassable for a stranger, had it not been for the guidance given by the noisy passing to and fro of the awakened townspeople. A ring of lanterns marked the spot. It was near, very near where the heavy waters fell into a deep pool. No one now spoke of Anitra; she had evidently been warned by her first encounter to move with less precipitancy.

As he approached the place of central interest, he moved more warily too. He saw Ransom crouched on the wet earth, staring down at a slip of paper he held in his hands. A lantern set in the sand at his feet sent its feeble rays over his face and possibly over the paper; but he was no longer reading it, he was simply so lost in its sorrowful contents that all power of movement had deserted him.

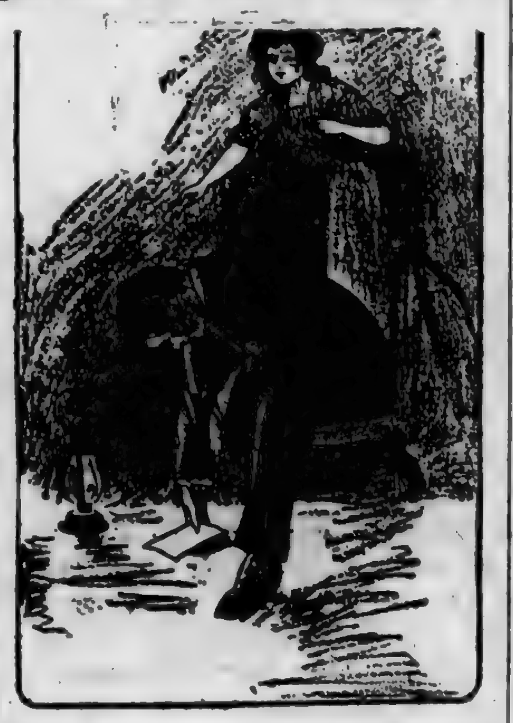
Harper approached to his side, but he did not address him. Something stirred in his own breast and kept him silent. But there was another person near who was not so deterred. As Harper stood watching Ransom's crouched, almost insensible figure, he perceived a slight dark form steal from the shadows and lay a hand on the stooping man's shoulder, then as he failed to move or give any token of feeling this touch, he heard Anitra's voice say in accents almost musical:

"You will get ill here; you are not used to the cold and the night air. Come back to the house; Georgian would wish it."

The name roused him and he looked up. Their eyes met and a strange gleam—a shock, perhaps, of sympathetic feeling, flashed upon either face. The lawyer saw and instinctively retreated from out the circle of light cast by the lantern; but the men at the stream's edge heard nothing. The flash of something white had caught their eyes and one man was reaching for it.

"Georgian," came in astonished repetition from the bereaved man's lips.

"She would wish it," persisted the other with still deeper and more urgent meaning. Then in a whisper so penetrating that even Mr. Harper caught its least inflection through all the thunder of the waterfall, "She loved you."



A slight dark form stole from the shadow

Ah! the enchantment, the feminine persuasiveness, the heart-moving sincerity phrase! From lips so untutored it seemed which breathed through that simple marvelous. Ransom was not insensible to its power, for he quiver er under her hand and his eyes took on a look of wonder. But he made no attempt to answer, even by a sign. He seemed content for that one instant just to listen and to look.

The man hanging over the stream drew back his arm. He had been deceived by a bit of froth; some of it clung yet to his fingers.

"Come," entreated the girl, her face emerging softly into the light, as she stooped lower over the lantern. "Come!" she had taken him by the hand and was drawing him gently upward.

With a leap he was on his feet and had thrown her off. Some memory had come to make her entreaty hateful.

"No," he cried, "no! Here is my place and here will I stay. You are a stranger to me! You drove her to this act, and you shall not cajole me into forgetting it."

He had spoken loudly; not so much because he remembered her affliction, but because of the roar of the fall and his own overwhelming passion. But she gave no evidence of hearing his words or even of resenting his manner.

"Won't you come?" she falteringly pleaded, pointing towards the house with its twinkling lights. "You are cold; you are shuddering; they will do the searching who don't mind night or wet. Follow Anitra, Anitra who is so sorry."

"No!" he shouted. His tone, his look, were almost those of a madman. He even put out his hands towards her in repulsion. He seemed to cast her away. This gesture, if not his words, reached her understanding. The lawyer saw her sway, fling back her young head with its disheveled locks to the night, and fall moaning pitifully to the ground. Here she lay still, with the wet grass all about her and the last lingering drops of rain beating on her huddled form.

Mr. Harper started to raise her, for Ransom stood petrified. But no sooner had the lawyer made his presence known by this impetuous movement, than Ransom woke from his trance and, darting down, lifted the girl in his arms and began moving with her towards the house. As he passed the lawyer he muttered between set teeth:

"She's caused me all my misery. But she looks too much like Georgian for me to see another man touch her. God will care for my poor darling's body."

CHAPTER XIV.

A Detective's Work.

MORNING!

The living household was about its tasks for all the horror of the night before, and the still unrelieved suspense as to the fate of one of its members.

The maid, who had sat on watch in the upper hall for so many hours the evening before, was again at her post, but this time with her eye fixed only on one door, the door behind which slept the exhausted Anitra. Ransom's room was empty; he was in the sitting-room below, closeted with the lawyer.

Some one had been there before them. The tray of bottles and glasses had been removed from the table, and in their place were to be seen a woman's damaged hat and a small tortoise-shell comb. Mr. Harper's hand was on the former, which was wound about with a wet veil.

"I think I recognize this," said he. "At least I have a distinct impression of having seen it before."

"It was picked up with the veil still on it near the entrance of the lane," explained Ransom.

"Then there can be no doubt that it is the hat Miss Hazen wore during her journey. She tossed it off the moment her foot touched the ground from the coach, and taking the shawl from her neck pulled it over her head instead. You remember that she had no hat on when they brought her in."

"I remember. This is Miss Hazen's hat without any doubt."

The lawyer eyed the speaker with curious interest. There was something in his tone that he did not understand.

"And this?" he ventured, laying a respectful finger on the comb.

"Found in the open field between the house and the mill-stream."

"Do you recognize it?"

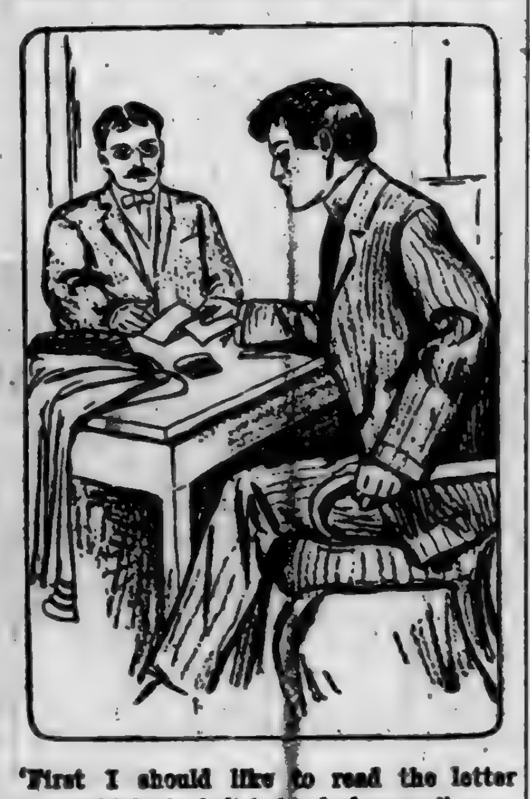
"No. Georgian wore such combs, but I cannot absolutely say that this is hers."

"I can. You see this little gold work at the top? Well, I have an eye for such things and I noticed this comb in her hair last night. There were two of them just alike."

Instinctively the two men sat with their eyes fixed for a minute on this comb, then, equally instinctively, they both looked up and gazed at each other long and hard. It was the lawyer who first spoke

"I think that we should have no further secrets between us," said he. "Here is Mrs. Ransom's will. There is a name mentioned in it which I do not know. Perhaps you do." Here he laid the document on the table.

Mr. Ransom eyed it but did not take it up. Instead, he drew a crumpled paper from his own pocket and, handing it to the lawyer, said: "First, I should like you to read the letter which she left behind for me. My feelings as a husband would lead me to hold it as a sacred legacy from all eyes but my own; but there is a mystery hidden in it, a mystery which I must penetrate, and you are the only man who can assist me in doing so."



"First I should like to read the letter which she left behind for me."

The lawyer, lowering his eyes to hide their own suspicious glint, opened the paper, and carefully read these lines:

> "Forgive. My troubles are too much for me. I'm going to a place of rest, the only place and the only rest possible to one in my position. I don't blame anybody. Least of all do I blame Anitra. It was not her fault that she was brought up rudely, or that she knows no restraint in love or innate. Be kind to her for my sake, and if any one else claims her or offers to take her from you, resist them. I give her entirely to you. It's a more priceless gift than you think; much more priceless than the one which I take from you by my death. I could never have been happy with you; you could never have been happy with me. Fate stood between us; a darker and more inexorable fate than you, in your kindly experience of life, could imagine. Else, why do I plunge to my death with your ring on my finger and your love in my heart?
> GEORGIAN."

"Ravings?" questioned Ransom hoarsely, as Mr. Harper's eyes rose again to his face.

"It would seem so," assented the lawyer. "Yet there is intelligence in all the lines. And the will—read the will. There is no lack of intelligent purpose there; little as it accords with the feeling she exhibits here for her sister. She leaves her nothing; and does not even mention her name. Her personal belongings she bequeaths to you; but her realty, which comprises the bulk of her property I believe, somewhat unequally I own, between you and a man named Auchincloss. It is he I want to ask you about. Have you ever heard her speak of him?"

"Josiah Auchincloss of St. Louis, Missouri," read Mr. Ransom. "No," the name is new to me. Didn't she tell you anything about him when she gave you her instructions?"

"Not a word. She said, 'You will hear from him if ever this will is published. He has a right to the money and I entreat you to show your respect for me by seeing that he gets it without any unnecessary trouble.' That was all she said or would say. Your wife was a woman of powerful character, Mr. Ransom. My little arts counted for nothing in any difference of opinion between us."

"Auchincloss!" repeated Ransom. "Another unknown quantity in the problem of my poor girl's life. What a tangle! Do you wonder that I am overcome by it? Anitra—the so-called brother—and now this Auchincloss!"

"Right, Ransom, I share your confusion."

"Do you?" The words came very slowly, penetratingly. "Haven't you some idea—some strange, possibly half-formed notion or secret intuition which might afford some clew to this labyrinth? I have been told that lawyers have a knack of getting at the bottom of human conduct and affairs. You have had a wide experience; does it not suggest some answer to this problem which will harmonize all its discordant elements and make clear its various complications?"

Mr. Harper shook his head, but there was a restrained excitement in his manner which was not altogether the reflection of that which dominated Ransom, and the latter, observing it, leaned across the table till their faces almost touched.

"Do you guess my thought?" he whispered. "Look at me and tell me if you guess my thought."

The lawyer hesitated, eying the trembling lip, the changing color, the wide-open, deeply flushed eyes so near his own; then with a slow smile of extraordinary subtlety, if not of comprehension, answered in a barely audible murmur:

"I think I do. I may be mad, but I think I do."

The other sank back with a sigh charged with what the lawyer interpreted as relief. Mr. Harper reseated himself, and for a moment neither looked at the other, and neither spoke; it would almost seem as if neither breathed. Then, as a bird, deceived by the silence, hopped to the window sill and began its cheep, "cheep," Mr. Ransom broke the spell by saying in low but studiously business-like tones:

"Have you thought it worth while to study the ground under her window or anywhere else for footprints? It might not be amiss; what do you think about it?"

"Let us go," readily acquisced the lawyer, rising to his feet with an honest show of alacrity; "after which I must telegraph to New York. I was expected back to-day."

"I know it; but your duties there will keep; these here cannot. Your hand on the promise that you will respect my secret till—well, till I can assure you that my intuitions are devoid of any real basis."

The lawyer's palm met his; then they started to go out; but before they had passed the door, Mr. Ransom came back, and lifting the comb from the table he put it in his pocket. As he did this, his eye flashed sidewise on the other. There were strange hints and presentiments in it which brought the color to the usually imperturbable lawyer's cheek.

In going out they passed the office-door. They rounded the corner of the house and entered a narrow walk, flagged with brick, which connected the space in front with the rear offices and garden. This walk ran close to the walls which were broken on this side by an ell projecting in the direction of the mill-stream. It was from the roof of this ell that Anitra declared Georgian to have slipped and fallen.

To Butter Crackers.

To butter crackers it is necessary to have the proper proportion of butter and crackers, otherwise the crumbs will be butter soaked. Melt one fourth cup of butter for one cup of crumbs. Pour it evenly over the crumbs and stir until the butter is well distributed over all the crumbs. Pour them into a pan to cool and sprinkle lightly over prepared food before baking.

When cheese is added to a food that is covered with cracker crumbs, it is grated and added just long enough before the food is removed from the fire to melt into the crumbs.

TEACHES MONKEYS AND FLIES TO ACT FOR MOVIE PICTURES.

When an animated film weekly starts out as a Celluloid Newspaper as the Paramount Newpictures have just done, it is not hard to imagine the difficulties its editor-in-chief will have to deal with in obtaining the proper reportorial assistance. The announcement is made that Raymond L. Ditmars, authority on reptiles and curator of the Bronx park zoo, has been added to the staff.

Mr. Ditmars is the man who successfully takes motion pictures of every variety of animal on stages ranging from the size of a postage stamp to forty feet square.

"We are taking many unique pictures of the inhabitants of the zoo, which will be at the sole disposal of the Paramount Pictures Corporation," Mr. Ditmars said. "We believe our films will be a great service to science and be an amusing and instructive boon to grownups and children.

"After waiting the best part of a week to get a few feet of film showing several monkeys playing a real game of hide and seek, we figured out that it would be much better to spend the time wasted in waiting in teaching the animals to do just what was wanted.

"Meeting with success in teaching the monkeys several easy tricks, we decided on a more serious effort; in widening the scope of the teaching we also admitted other species to the classes. The next were the trumpeter birds. It took two weeks before Trumpeter's Romance was rehearsed well enough to start the camera.

"One of the first experiments was the impersonations by monkeys to register moods of the human race—mirth. rage, despair, and sorrow," Mr. Ditmars continued.

"But the monkeys have progressed in rehearsals, and in the porcupine we have found a real film star. In monkey drama we have taken real scenes, and the principles have flirted, held hands, and spooned in the most approved fashion. We even tried Cinderilla, but that was too much of an attempt in the present state of art in the zoo."

The second successful play put on at Bronx park was The Great Marathon. It showed the exciting scenes attending the arrival of the smaller animals for the great jungle race. For this scene most elaborate scenery was prepared and much care had to be taken in teaching the animals what not to do as well as what to do. For instance, it took a week to teach the blue fur monkey that it must not try to climb the scenery.

Along the course were side shows, refreshment stations, and the other adjuncts of a country fair. Fully 100 varied participants in the scene struggled furiously for victory. In this connection it is well to state that not even the stage manager was able to prevent the excitement of the scene from communicating to the audience in the grandstand, and toward the end the more excited spectators would climb the grandstand railing and enter the race.

"Two great difficulties had to be overcome in this scene," said Mr. Ditmars. "One was to get all the contestants off when the monkey started firing the gun and the other to distribute handicaps so skillfully that the swiftest would not race ahead of the less speedy."

This scene required a stage of forty feet. The next most difficult performance required a stage the size of a postage stamp. Upon this performed the star of the fly juggling troupe. This fly rides into the arena in a chair upon the back of a beetle. It juggles dumbbells.

FLORENCE LAWRENCE RETURNS TO SCREEN

Universal's First Star is Back Again After Two Years' Absence from the Films.

About ten years ago—just after Christmas in 1906, to be exact—a fragile, fair-haired slip of a girl, not yet 17 years of age, applied for a position as "extra" actress at one of the three motion picture studios then in existence in the whole United States. It must have been the will of destiny that the nervous little creature, who leaned far across the railing in asking for work, be engaged, for more than any other she succeeded in helping to make the motion picture industry what it is today.

Now, just ten years later—almost to a day— this same fragile, fair-haired girl, who has gained an international reputation as the most versatile actress that ever stepped in front of the eye of a camera, and has been away from the studio for almost two years on a well-earned rest, has announced her intention of coming back.

The first production in which she will appear is a screen adaption of Marie Corelli's famous novel, Thelma. Those of us who are familiar with this story, will readily appreciate what remarkable opportunity this play offers for an actress possessing the ability of Florence Lawrence, and it is sure to be one of the big hits of the present screen season.

Report hath it that Miss Ethel Barrymore has been engaged by the Metro Pictures corporation to make at least four pictures a year at a rate of $40,000 a picture. If we were Miss Barrymore we would insist on making forty pictures a year at the very least.

MABEL TALIAFERRO A METRO STAR

Mabel Taliaferro, who will be seen in a big five-part Metro feature production, was, until recently, one of the few stage and screen stars who seldom attend motion picture theaters. On her last birthday anniversary a number of friends arranged a party in her honor, and the climax of the occasion was a box party at a motion picture show.

Miss Taliaferro was delighted with the pictures she saw, and since has become an enthusiast. Despite her marvelous success on the speaking stage, Miss Taliaferro never cared for the theater. It was against her wishes that she ever witnessed a performance, even when her sister, Edith, was appearing. She was 16 before she ever stepped inside of a theater. The first theatrical performance she ever saw was The Runaways.

A DARK NIGHT IN A FRENCH AMBULANCE

I don't want to tell just where it happened; it was somewhere in France. Rules were broken to let me in, and friendship got me the loan of a stretcher-bearer's uniform —so it won't do to tell where it was and get someone into trouble.

A call came for ambulances. There had been fighting, no one knew where, and a long, unlighted train was creaking its way out toward us, heavy with the dying and some dead. There were not enough stretcher-bearers.

The officer in charge of the Red Cross station was madly searching for anyone in uniform to do a grewsome night's work of unloading the train and conducing the little Ford ambulances to medical civilzation.

It was my chance, but a slim one, as the authorities are very particular not to let civilians see, let alone participate in, the depressing handling of bloody and shrieking wounded.

I stepped up to the officer who was pleading with a sergeant to find stretcher-bearers. "Voila moi," I said

Somebody found me a cap and somebody else an old uniform, and I quickly took my place on an ambulance. A long ride through the dark and we arrived as the train was pulling up at the little station.

The unloading began. I couldn't make you understand what a sight it was.

First, out came a queer bundle covered with canvas. He did not groan. Everybody took off his cap.

Big men took the head end of the stretchers and little men the foot end. I was unluckily bigger than my partner, and as the night wore on I became almost too tired to continue.

I found myself envying the little Frenchman who carried with me, and speculating on how light must be his end, the foot end, for the wounded had no feet and only one leg. It must have been light.

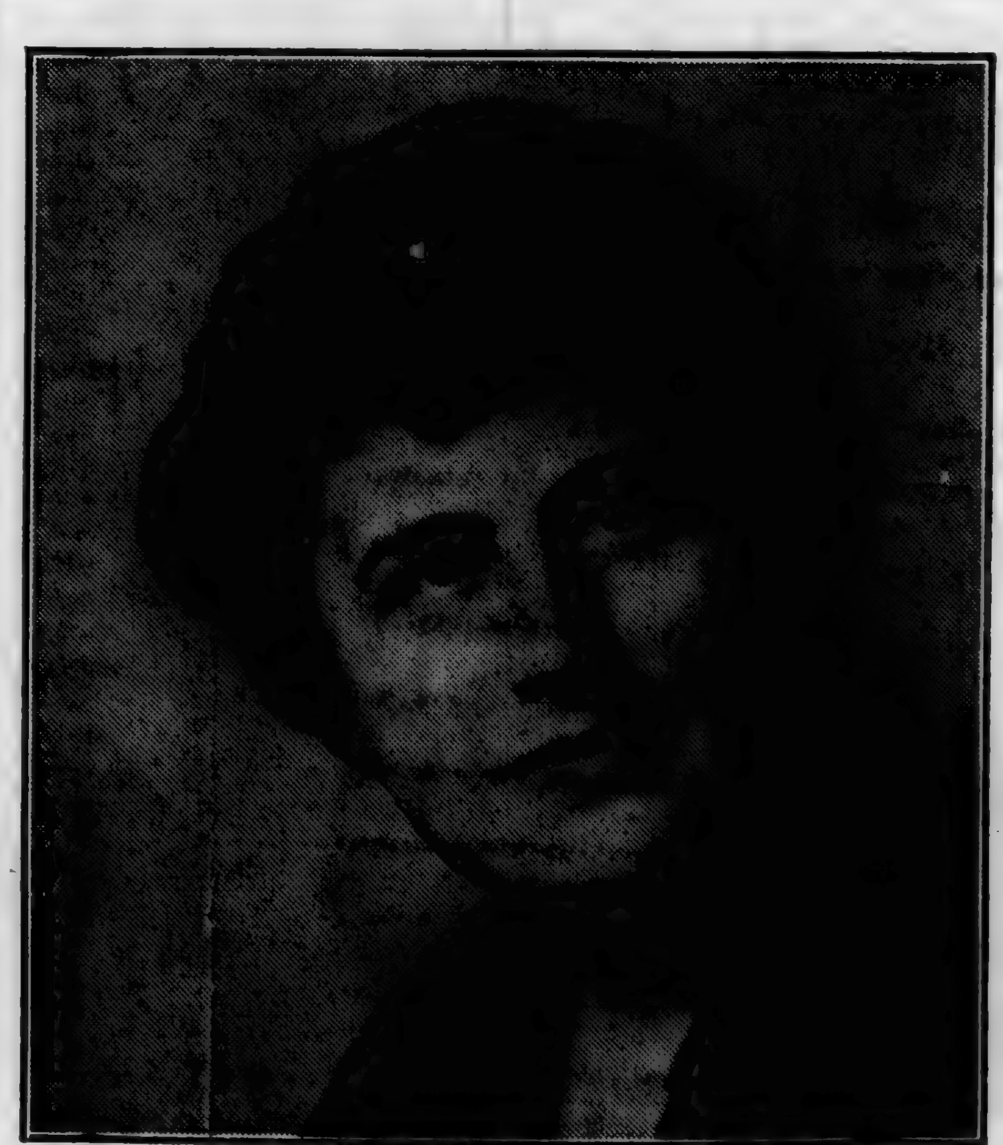
A sergeant called us sharply to the other side of the hall for the last installment—The men with no faces. Eyes, noses and jaws carried away by fragments of shell, they made a weird array as they lay in a row, each with a queer shaped white mask where his features ought to have been.

We removed them to the ambulances, and I watched a man with no legs on his stretcher by the roadside, who was trying to work a mechanical cigar-lighter and complaining that it would not "march."

A long wail came from the rear of the station. My partner and I went back. It was an old fellow with a long beard. He complained that we were forgetting him.

French soldiers always address one another as "thee" and "thou," and I used this form in speaking to him. He, lying in the muddy bedding of his stretcher, looked at me with accusing eyes. I wasn't treating him with sufficient respect.

He was a captain, and must be addressed as "you."



THE FIRST LADY OF THE NATION

Who recently toured the Middle West with the President

The next shrieked with pain. It was half a man; the lower half was missing.

Then came a long stream of stretchers bearing one-legged men; the left leg gone. They were set in a row.

Now for the ones with the right leg gone. They must be distributed side-by-side with the former, so that in placing the lot in ambulances, a whole leg would be next the wall and the wounds saved from rubbing.

Then came one-armed men; afterward, a few with shoulders missing. I don't know how many, but in the flickering light they kept coming and coming out of the dingy train till I got tired of counting, and so tired of carrying that I was afraid of dropping my end.

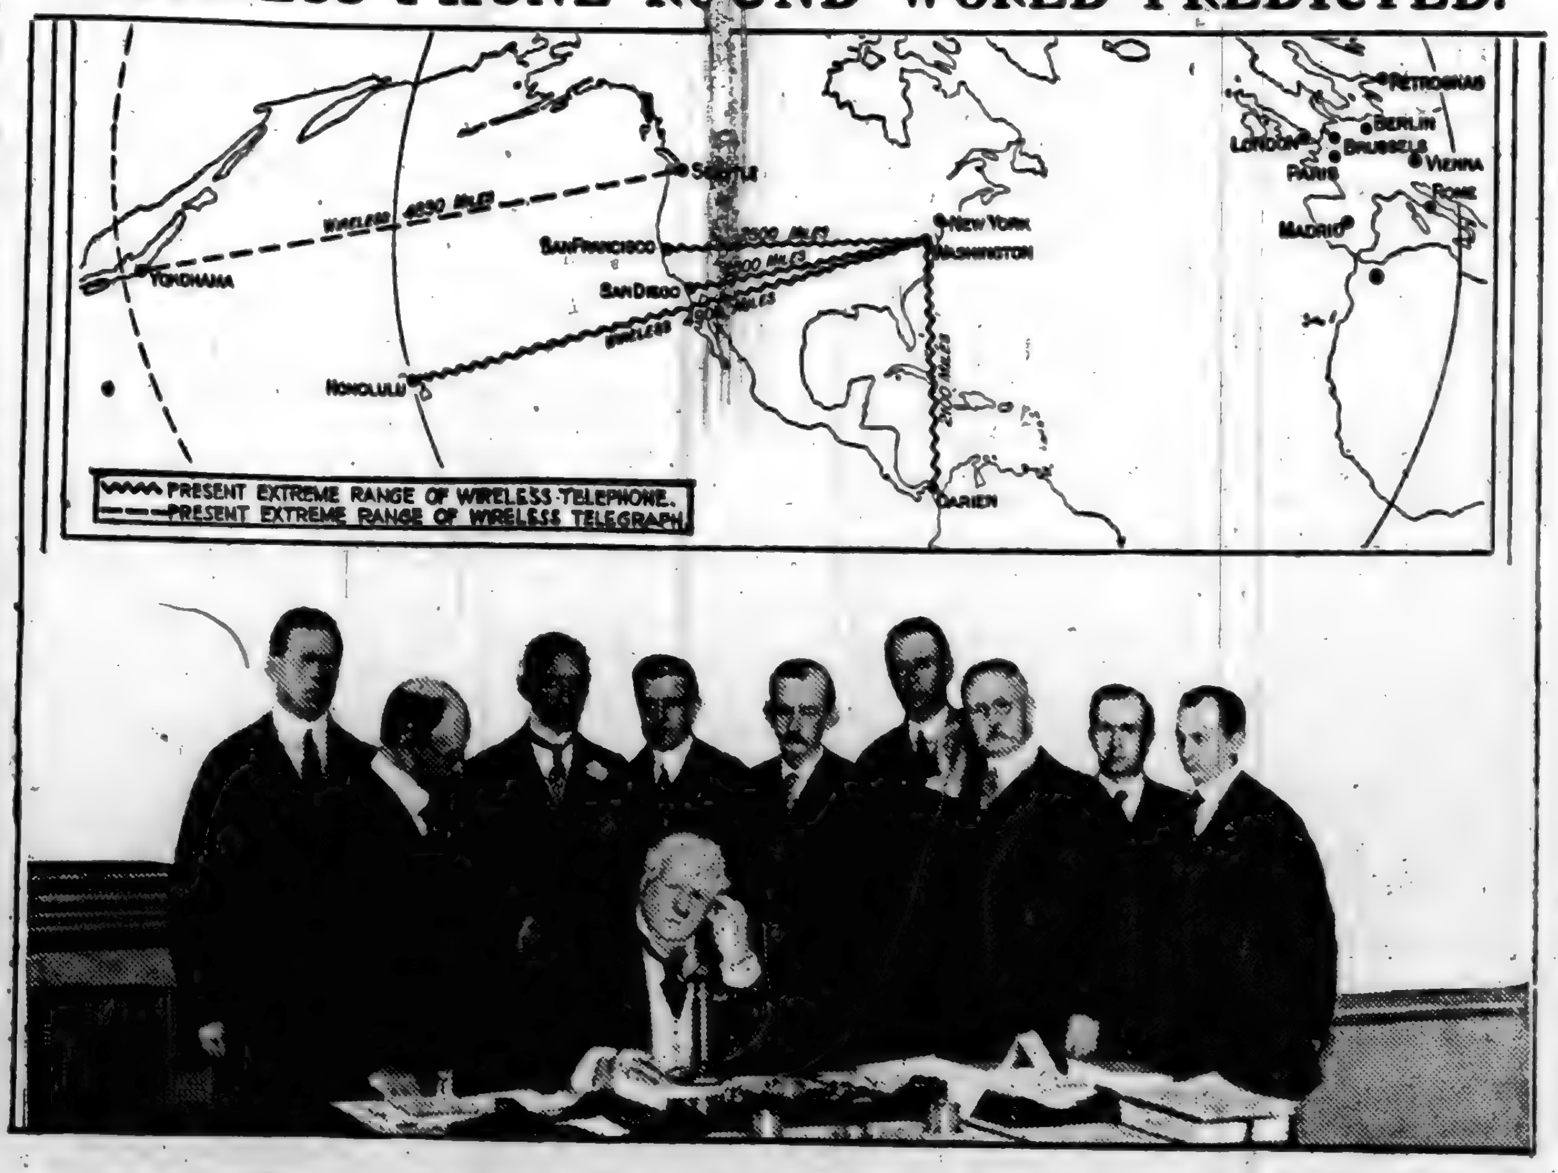
Knowing that a slip of the foot or hand might mean the death of that helpless fellow groaning at every swing of the stretcher, we worked slower.

He insisted that tne ambulance wait while we recovered the dirty old rag bundle of his personal trinkets and souvenirs. You must humor a man with a shoulder shot away.

We drove the rest of the night, and when the last load was taken out of the little pigeon holes of the ambiance, I fell asleep on a stretcher-bearer's cot, hoping to have no more experiences of such kind—and dreamed of the poor devil with a wound through the chest that my partner had let drop.

Since a paragraph appeared stating that Betty Nansen was Swedish frantic letters of reproach and correction have been flowing in from people who declare that she is Danish. The letters do depose that she is married to a Mr. Peter Nansen, a publisher of Denmark, and that her father was a Dane of some importance.

WIRELESS PHONE ROUND WORLD PREDICTED.



It is now possible to send the human voice by wireless to Honolulu from any distance in the United States. In a test from Washington to San Francisco men talked successfully, and the conversation was heard by another man stationed at Honolulu. Above are shown the distance the voice carried and Theodore N. Vail, head of the American Telephone and Telegraph company, with his engineers, making the long distance wireless telephone test.

Dictates of Fashion

The Shoulder Line

There is a marked tendency in some of the advance frock models to set the sleeves in at a very low shoulder line. Whether this is a forerunner of the kimono sleeve is doubtful, but one thing is certain, that sleeves and their settings are important and that you are quite as apt to see the long tight sleeves punctuated with puffs and ruffles as the very full flaring sleeve banded with velvet or fur.

Corsets

The corsetmakers promise no radical change in corsets for spring. They will be a trifle fuller in the hip and probably more curved at the waist, with a slightly higher bust. There will be a demand, however, for the pink corset for dress wear in preference to the white. Light flesh-colored grounds with darker brocaded figures will distinguish the finer corsets.

Bright Blouses

New blouses are growing brighter as the season progresses. All sorts of deep pinks, fuchsia reds, salmons, yellows, etc., are to be found among the crepe de chine and Georgette crepe models. Many new blouses show satin combinations and cape collars or cape yokes.

Bloomer Smartness

New bloomers, or rather trouserettes, are being made of taffeta in dark petticoat colorings. They are extremely full, with graduated side ruffles to give flare to the top skirt. Rubber holds them tight at the ankle under ruffles of the silk. For skating they cannot be bettered.

Trimmings

A fad for ball buttons of steel is to be noticed on the imported frocks. No gold or silver is seen on the tailored models, but row after row and dozen after dozen of the shining steel buttons in rather large ball shape. Jet is another trimming being pushed to the fore. While it is always to be seen on evening gowns, its use is very lavish at present on black-and-white frocks for evening wear. Whole bodices or corselets of the jet-sequined net are used, and wide bandings of heavy sequins match on the skirts.

Lining Importance

The coat lining is not a thing to be slighted nowadays. Indeed, the lining of many coats is more important than the outside. A white moire striped faille silk coat is bordered with seal and lined sumptuously with velvet, making it a question of preference which side shall be worn rightside foremost. Another black faille coat is lined pockets placed conspicuously in the linwith old-blue satin and turns back at the front in large revers to show the ing with brocaded flaps.

The Polymuriel Frock

That polymuriel or all-occasion frock which received so much notice some time ago has at last received official attention, and a prize has been awarded to the designer of a frock which fulfills the following characteristics: It is a dress which may be changed into several different gowns to be worn for luncheon, dinner or the evening. The sleeves may be made long or short, belt may be adjusted to empire or long-waisted lines, a deep flounce may be detached from the underskirt and put on edge of tunic to make a one-piece dress, the flounce may be done away with altogether and pantalettes substituted for dancing. The collar is detachable, and the whole frock may be turned inside out and changed from a simple tailored gown to an elaborately braided affair for formal occasions. Crepe meteor in black is suggested for its most practical development.

FOR HER SKATES.

Another excuse for a bag is a result of the present skating fad. Fascinating little bags, roomy enough to hold a pair of hockey skates and shoes, are made from velvet and leather. Strips of suede laced back and forth like the kindergarten paper mats form the bottom of one bag which has a top of gayly beaded gray velvet. This was designed to go with a gray skating costume, of course.

Material to match the skating frock or suit may be used for the making of these bags. A muff bag proves a very substantial and practical means of carrying the skating paraphernalia. If it matches the cap and scarf, as it does in one red broadcloth set, it makes a very stunning accessory to the skating girl's costume, which is nothing if not complete and fashionable this season.

FOR THE HAIR.

Maidens are loath to part with the bandeau to confine the hair. They realize that it adds an indefinable something which makes them appear to better advantage. Some fair maidens choose the simple bandeau of a strip of gold or silver braid. The band is worn low on the forehead and is joined with a jeweled clasp or ornament.

Sometimes a single strand of brilliants, pearls or gold beads are used for the purpose. Any ambitious girl can make such a strand for herself. All she need do is take three narrow ribbons of the length required to form the fillet and on these string the beads. Attach the three strands to a flat disk an inch in diameter, formed of buckram covered solidly with beads. Finish the other side in a similar manner.

EMBROIDERED BUTTONS.

Are you planning now to make your linen shirtwaists for the coming season? Two or three shirtwaists of this material are necessary in every business girl's wardrobe. Most attractive ones are being shown in bright blues, pinks and greens and in serviceable shades of tan. These are perfectly plain, but are enriched by having covered buttons of the material embroidered in combinations of colors. If you are not in the mood for making the entire blouses now, you can start on the buttons. It will be a big satisfaction to have them all prepared when the final finishing day comes.

A Mile a minute is pretty good speed, but a smile a minute gets more action. : :

OLD COIN ILLUSIONS SADLY SHATTERED.

One of the most persistent popular illusions is that old coins have great value simply because they are old. The man who finds an old cent which has been buried for many years in a crack in an old house straightway becomes convinced that he has unearthed a treasure. He shows it with caution to a few close friends, and then begins to get bids on it from collectors. When the first dealer tells him it is worth no more than its face value he scents a scheme to defraud him. When the second dealer tells him the same thing, he scents a conspiracy. And after he has offered it to a number of dealers, getting the same answer in each case, he decides that the dealers are not competent to judge values, and keeps the coin himself.

Speaking of reputed finds of rare coins, David Proskey, a New York coin expert, recently said to a reporter for the New York Times: "You might as well expect to find a diamond in the fields of New Jersey as to expect to find a valuable coin among old ones that come down to you in your family or that you chance to pick up somewhere." He mentioned cases of persons who had resorted to elaborate schemes to get at the true value of old coins under the belief that dealers to whom they are submitted replace them with counterfeits or other coins in an inferior state of preservation. One man came to him with six continental notes which had been hidden in a house for more than 100 years. He was told that they were worth 50 cents each. This he refused to believe, whereupon the dealer offered him a handful of the same age and denomination at the price quoted.

The 1804 dollar, he said, is believed by thousands of persons to command an enormous premium. "There never was an 1804 dollar made in that year," he said. "The 1804 dollar was made some time between 1830 and 1860." The country is flooded with counterfeit coins of this date, many of which have been made from 1801 dollars. A large number of them have fine milling on the edge, which could have been made only by a machine which the government did not begin to use until 1836. The Queen Anne farthing is another coin which has gained a high value in the public mind, because a collector once paid a high price for several that had never been in circulation. The used coins bring as high as $10, but they are often offered to dealers at ten times that price. The Jewish shekel, worth to dealers about $1, is often held for as much as $250 by enthusiastic amateurs who are misled by dates and the strange character stamped on the coin.

In the public mind a coin more than fifty years old is hoary with age and so rare as to be almost priceless, but a silver dollar of 1795 is actually worth no more than $2 to dealers, and then only if it is in an excellent state of preservation, for a dollar of 1803 is worth as much as 15 cents more than its face value, but collectors and dealers find that there are so many of them in circulation that there is no profit in buying and selling them. In fact, a person might have a hundred United States coins of different denominations and dates, no two alike, but all more than 100 years old, which would be worth to a dealer not over $10 above their face value.—New York Times.

Going the Limit.

You have all heard it said that the people of today are taking more care of and interest in their stock and pets than to their children, and we believe to some extent that this is a fact. The other day an amusing thing occurred something like this: After the members of the family had all had an attack of the LaGrippe, the dog took sick. After nursing it for a while no relief could be found, so the veternarian was called and administered the remedy and presented his bill. Little purp was being nursed by daddy and by the time the doctor arrived daddy was nearly frantic and showed signs of tears being shed for the little one. The remedy was applied as directed and daddy and his little one went to bed and in a short time evidence of spasms were seen, on the part of the dog. Daddy stayed right at his post and now both are convalescent.

GRANDMA NEVER LET HER HAIR GET GRAY

When you darken your hair with Sage Tea and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it's done so naturally, so evenly. Preparing this mixture, though, at home is mussy and troublesome. For 50 cents you can buy at any drug store the ready-to-use tonic called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning all gray hair disappears, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully darkened, glossy and luxuriant. You will also discover dandruff is gone and hair has stopped falling.

Gray, faded hair, though no disgrace, is a sign of old age, and as we all desire a youthful and attractive appearance, get busy at once with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur and look years younger.

THE CHIEF LEGATEE

A STORY OF LOVE & MYSTERY, INVOLVING STARTLING INCIDENTS, COMPLICATIONS & ADVENTURES

by ANNA KATHERINE GREEN

SYNOPSIS

Chapters I to III—A few hours after marriage the wife of Roger J. Ransom is missing from the hotel where they have just registered. A detective, Mr. Gerrage, is called into the case. The bride, formerly Miss Georgian Hazen, becomes alarmed over something which happened while passing down the aisle from the altar.

While standing at the hotel desk with the groom the woman disappears. A man with a twisted face was seen whispering to the bride at the eception. Evidently flight was meditated after that meeting.

The bell boy noted peculiarities about the woman and was the only one who noticed her slip away. The detective claims the maid was a substitute for the wife, and rode from the house to the hotel while the wife left by the basement door in the maid's clothes.

Chapters IV to V—The woman who left by the basement door was traced to a meeting with the man with a broken jaw. Ransom receives a note from his wife who claims to have found a long lost twin sister, supposed to have been dead. The twin is of unbalanced mind and stone deaf. Ransom meets the man with the broken jaw and who declares himself to be Mrs. Ransom's brother who was in need of money.

Chapters VI to VII.—Ransom interviews his wife's lawyer, who insists that she has a twin sister. When leaving the office the office boy gives him his wife's address.

Ransom goes to Stitford, Conn., and finds the hotel where his wife has secured rooms. He visits the cemetery and finds a man about to efface from the tombstone the record of the death of the twin sister, which was supposed to have occurred years previously. He also finds the announcement of the death of the man with whom he had recently talked, who claimed to be his wife's brother.

Chapters IX and X.—Ransom learns that his wife, her sister, and the lawyer, are coming to the inn. The sister who had left the coach for a walk appears later and he is surprised at the resemblance to his wife. He learns that his wife has had the lawyer draw her will.

Chapters XI to XIII—The inmates of the hotel were aroused by a piercing cry in the night. The sister declared that Ransom's wife had gone to the waterfall to destroy her life.

The mill stream never gave up its dead. A letter was found from Mrs. Ransom confirming the fact that she had tired of life. Some doubt was expressed by the detective.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

Their first care was to glance up at the roof. It was a sloping one and Anitra's story seemed credible enough when they noted how much easier it would be to drop upon it from the little balcony overhead than to traverse the roof itself and reach the ground beneath without slipping. But as they looked longer, each face betrayed doubt. The descent from the balcony was easy enough, but how about the passage from Georgian's window to the balcony? This latter was confined to the one window, and was surrounded by an ornamental balustrade, high enough to offer a decided obstacle to the adventurous person endeavoring to leap upon it from the adjoining window-ledge. However, this leap, made in the dark and under circumstances inducing the utmost recklessness, might look practical enough from the window-ledge itself, and Mr. Harper, making a remark to this effect, proposed that they should examine the ground rather than the house for evidences of Mrs. Ransom's slip and fall as related by Anitra.

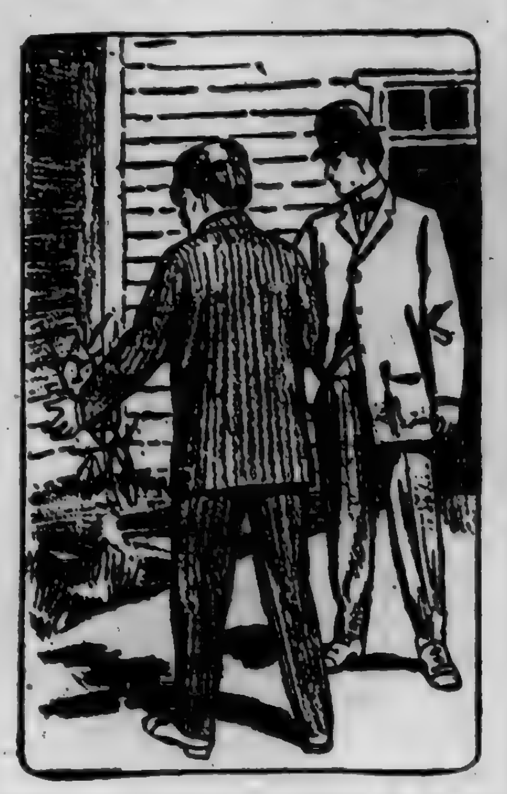
The only spot where they could hope to find such was in the one short stretch—the width of the ell—underlying the edge of the sloping roof. But this spot was all flagged, as I have already said, and when their eyes strayed beyond it to the untilled fields, stretching between them and the great rock at the verge of the waterfall from which she was supposed to have taken her fatal leap, it was to find them as unproductive of evidence as the brick wall itself. Not one pair of feet but many had passed that way since early morning. The ground showed a mas of impressions of all sizes and shapes, amid which it would have been impossible for them, without the necessary experience, to have followed up the flight of any one person. They had come to their task too late.

"Futile," decided the lawyer. "There is no use in our going that way." And he turned to look again at the ground in their immediate vicinity. As he did so, his eye lighted on the triangular spot where the ell met the side of the house under the kitchen windows. Here there was no flagging, the walk taking a diagonal course from the corner of the ell to the kitchen door.

"What are those?" he asked, pointing to two oblong impressions brimming with water which disfigured the center of this small plot.

"They look like footprints," ventured Ransom.

"They are footprints," decided Mr. Harper as they stooped to examine the marks, "and the foot prints of a person dropping from a height. Nothing else explains their depth or general appearance."



"They are footprints," decided Mr. Harper

"Couldn't they be those of a person approaching the ell to converse with some one above? I see others similar to these in the open place over there beyond the kitchen door."

"It is a trail. Let us follow it. It seems to lead anywhere but towards the waterfall. This is an important discovery Mr. Ransom, and may lead to conclusions such as we might not otherwise have presumed to entertain, especially if we come upon an impression clear enough to point in which direction it was going."

"Here is what you want," Ransom assured him in a low and curiously smothered voice. He was evidently greatly excited by this result of their inquiries, for all his apparent quiet and precise movements. "It's a woman's step, and that woman was going from the ell when she left these tokens of her passage behind her. Going! and, as you say, not in the direction of the waterfall."

"Hush! I see some one at the kitchen window. Let us move warily and be sure not to confound these prints with those of any other person. It looks as if a great many people had passed here."

"Yes, this is the way to the chicken-coops and out-houses. But in the ground beyond I think I see a single line of steps again,—small steps like these. Where can they be leading? They are deep like those of a person running."

"And straggling, like those of a person running in the dark. See how they waver from the direct line down there, turn, and almost come up against that wood-pile! Whose steps are these? Whose, Mr. Harper? Quick! I must see where they go. Our time will not be lost. The key to the labyrinth is in our hands."

The lawyer was in the rear and the eyes of the other were fixed far ahead. For this reason, perhaps, the former allowed himself a quiet shake of the head, which might not have encouraged the other so very much, had he caught sight of it. They were now on the verge of the garden, or what would soon be a garden if these rains betokened spring. A path ran along its edge and in this path the footsteps they were following lost themselves; but they came upon them again among the hillocks of some old potato-hills beyond, and finally traced them quite across the garden waste to a fence, along which they ran, blundering from ploughed earth to spots of smoother ground, and so back again till they came upon an old turn-stile!

Passing through this, the two men stopped and looked about them. They were in a road ridged with grass and flanked by bushes. One end ran east into a wooden valley, the other debouched on the highway a few feet to the right of the tavern.

"The lane!" exclaimed Mr. Hunter. "The lead towards the waterfall was a feint. It was in this direction she fled, and it is from this point that search must be made for her."

Ransom, greatly perturbed, for this possibility of secret flight opened vistas of as much mystery, if not of as much suffering, as her death in the river, glanced at the sodden ground under their feet, and thus along the lane to where it lost itself from view among the trees.

"No possible following of steps here," he declared. "A hundred people must have come this way since early morning."

"It's a short cut from the Ferry. They told me last night that it lessened the distance by fully a quarter of a mile."

"The Ferry! Can she be there? Or in the woods, or on her way to some unknown place far out of our reach? The thought is maddening, Mr. Harper, and I feel as helpless as a child under it. Shall we get detectives from the county-seat, or start on the hunt ourselves? We might hear something further on to help us."

"We might; but I should rather stay on the immediate scene at present. Ah, here comes a fellow in a cart who should be able to tell us something! Stand by and I'll accost him. You needn't show your face."

Mr. Ransom turned aside. Mr. Harper waited till the slow-moving horse, dragging a heavily jogging wagon, came alongside, and he had caught the eye of the low-browed, broad-faced farmer boy who sat on a bag of potatoes and held the reins.

"Good morning," said he. "Bad news this way. Any better at the Ferry, or down east, as you call it?"

"Eh?" was the lumbering, half-suspicious answer from the startled boy. "I've heard naught down yonder, but that a gal threw herself over the waterfall up here last night. Is that a fact, sir? I'm mighty curus to know. My mother knew them Hazens; used to wash for 'em years ago. She told me to bring up these taters and larn all I could about it."

"We don't know much more than that ourselves," was the smooth and cautious reply. "The lady certainly is missing, and she is supposed to have drowned herself." Then, as he noted the fellow's eyes resting with some curiosity on Mr. Ransom's well-clad, gentlemanly figure, added gravely, and with a slight gesture towards the latter:

"The lady's husband."

The lad's jaw fell and he looked very sheepish.

"Excuse me, misters, I didn't know," he managed to mutter, with a slash at his horse which was vainly endeavoring to pull the cart from the rut in which it had stuck. "I guess I'll go along to the hotel. I've a bag of taters for Mrs. Deo."

But the cart didn't budge and the lawyer had time to say:

"Guess you didn't hear anything said about another lady I am interested in. No talk down your way of a strange young woman seen anywhere on the highway or about any of the houses between here and the Landing?"

"Jerusha! I did hear a neighbor of mine say somethin' about a stranger gal he saw this very mornin'. Met her down by Beardsley's. She was goin' through the mud on foot as lively as you please. Asked him the way to the Ferry. He noticed her because she was pretty and spoke in such a nice way—just like a city gal," he said. "Is it any one from this hotel?" added the fellow with a wondering look. "If so, she walked a mile before daylight in mud up to her ankles. A girl of powerful grit that! with a mighty good reason for catching the train."

"Oh. there's an early train then?" asked the lawyer, ignoring the other's question with unmoved good-humor. "One, I mean, before the 10.50 express?"

"Yes, sir, or so I've heard. I never took it. Folks don't from here, except they're in an awful hurry. Will y'er say who the young woman is? Not—not—"

"We don't know who she is," quietly objected the lawyer. "And you don't know who she is either," he severely added, holding the yawping countryman with his eye. "If you're the man I think you, you'll not talk about her unless you're asked by the constable or some one you are bound to answer. And what's more, you'll earn a five-dollar bill by going back the road you've come and bringing here, without any talk or fuss, the man you were just telling us about. I want to have a talk with him, but I don't want any one but you and him to know this. You can tell him it's worth money, if he don't want to come. Do you understand?"

"You bet," chuckled the grinning lad. "A five-dollar bill is mighty clearing to the mind, sir. But must I turn right back before going on to the hotel and hearing the news?"

"We'll help you turn the cart," grimly suggested Mr. Harper. "Get up there, Dobbin, or whatever your name is. Here, Ransom, lend a hand!"

There was nothing for the fellow to do but to accept the help proffered, and turn his cart. With one longing look towards the hotel he jerked at the rein and shouted at the horse, which, after a few feeble efforts, pulled the cart about and started off again in the desired direction.

"Sooner done, sooner paid," shouted the lawyer, as lad and cart went jolting off. "Remember to ask for Lawyer Harper when you come back. I won't be far from the office."

The fellow nodded; gave one grinning look back and whipped up his nag. The lawyer and Ransom eyed one another. "It's only a possibility," emphasized the former. "Don't lay too much stress upon it."

"Let us speak plainly," urged Ransom. "Mr. Harper, are you sure that you know just what my thought is?"

"The time has not come for discussing that question. Let us defer it. There is a fact to be settled first."

"Whether the girl—"

"No; this! Whether your wife could have jumped from her window to the balcony, as Anitra said. It did not look feasible from below, but as I then remarked to you, our opinion may change when we consider it from above. Will you go up-stairs with me me to your wife's room?"

"I will go anywhere and do anything you please, so that we learn the exact truth. But spare me the curiosity of these people. The crowd on this side is increasing."

"We will go in by the kitchen door. Some one there will show us the way up-stairs."

And in this manner they entered; not escaping entirely all curious looks, for human nature is human nature, whether in the kitchen or parlor.

In the hall above Mr. Ransom took the precedence. As they neared the fatal room he motioned the lawyer to wait till he could ascertain if Miss Hazen would be disturbed by their intrusion. The door, which had been broken in between the two rooms, could not have been put back securely, and he dreaded incommoding her. He was gone but a minute. Almost as soon as the lawyer started to follow him, he could be seen beckoning from poor Georgian's door.

"Miss Hazen is asleep," whispered Ransom, as the other drew near. "We can look about this room with impunity."

They both entered and the lawyer crossed at once to the window.

"Your wife could never have taken the leap ascribed to her by the woman you call Anitra," he declared, after a minute's careful scrutiny of the conditions. "The balustrade of the adjoining balcony is not only in the way, but the distance is at least five feet from the extreme end of this window-ledge. A woman accustomed to a life of adventure or to the feats of a gymnasium might do it, but not a lady of Mrs. Ransom's habits. If your wife made her way from this room to the balcony outside her sister's window, she did it by means of the communicating door."

"But the door was found locked on this side. There is the key in the lock now."

"You are sure of this?"

"I was the first one to call attention to it."

"Then," began the lawyer judicially, but stopped as he noted the peculiar eagerness of Ransom's expression, and turned his attention instead to the interior of the room and the various articles belonging to Mrs. Ransom which were to be seen in it. "The dress your wife wore when she signed her will," he remarked, pointing to the light green gown hanging on the inside of the door by which they had entered.

Ransom stepped up to it, but did not touch it. He could see her as she looked in this gown in her memorable passage through the hall the evening before, and, recalling her expression, wondered if they yet understood the nature of her purpose and the determination which gave it such extraordinary vigor.

Mr. Harper called his attention to two other articles of dress hanging in another part of the room. These were her long gray rain-coat and the hat and veil she had worn on the train.

"She went out bare-headed and in the plain serge dress in which she arrived," remarked Mr. Harper with a side glance at Ransom. "I wonder if the girl met on the highway was without hat and dressed in black serge."

Ransom was silent.

"Anitra's hat is below and here is Mrs. Ransom's. She who escaped from this house last night went out bare-headed," repeated the lawyer.

Mr. Ransom, moving aside to avoid the probing of the other's eye, merely remarked:

"You noticed my wife's dress very particularly it seems. It was of serge, you say."

"Yes. I am learned in stuffs. I remarked it when she got into the coach, possibly because I was struck by its simplicity and conventional make. There was no trimming on the bottom, only sticking. Her sister's was just like it. They had the look of being ready-made."

"But Anitra had no rain-coat. I remember that her shoulders were wet when she came in from the lane."

"No, she had no protection but her blouse, black like her dress. I presume that her hot blood resented every kind of wrap."

Again that sidelong glance from his keen eye. "She wore a checked silk handkerchief about her neck—the one she afterwards put over her head."

"You were on the same train with my wife and sister-in-law," Ransom now said. "Did you sit near them? Converse with them, that is, with Mrs. Ransom?"

"I have no reason for deceiving you in that regard," replied Mr. Harper. "I did not come up from New York on the same train they did. They must have come up in the morning, for when I arrived at the place they call the Ferry, I saw them standing on the hotel steps ready to step into the coach. I spoke to Mrs. Ransom then, but only a word. My grip-sack had been put under the driver's seat, and I saw that I was expected to ride with him, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather. Mrs. Ransom saw it too and possibly my natural hesitation, for she turned to me after she had seen her sister safely ensconced inside, and said something about her regret at having subjected me to such inconvenience, but did not offer to make room for me in the body of the coach, though there was room enough if the other had been the quiet lady she was herself. But she was not, and possibly this was Mrs. Ransom's excuse for her apparent lack of consideration for me. Before we reached the point where the lane cuts in, I became aware of some disturbance behind me, and when we really got there, I heard first the coach door opening, then your wife's voice, raised in entreaty to the driver, calling on him to stop before her sister jumped out and hurt herself. 'She is deaf and very wild' was all the explanation she gave after Miss Hazen had leaped into the wet road and darted from sight into what looked to me, in the darkness, like a tangled mass of bushes. Then she said something about her having had hard work to keep her still till we got this far; but that she was sure she would find her way to the hotel, and that we mustn't bother ourselves about it for she wasn't going to; Anitra and she had run this road too many times when they were children. That is all I have [illegible] f my intercourse with these ladies prior to our appearance at the hotel. I think it right for me to clear the slate, Ransom. Who knows what we may wish to write upon it next?"

A slight shiver on Ransom's part was the sole answer he gave to this innuendo; then both settled themselves to work, the eyes of either flashing hither and thither from one small object to another, in this seemingly deserted room. In the momentary silence which followed, the even breathing of the woman in the adjoining room could be distinctly heard. It seemed to affect Mr. Ransom deeply, though he strove hard to maintain the business-like attitude he had assumed from the beginning of this unofficial examination.

"She has confided nothing more to you since your return from the river bank?" suggested the lawyer.

"No."

The word came sharply, considering Mr. Ransom's usual manner. The lawyer showed surprise but no resentment, and turned his attention to the bag both had noted lying open on two chairs.

"Nothing equivocal here," he declared, after a moment's careful scrutiny of its remaining contents. "The only comment I should make in regard to what I find here is that all the articles are less carefully chosen than you would expect from one of your wife's fondness for fine appointments."

"They were collected in a hurry and possibly by telephone," returned the unhappy husband, after a shrinking glance into the bag. "The ones she provided in anticipation of her wedding are at the hotel in New York. In the trunks and bags there you will find articles as elegant as you could wish." Here he turned to the dresser, and pointed to the various objects grouped upon it.

"These show that she arranged herself with care for her meeting with you last night. How did she appear at that interview? Natural?"

"Hardly; she was much too excited. But I had no suspicion of what she was cherishing in her mind. I thought her intentions whimsical, and endeavored to edge in a little advice, but she was in no mood to receive it. Her mind was too full of what she intended to do.

"Here's where she ate her supper," he added, picking up a morsel of crust from a table set against the wall. "And so this door was found fastened on this side?" he proceeded, laying his hand on the broken lock.

"It had to be burst open, you see."

"And the window?"

"Was up. The carpet, as you can tell by look and feeling, is still wet with the soaking it got."

Mr. Harper's air changed to one of reluctant conviction.

"The evidence seems conclusive of your wife having left this room and the house in the remarkable manner stated by Miss Hazen. Yet—"

This yet showed that he was not as thoroughly convinced as the first phrase would show. But he added nothing to it; only stood listening, apparently to the even breathing of the sleeper on the other side of this loosely hanging door.

As he did so, his eye encountered the hot, dry gaze of Mr. Ransom, fixed upon him in a suspense too cruel to prolong, and with a sudden change of manner he moved from the door, saying significantly as he led the way out:

"Let us have a word or two in your own room. It is a principle of mine not to trust even the ears of the deaf with what it is desirable to keep secret."

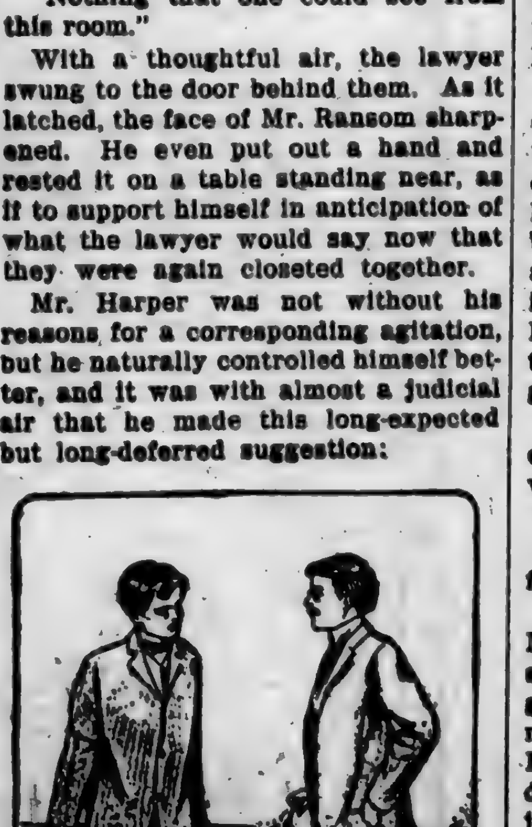
As they were crossing the threshold, the lawyer wheeled about and cast a quick look behind him.

"I observe," said he, "that you have a full and unobstructed view from here of the whole hall and of the two doors where our interest is centered. I presume you kept a strict watch on both last night. You let nothing escape you?"

"Nothing that one could see from this room."

With a thoughtful air, the lawyer swung to the door behind them. As it latched, the face of Mr. Ransom sharpened. He even put out a hand and rested it on a table standing near, as if to support himself in anticipation of what the lawyer would say now that they were again closeted together.

Mr. Harper was not without his reasons for a corresponding agitation, but he naturally controlled himself better, and it was with almost a judicial air that he made this long-expected but long-deferred suggestion:



"You had better tell me now."

"You had better tell me now, and as explicitly as possible, just what is in your mind. It will prevent all misunderstanding between us, as well as any injudicious move on my part."

Mr. Ransom hesitated, leaning hard on the table; then, with a sudden burst, he exclaimed:

"It sounds like folly, and you may think that my troubles have driven me mad. But I have a feeling here—a feeling without any reason or proof to back it—that the woman now sleeping off her exhaustion in Anitra's room is the woman I courted and married—Georgian Hazen, now Georgian Ransom, my wife."

"Good! I have made no mistake. That is my thought, too," responded the lawyer.

CHAPTER XV.

Anitra.

A FEW minutes later they were discussing this amazing possibility.

"I have no reason for this conclusion,—this hope," admitted Mr. Ransom. "It is instinct with me, an intuition, and not the result of my judgment. It came to me when she first addressed me down by the mill-stream. If you consider me either wrong or misled, I confess that I shall not be able to combat your decision with any argument plausible enough to hold your attention for a moment."

"But I don't consider you either wrong or misled," protested the other. "That is," he warily added, "I am ready to accept the correctness of the possibility you mention and afterwards to note where the supposition will lead us. Of course, your first sensation is that of relief."

"It will be when I am no longer the prey of doubts."

"Notwithstanding the mystery?"

"Notwithstanding the mystery. The one thing I have found it impossible to contemplate is her death;—the extinction of all hope which death alone can bring. She has become so blended with my every thought since the hour she vanished from my eyes and consequently from my protection, that I should lose the better part of my self in losing her. Anything but that, Mr. Harper."

"Even possible shame?"

"How, shame?"

"Some reason very strong and very vital must underlie her conduct if what we suspect is true, and she has not only been willing to subject you and herself to a seeming separation by death, but to burden herself with the additional misery of being obliged to assume a personality cumbered by such a drawback to happiness and even common social intercourse as this of the supposed Anitra."

"You mean her deafness?"

"I mean that, yes. What could Mrs. Ransom's motive be (if the woman sleeping yonder is Mrs. Ransom) for so tremendous a sacrifice as this you ascribe to her? The rescue of her sister from some impending calamity? That would argue a love of long standing and of superhuman force; one far transcending even her natural affection for the husband to whom she has just given her hand. Such a love under such circumstances is not possible. She has known this long lost sister for a few days only. Her sense of duty towards her, even her compassion for one so unfortunate, might lead her to risk much, but not so much as that. You must look for some other explanation; one more reasonable and much more personal."

"Where? where? I'm all at sea; blinded, dazed, almost at my wits' end. I can see no reason for anything she has done. I neither understand her nor understand myself. I ought to shrink from the poor creature there, sleeping off—I don't know what. But I don't. I feel drawn to her, instead, irresistibly drawn, as if my place were at her bedside to comfort and protect."

At this impulsive assertion springing from a depth of feeling for which the staid lawyer had no measure, a perplexed frown chased all the urbanity from his face. Some thought, not altogether welcome, had come to disturb him. He eyed Mr. Ransom closely from under his clouded brows. He could do this now with impunity, for Mr. Ransom's glances were turned whither his thoughts and inclinations had wandered.

"I would advise you," came in slow comment from the watchful lawyer, "not to be too certain of your conclusions till doubt becomes an absolute impossibility. Instinct is a good thing but it must never be regarded as infallible. It may be proved that it is your wife who has fled, after all. In which case it would be a great mistake to put any faith in this gipsy girl, Anitra."

Mr. Ransom's face hardened; his eyes did not leave the direction in which they were set.

"I will remember," said he.

His companion did not appear satisfied, and continued emphatically:

"Whether the woman now here is Mrs. Ransom of her wild and irresponsible sister, she is a person of dangerous will and one not to be lightly regarded nor carelessly dealt with. Pray consider this, Mr. Ransom, and do not allow impulse to supersede judgment. If you will take my advice—"

"Speak."

"I should treat her as if she were the woman she calls herself, or, at least, as if you thought her so. Nothing—" this word he repeated as he noted the incredulity with which the other listened—"would be so likely to make her betray herself as that."

"Let us go back and listen again at her door," was Mr. Ransom's emphatic but inconsequent reply.

HAS HAD A VARIED CAREER IN THE "MOVIES."

Estelle Mardo, well known for her work with the Biograph and later with the Vitagraph, by which company she was featured with Maurice Costello, has been engaged by Capt. Harry Lambart of the Mirror Films, Inc., as leading woman for one of the companies that will be engaged in making feature films. Miss Mardo's successes since her entrance into the screen realm, three years ago, have made for her an enviable reputation. She first got a chance to show her talent in a prominent role when Lawrence Marston, now one of the directors of the Mirror films, cast her as Elinore in "The Road to Yesterday." After that she played many prominent parts and then went into stock. She then was cast by D. W. Griffith in a role opposite to Henry B. Walthall in "The Floor Above," a Mutual production. She played opposite King Baggot at the Imp studio and later went south with E. K. Lincoln to appear in "The Littlest Rebel." After this she did several conspicuous and important parts with the Vitagraph and the World Film companies.

LITERATURE OF MARK TWAIN ON FILMS. FIRST WILL BE PUDD'NHEAD WILSON.

Preserving for all time the stories of the late Mark Twain, the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co. has made the first of a series of Mark Twain adaptations for the screen, a feature production of Pudd'nhead Wilson. This will be followed by Tom Sawyer, Huckleberry Finn, Innocents Abroad and others.

To maintain the flavor of the original novel, the scenes of which are laid in the little river town of Dawson's Landing, described in the book as being situated at the "Missouri side of the Mississippi," and in St. Louis, some of the scenes in the photoplay will actually show picturesque bits of life on the Mississippi, as the great river was known to those who lived on its banks in the days before the Civil War.

Although it is not generally known, Pudd'nhead Wilson was the first fiction which made use of the subject of fingerprints as a means of identification, and as a theme by which a murder mystery was solved.

Among the favorite players to appear in Pudd'nhead Wilson are Theodore Roberts, Thomas Meighan, Alan Hale and Florence Dagmar.

SOUNDS PECULIAR, BUT MUST BE TRUE.

Crane Wilbur, the Horsley (Mutual) star, stands without a rival as the possessor of the most perfect profile of any actor of the screen field. He has waving black hair, dark eyes and a flawless nose and chin. It has not been Mr. Wilbur's handsome features alone which has made him a great favorite among screen fans. He is an extremely intelligent actor, and he has a large following which has watched his career since the days when he was a stock idol in the eastern states. Wilbur began his professional career with Sir Henry Irving, then played with Mrs. Fiske's Manhattan company for four years, leaving it for further road and stock experience. His first film engagement was with Pathe. At present he heads one of the Horsley Mutual Masterpicture companies, for which he himself writes the scenarios.

STARTED LONG TIME AGO.

Marie Doro, the graceful star who does some classic dances in the Fine Arts-Triangle play, The Wood Nymph, was born in Duncannon, Pa., May 25, 1882. She made her first appearance on the stage at the Criterion theater, St. Paul, Minn., in 1901, as Katherine in Aristocracy. She followed with a tour with Jerome Sykes in The Billionaire. She then appeared in The Girl from Kay's, and with William Gillette in The Admirable Crichton. Miss Doro made her first London appearance as Lucy Sheridan in The Dictator with William Collier. Her first stellar appearance was in Boston, when she appeared in The Morals of Marcus. She later appeared in the same play at the Criterion in New York. Some of her later successes were as Peggy in A Butterfly on the Wheel and as Oliver in Oliver Twist and as Patience in a comic opera of that name.

GOSSIP ABOUT SILENT STAGE PLAYERS.

Sol Lesser, of San Francisco, has acquired the United States rights of "The Ne'er Do Well," a motion picture recently made by the Selig Polyscope company. The consideration was $510,000. The film is in ten reels and is a picturization of Rex Beach's story of the same name. It was made in Panama by Colin Campbell six months ago.

IS THAT ALL?

George Beban, who will soon be seen in a big World Film feature, is thinking of quitting motion picture work for something less hazardous, such as teaming dynamite. During the past three weeks he has been bitten by a bulldog, smashed over the head with a Japanese jar, butted by an irate ram, buried in the debris of an exploding freight steamer, slashed across the hand with a saber, and thrown off the Palisodes of the Hudson!

Lula Glaser, musical comedy star, posed the leading part in the film, "Love's Pilgrimage to America," at the Universal studios.

Lionel Barrymore, who, it will be remembered, is related to Ethel and Jack and Uncle Sidney and Uncle John, has written a scenario, which the Gaumont company has accepted.

The Screen club and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' league, local No. 1, of New York, have joined to give a ball in Madison Square garden on Feb. 19. The hall has a capacity of 12,000.

It is announced that when the Fall River liners and the Hudson river boats start their regular seasons motion pictures from the World studios will be shown on board. One dollar seats and 50-cent seats will be the tariff as at present planned.

Miss Gertrude Robinson, who is now being filmed in the Gaumont Mutual Masterpicture, edition de luxe, "As a Woman Sows," is also a scenario writer. From her pen came the photoplay, "Trapping Santa Claus," produced by D. W. Griffith.

The movie fans are more than interested in the first photoplays released by the Selig company introducing Jack Pickford as a star. He is the younger brother of Mary and Lottie Pickford and, although only 20 years of age, he has been a movie star for years.

Jan. 24 has been set by the Essanay company for the release of the first episode of "The Strange Case of Mary Page," the series in which Henry Walthall and Edna Mayo are to be starred. The series consists of fifteen episodes of two reels each.

Adele Blood, who is remembered for her impersonation of Everywoman in the drama of that name, is to be the principal in a new feature film styled "The Devil's Toy," which the Premo Feature Film company now is producing. Miss Blood's blond hair is described as one of the attractions.

Dictates of Fashion

A SHAMPOO JACKET.

A real necessity to the woman who shampoos her own head is a jacket to protect her from the water that falls on the shoulders. Quite a practical jacket can be made from a turkish towel or from a straight piece of linen with a hole cut in the middle for the head to slip through. At the sides the jacket can be held together with cords, tapes or ribbon. Beauty can be added to the jacket by embroidering little flowers here and there over the front of same. French knots and lazy-daisy stitches fill in quickly. China blue and old rose are cheerful colors to choose for the stitches. The edge of the jacket can be finished with a rolled hem, a binding of braid or, if one has the time, a crocheted edge would increase the attractiveness of the garment. A simple coat could be made from a piece of stock sheeting.

Should you be making the jacket for a gift, you might include with the present a bath mitten. This can be made from turkish toweling also. Or, a better idea would be to use a turkish washcloth for the purpose, since it is not necessary to have fingers or a thumb in the mitten. All that is necessary is to fold a washcloth in half, stitch it along the long end and one short end and finish the edges with crochet stitches to match that used on the jacket. On the mitten a spray of the design used on the jacket can be embroidered or the monogram of the recipient can be substituted. Many people prefer the bath mitten to the regular washcloth. It is quite convenient for bathing children.

A UNIQUE RUNNER.

A use for a handsome strip of filet crochet will be appreciated by the woman who makes a lot of this lace and does not know just where to place her new efforts in this direction. A strip of ecru crash toweling is cut with the ends rather bluntly pointed. Then through the center of its entire length a strip of filet crochet in a conventional rose pattern is placed. The end of the lace is finished off straight, thus taking off the point of the crash and allowing the material to slope gently into the lace. A bit of fringe is added to the lace merely, and roses to match as nearly as possible the rose of the crochet are added in the corners of the runner. The same idea in all-white makes a very handsome scarf for the dressing table or sideboard.

NATURE STUDY AS BASIS OF HIGHER EDUCATION.

At the largest high school for girls in the world, the Washington Irving, in New York city, the students are given a thorough knowledge of flowers and garden truck as a basis for their higher studies. Twice a year the teachers and students write to their friends in the country to send them tagged specimens from the soil. These are exhibited and properly explained.

FILLED WITH KNOTS.

One of the easiest ways to add monograms to household linens is to fill each letter with French knots. By using this treatment one is saved the work of padding. Of course, to gain an effective result it is quite necessary to place the knots close together.

This idea is very often carried out to ornament a tray cloth. When the knots are of a pretty shade of pink, blue or yellow the monogram shows up very well beneath the glass covering the serving tray.

KNIT BOUDOIR BOOTS.

A pretty little offering for the invalid is a pair of knit boots. They are crocheted from bright-colored wool, and the stitch is much like that used for the ordinary crocheted bedroom slippers, except that the boots are made high enough to cover the ankle well. They make a warm foot covering for the first days of convalescence, when the low bedroom slipper, no matter how warm, leaves the ankles more or less unprotected.

TATTING.

Tatting is growing more popular every day. It is used as a trimming for baby articles, and many women are starting now to edge collars and cuffs with the trimming, so that the sets may be used on summer frocks of linen.

It is a splendid idea to have on hand several handkerchiefs edged with tatting. You can never tell when you will be called upon unexpectedly to send some one a little gift. It will be very convenient to have ready an article displaying your handiwork.

WELL GROOMED WOMEN.

Collars which fit snugly and are high enough to wrinkle are one of the latest fads.

The toque and tie and muff to match give great smartness to a very simple suit.

Paris especially favors the combination of a very sheer material with one of weight.

A half-season hat has a crown of white wool plaited straw garnished with a single velvet rose.

Slav peasant fashions and embroideries are likely to be a striking feature in half-season tailored suits.

A very pretty skirt is made of chiffon and trimmed with wide ruffles of taffeta.

The high fur collar which conceals the ears is still very smart, although the shawl collar is also worn by the well-dressed.

There is economy in the present vogue of chiffon gowns. One may have two or three dresses designed to be worn under a single coat.

Charming and inexpensive are the evening frocks made of white and a colored tulle combined. The skirt is very simple, being a full white skirt with the full overskirt of colored tulle.

A dear little dress for a child is of sheer white organdy made with a full bodice gathered into a full skirt, which is nothing more than two very full ruffles. Point is given this simple frock by a wide sash tied, in the back, in a very large bow.

THE KITCHEN

THREE PEA PORRIDGES.

Put three cups of whole green dried peas, without previous soaking, to cook in three separate kettles, with a sliced onion and a sliced carrot in each. Some dried or fresh mint may be put in with the peas, which are to be prepared nearest like green fresh peas. With one cup of peas put four cups of cold water, with another put the same, but after the peas have boiled up a little add to this one teaspoon of baking soda; with the third cup add four cups of water, in which a ham or spareribs were boiled. Bring each to a boil and skim, cover tightly, and then put over a simmering fire. When the soda is aded to the one cup there will be a good deal of frothing, and a deeper kettle must be used than for the others, as this water is likely to boil up and over, even over the simmering burner, if covered as tightly as it should be.

At the end of an hour the peas with the soda will be rather soft, and at the end of two hours all cooked to pieces, in a perfect porridge, the hulls very noticeable, as will be the soda odor, which disappears when the peas are kept. Those in the plain water will not be as soft nor as sweet as those with the soda, while those in the salt water will be a good deal harder and growing saltier and harder as the water evaporates. The starch of the peas will soften with longer cooking, but while this allows the protein part to granulate it will not soften much, simply be in smaller portions. More than this, as the water evaporates the gelatin in the water from the meat will render it likely to stick or burn on, even over the smallest fire. When done, put all through a sieve and use the puree in various ways. Peas are generally accounted more disgestible than beans, because they are more often sieved—that is, the hard and perfectly indigestible part removed.

BREAKFAST WHEAT.

Five pounds of wheat at 25 cents has been known to last two people six weeks as a breakfast cereal when they had it every morning. Enough was cooked to last a week, and the same principle which makes cold beans sweeter works in this. One cup of wheat will take up about two cups and a half in the cooking. A man who last year sent communications to a great number of newspapers to the effect that this was one of the most palatable and healthful foods made from wheat recommended simmering the whole wheat for two days in a double boiler. It is sufficiently cooked if simmered over the fire for an hour in a double boiler, then cooked all night in a fireless cooker. An excellent and ancient pudding may then be made of it by adding twice its measure of milk and one egg to each two cups of milk. Stir over the fire till cooked together, season with nutmeg, and serve cold. This is frumenty.

DRIED PEA LOAVES.

Green dried peas, when cooked with soda, which process has been defended as adding something to them of value, which may be questionable, are much darker and yellower than are green peas cooked in any other way, and have been taken for mashed sweet potato. And, by the way, when cooked in this fashion, aluminum should not be used. In making a loaf of these or any other cooked dried peas it is necessary to sieve them, add the requisite amount of fat, whether butter or other, and then stir the whole in a frying pan rapidly over a hot fire until sufficiently dry. If there is much liquid it should be turned off and saved for soup. It will jelly when cold.

CELERY, PINEAPPLE AND NUT SALAD.

Cut the slices from a can of sliced pineapple into small cubes. Cut in equal quantity of tender celery into small pieces, sprinkle with lemon juice and stand in a cool place until chilled. Add one-fourth of a cup of blanched and chopped almonds, or pistachio nuts, to a cupful of mayonnaise dressing and use sufficient dressing to mix thoroughly with the celery and pineapple. Serve on lettuce leaves and garnish, if desired, with more chopped nuts.

CANDIED ORANGE PEEL.

Remove all white membrane from peel. Cut peel with scissors into strips one-fourth inch wide and one inch long. Boil twenty minutes in clear water; skim out from water and repeat until it has boiled in four waters. Skim out again. Measure peel and put into saucepan with an equal measure of granulated sugar. The moisture of the peel will melt sugar. Boil gently in syrup as long as possible until syrup is boiled away, tossing frequently with a fork and sprinkle granulated sugar over it. When cool, pack in tight glass jars or in tin boxes. This will keep for a long time and is very nice.

PEA BOUILLON.

If peas have been slowly cooked with a little more water than given above, and then strained through flannel after they are sieved, the liquid obtained is more nourishing and energy making than any ordinary meat bouillon, since it contains a great deal of starch and also some soluble protein which is called casein. Casein is essential to cheese, and the Chinese make a cheese out of soy beans because they contain so much of it.

This bouillon served with a little whipped cream or with the egg garnishes or vegetables cut in small fancy forms is good for those who must go without meat.

IMITATION GREEN PEAS.

When the green dried peas are cooked in plain water, if this is carefully done, they will be soft in two hours without any previous soaking, and if generously buttered while hot, then they will be quite as much like green peas as any from a can. The most effective way to do this is to add the butter to each individual portion in a sauce dish.

CORN MEAL MUSH.

Corn meal mush, if cooked all night in a fireless cooker will have formed a jelly and be the sweeter or really partly digested by this long cooking. Fried corn meal mush is always sweeter than the mush first made over the stove because it has usually stood over night and so ripened.

WOLVES TERRORIZING DISTRICT IN RUSSIA

Petrograd. — Large packs of wolves have appeared in the Vitebsk government, on the right bank of the Dvina, and have done a lot of damage among the horses and other domestic animals. There have been cases in which they have carried off watchdogs from farm yards in the full light of day, and the peasants have been compelled to beat off their attacks with clubs. It is believed that the wolves have been scared from the forests of Livonia and Poland by the incessant artillery fire.

Some do not hear opportunity when it knocks--because they are knocking at the time.

DRINK MORE WATER IF KIDNEYS BOTHER

Eat less meat and take Salts for Backache or Bladder trouble—Neutralizes acids.

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. The urine becomes cloudy; the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys clog you must help them flush off the body's urinous waste or you'll be a real sick person shortly. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomach gets sour, tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad.

Eat less meat, drink lots of water; also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

OLD-TIME COLD CURE—DRINK HOT TEA!

Get a small package of Hamburg Breast Tea, or as the German folks call it, "Hamburger Brust Thee," at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the tea, put a cup of boiling water upon it, pour through a sieve and drink a teacup full at any time during the day or before retiring. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieving congestion. Also loosens the bowels, thus breaking up a cold.

Try it the next time you suffer from a cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

RUB RHEUMATISM FROM STIFF, ACHING JOINTS

Rub Soreness from joints and muscles with a small trial bottle of old St. Jacobs Oil

Stop "dosing" Rheumatism.

It's pain only; not one case in fifty requires internal treatment. Rub soothing, penetrating "St. Jacobs Oil" right on the "tender spot," and by the time you say Jack Robinson—out comes the rheumatic pain. "St. Jacob's Oil" is a harmless rheumatism cure which never disappoints and doesn't burn the skin. It takes pain, soreness and stiffness from aching joints, muscles and bones; stops sciatica, lumbago, backache, neuralgia.

Limber up! Get a 25 cent bottle of old-time, honest "St. Jacobs Oil" from any drug store, and in a moment you'll be free from pains, aches and stiffness. Don't suffer! Rub rheumatism away.

No More Croup

Medicine Made At Home: Children Cry For It

A safe, pleasant and reliable remedy for croup, coughs, colds and bronchial affections can quickly and cheaply be made at home. Many a case of pneumonia or serious lung trouble could be prevented if a good cough remedy was used in time. Protect your family by getting a three ounce bottle of Pynine to which you add thirteen ounces of syrup. Guaranteed to give satisfaction or money refunded. Full directions accompany each bottle. Price 50 cts.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Automobile News

TWELVE YEARS OF MOTOR CAR DEVELOPMENT.

Industry Grows From Insignificant Nothing to One Figuring Only in Millions.

From almost insignificant twelve years ago to one of the world's greatest industries today is, briefly, the story of the motor car. The rapidity of its growth has immeasurably surpassed that of any other industry in the world's history. Twelve years ago the automobile was the object of sneers and derision. Today it ranks as one of the fastest methods of travel.

Twelve years ago the automobile had not yet acquired the title which was assigned it a few years later: "The rich man's plaything." Today it is the world's necessity. Twelve years ago the owner of an automobile was the butt of the jester. Today he is the envy of his friends and neighbors.

Twelve years ago the motorist who could take a drive of a few miles without getting stuck was the exception. Today the tour of a thousand miles or more with nothing to do but start, steer and stop is the recreation of thousands. Twelve years ago the motor vehicle as a commercial utility was unknown. Today there are thousands of them. Twelve years hence will see its use practically universal.

Twelve years ago the investment in the production of motor cars amounted to a few hundred thousand dollars. Today the investment runs into the hundreds of millions. Twelve years ago there were only a few thousand persons employed in the industry. Today it gives employment to hundreds of thousands and furnishes a livelihood for more than a million.

Great as has been the development of the motor car, it has not been without its handicaps. In some respects its growth has been to rapid for its own well being. The manufacture of motor cars opened up new fields of usefulness. It created new opportunities for brains, but unfortunately brains did not develop as fast as the demand for their product. Because of its seemingly rosy future many were misled into the belief that it was any man's business.

The result was that so-called automobile manufacturers sprung up in almost every nook and cranny of the country. Equipped with a few blue prints and but little more than a blacksmith's outfit, they announced to the world their new and marvelous creation. Maybe they built a lot and sold a lot of them. But it was a handicap to the industry. The buyers either became unfavorable advertisements for the automobile in general or their appetites were whetted just enough to make them want something better.

AUTOMOBILE OWNERS NOT AFFECTED BY TAX

There should be extreme delight evinced by the over 2,400,000 automobile owners of the country over the statement recently made by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, in which he interprets that section of President Wilson's message to congress referring to "a tax of 50 cents per horse power on automobiles and internal explosion engines" to mean that this tax is to be paid only by the manufacturer on cars before they leave the factory, and that the proposed action is not designed to affect the automobiles already in use by private owners. This is indeed comforting news for the automobile owner. Already one of the heaviest taxed individuals in the country, the proposals to make further in roads on the resources of the motorist were considered in the light of the "last straw."

Immediately following the reading of the president's message a storm of protest arose over the plan to obtain additional revenue through a tax of 1 cent a gallon of gasoline and 50 cents a horse power on automobiles.

It was held that the adoption of these tax measures would mean that the average automobile owner would be required to pay an additional charge of $17.50, or a total tax of $38.61 for the privilege of owning and operating a car. Local and national motoring organizations, as well as the associations identified with the trade and industry joined in the protest against this descrimination. It is due to this general complaint that the statement from Secretary McAdoo was issued.

New additions in 1915 to automobile factories in the United States covered 255 acres of floor space—equivalent to about one-third of the area of Central Park in New York.

MOTORISTS ARE TOLD OF BATTERY CARE

Winter Months Are Hard on Storage Receptacles; Frequent Tests Urged.

"Winter has definitely set in, and for the next three months motor car owners would be wise to give some little attention to the storage batteries on their machines if they desire to have them perform up to their full efficiency," says a Manager.

"To keep a storage battery in a state of efficiency is not a burden, although not a few owners seem to believe that it is an everlasting source of electrical energy, and, by reason of that belief, pay no attention to it whatever.

"Neglect of the storage battery in cold weather is serious, for when it is in a discharging condition it will freeze, while it will never freeze when fully charged.

"A great many owners use more or less guess work as to whether their batteries are charged to the proper degree or not. This is absolutely foolish, when any motorist can purchase for a small sum a hydrometer with which to test the condition of each cell, and which records with exactness its condition.

"The regular testing of the storage battery with a hydrometer is an economy which should not be lost sight of. A glance at its easily read scale will warn the motorist if there is danger of exhaustion, with the natural result that he uses the stored energy in a sparing manner until the battery has been recharged to its full capacity.

"Nearly every motorist knows what it means to swing a cold motor on a bleak Winter morning, and it might make them sympathize with the little storage battery if they sat down and computed the amount of energy spent in the attempt to start it.

"Even in warm weather the drain for the storage battery to start the motor is considerable, but it is extremely severe in cold temperatures, and it takes many miles of running to restore the precious 'juice' which is used up in the operation.

"Too much stress cannot be placed on the hard service to which a storage battery is subjected in Winter, what with the greater strain to start the motor and the greater demand for lighting during the long evenings of this period of the year.

"Incidentally, too, a lot of motorists use their cars very little during the Winter months and the storage batteries deteriorate rapidly if neglected. Others lay their cars up for a long stretch, and in many cases have been known not to bother with cars or batteries until they are again placed in commission. The consequences of neglect of storage batteries in such cases are naturally destructive and expensive."

GERMAN WOMEN IN NEW ROLES.

Dressmakers and Laundresses Become Munitions Makers—Others Are Now Porters, Miners, Chaufeurs, Barbers, Bakers, etc.

Boston, Jan. 15.—Frau Eliza Ichenhauser recently reviewed the work which German women have accomplished during the war, in an address delivered at the exhibition of Women's War Work in Berlin.

One of the most important tasks accomplished by German women since the outbreak of war, the speaker declared, according to correspondence to The Christian Science Monitor, had been the maintenance of agriculture. The 4,500,000 women who were employed on the land even in peace time had worked unceasingly at the cultivation of the crops, and women had also been instructed with higher posts, such as the management of estates, and so forth, although here again the lack of training had made itself felt.

Dressmakers, laundresses, and so forth, had, for the most part, eventually found employment in munitions factories and other similar establishments, and had quickly learned their new trade. This had been specially the case in the iron trade, and the machine, chemical, electrical and leather industry, while the book printing trade, once closed to women, had been obliged to admit women compositors. Even Krupp was confiding work requiring great precision to women, and the central labor bureau in Berlin had found 80,000 posts for women and girls in one year.

Women had also made their appearance in callings such as the loading and unloading of goods, the transport and mining industries, street cleaning and mending, the driving of motor lorries, and the working of lifts, while they were likely permanently to retain their positions as bakers and barbers. In the world of commerce women typists, stenographers, and bookkeepers were greatly in demand, and in the post office and on the railways they were being employed in the higher, as well as in the lower offices.

Auto History of the Year of 1915

Ten American Automobile companies increased their capital stock in 1915 from $35,675,000 to $204,900,000.

Exports of automobiles and parts exceeded last year's by 400 per cent. Up to December they were $115,000,000 compared with $28,000,000 in 1914.

Average cost of all automobiles sold in 1915, $672; production, 850,000. In 1903 average cost, $1,150; production, 11,000.

Speeds of over 100 miles an hour were attained in races. Six new speedways were built during the year; $300,000 was paid in prize money to drivers.

Automobile registration in the United States passed the 2, 070,000 mark. New York State alone registered and taxed 231,713. One family in ten has one.

General Electric company became a factor, absorbing the General Vehicle, the Peerless Motor Truck companies and the Entz patents on gasoline electric drive.

Twelve-cylinder motors and about twenty makes of eight cylinders are part of the engineering feats of the year, showing a well defined and recognized field for the V-shaped motor.

The Society of Automobile Engineers and the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce accomplished notable results in engineering and in economical handling of litigation, transportation and patent licenses.

Many important patent litigations were adjudicated during the year. The electric horn patents, the Kardo axle patents, and many others that will long remain in the memories of those interested in this phase of the industry.

Rubber embargoes and the war had a marked influence on exports. France's duty on imports and England's import duty of 33 1-3 per cent to "protect British makers from American competition" are instances. competition" are instances.

Production of pleasure vehicles and trucks in 1915 reached 850,000. Their retaail value was $691,778,000. The horse-power of all automobiles in use in the United States (51,000,000) exceeded the horse-power of all steam locomotives in the United States (48,000,000).

The year 1915 was the WORST year for reckless drivers all over the country. Several crusades against city speeders were carried through with notable effect. So universal has the automobile become that careful driving has become necessary and is being enforced.

Extraordinary dividends were declared by many automobile makers. Ford rebates $15,000,000, besides a $48,000,000 stock dividend. Other large payments in stock and cash were: Chandler, 77 per cent; Haynes, 100 per cent; Canadian Ford, 600 per cent; the Public Truck, 100 per cent; General Motors, 50 per cent.

NEW U. S. AEROPLANE WILL EXCEL ALL OTHERS

Washington. — Before long, if plans of the Navy Department develop, the United States will be the possessor of an aeroplane superior to the new German Fokker machines, the giant Russian battle planes, and the latest French aircraft.

This information was forthcoming to-day from a highly placed official in the Navy Department. The conception of the idea of a governmental department undertaking the actual building of an aeroplane came about as the result of the inability of American aeroplane manufacturers to make deliveries of contracted machines under the pressure of rush orders from the allied governments. It was said that orders given American aeroplane manufacturers for deliveries a year ago have not yet been filled.

Finally, the Navy Department decided to undertake the task of building a superlatively efficient battle aeroplane, and experts connected with the bureau of engineering and the bureau of construction and repair were called in for this purpose. The machine is being built at the Washington navy yard. It is understood that the bureau of engineering has invented a motor which surpasses anything yet seen in aircraft. The bureau of construction and repair has incorporated several inovations in the way of offensive details which will make the new machine superior as a fighting unit to anything now flying. It will be constructed in sections, so arranged as to make assembling simple.

GERMAN EMPLOYERS CARE FOR FAMILIES OF EMPLOYES

Berlin.—The care manufacturers are taking of their former employes now at the front and of their wives and children, is shown in the correspondence of the Central Office for the Welfare of the People. This correspondence shows that German municipal chambers of commerce are passing resolutions binding on all their members for aid of this sort. Where there is no concerted action, the individual manufacturers are doing the best they can to alleviate suffering.

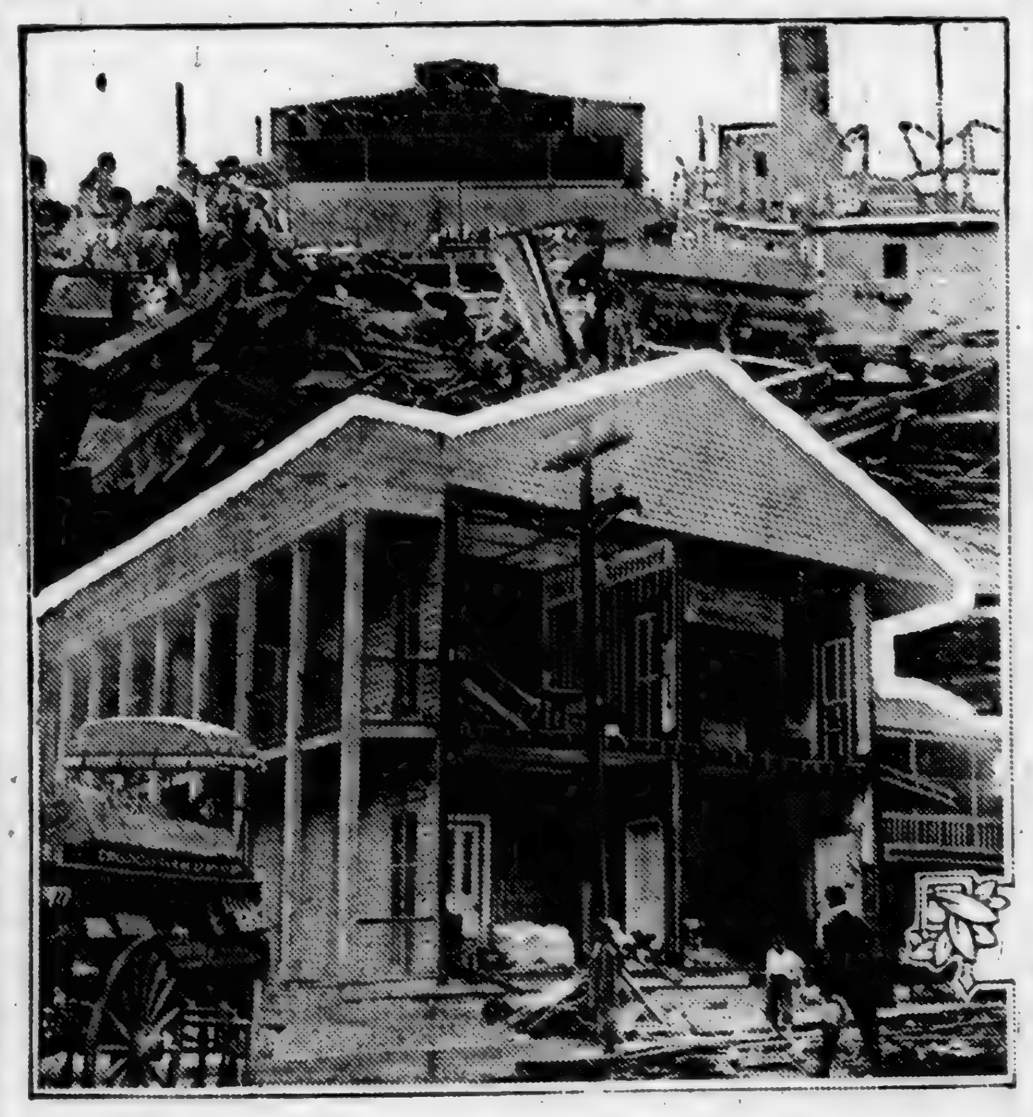
Magazines have been started to keep the men abreast with the improvements being made in their line of work, so that on their return to work they will not be handicapped.

For the support of the women and children of soldiers, several of the chambers of commerce of large cities use this system: The wife is paid 25 per cent of the total wage received by the husband before the war, and each of the children 6 per cent, the total not to exceed 50 per cent. These payments are made by the individual manufacturers, under a vote of the chamber to which they belong.

In Hildesheim, the "quit" system is being used. According to this system, the money given out depends on the age of the recipient. A woman receives a minimum of 60 pfennings a day (about 15 cents). A man gets 70 pfennings (about 17 cents). An infant of one year gets 20 pfennings, and 10 per cent is added for each year. Thus, children of 14 receive as much as their mothers. All this is in addition to purely government and municipal aid.

Little girls' dresses are smocked even more than hitherto.

GULF COAST STILL DAZED BY STORM.



Over thirty were killed as a storm swept over New Orleans and vicinity, and millions of dollars' worth of damage was done. Wreckage in New Orleans is shown here.

ALL AROUND THE FARM

Every farm should be named. Every farmer ought have a printed letterhead and return envelopes.

"Tell us how to get winter eggs and we will rise up and call you blessed." This sentence is in a letter received from a woman poultry owner.

The failure to get eggs in winter, when they are high priced, is a common experience, and it is one of the bad phases of the poultry business. Experts who have brought their hens up to a profitable basis are getting eggs most of the year, and what a few have done many more can do. It is not a matter of luck at all. A regular system of management must be followed.

Any general-purpose breed, or any of the small egg producing breeds, will answer the requirements of the average poultry owner. In view of the importance of marketing a certain proportion of poultry meat every season it may be best to adopt one of the medium-sized breeds, such as Plymouth Rock, Wyandotte, Orpington or Rhode Island Reds. It is worth keeping in mind that in all the great egg-laying contests in recent years these fowls have more than held their own with the Leghorns. Whatever the stock decided on, it is best to work toward full-blooded poultry.

Select eggs for hatching from chickens of high productive capacity, and hatch in March. Then select pullets to the desired number for the following winter and give some attention all summer to their condition. Keep only vigorous, healthy chickens. Make them keep up a steady growth. These will be the best winter layers, starting their regular production when five or six months old. Hens a year older will rank next. Do not keep hens more than two winters unless they are superior for breeding purposes. They will not produce many eggs, compared to pullets, but if they have been great producers it is well to retain a few of them for a couple of years longer.

Nothing new can be said about the manner of housing poultry. The buildings must be dry and clean, well ventilated and free from drafts. Open front houses give the best ventilation. A floor can be made dry without great expense. It is a good plan to fill in the foundation with small stones and gravel to insure drainage. This can be covered with earth or cement. Board floors are favored by some owners.

One of the first points in cleanliness is to have a feding room separate from the roosting quarters. Nests are better in the feeding room than close to the roosts. To have any success worth while the premises must be kept free from vermin. This is not difficult, but it requires persistent effort and watchfulness. Anybody who will not give heed to this injunction should keep out of the poultry business.

The principles which govern feeding are no less important than the others, but fortunately it is not necessary to have a great proportion of the higher-priced grains. One great essential is variety. One gets a balance ration most suitable for egg production by providing a regular supply of green food to go with dry material through the winter months. It is easy to provide sprouted oats cabbage, or beets. It is also necessary and easy to keep the chickens supplied with meat scrap and ground bone.

Taking one season with another no grains are cheaper than corn and oats, but it is best to have the oats clipped or ground and the corn cracked. Where a certain amount of green feed is regularly supplied it is hardly necessary to give wet mashes. A dry mash fed in hoppers is preferable. At the same time, a warm mash of moistened bran and shorts is not a bad thing on a cold day. A small supply of skim milk improves the poultry house diet and is cheap. The stale bread and crackers otbainable at restaurants and bakeries costs little, and to some extent takes the place of grain. Clean water and grit should be within reach at all times. Charcoal and oyster shell are excellent articles for poultry.

It is best to have a clean scratching floor for chickens, and every morning the fowls should be required to scratch in a litter of straw or chaff for wheat, corn, sunflower seeds and such things. This gives wholesome exercise. See that the laying hens are not too fat, but they must be kept vigorous and hearty.

In supplying feed according to these suggestions one can not go far astray. Scrap meat or ground bone need not be given oftener than three times a week. Otherwise about the only rule to be observed is to see that the fowls clean up all the food that is supplied. Sometimes it is wise still further to vary the diet by putting in linseed oil meal, cotton seed meal or buckwheat, and cutting down the meat and bone.

NAVY GUNS SHOW GREAT ADVANCE

AMERICAN 14-IN. WEAPON EQUAL TO EUROPEAN 15-IN., SAYS REAR ADMIRAL STRAUSS

SUBMARINE GUN BIG SUCCESS

New 14-Inch Anti-Aircraft Weapon Passes Test—Destroyers to be Fitted for Mine Sweeping

Washington, D. C.—The new United States 14-inch naval guns are the equal in every respect of the 15-inch guns that comprise the main batteries of new British battleships of the superdreadnaught type, while they have the advantage of a flatter trajectory and of a greater volume of fire. According to the annual report of the Rear Admiral Joseph Strauss, chief of the Bureau of Ordinance of the Navy, who also states that a new 4-inch anti-aircraft gun, designed by ordnance officers has proved a great success, and that the new 3-inch submarine gun has been tested and found to be a splendid weapon.

In part, the report says:

"With the object of keeping pace with the increased range of modern naval warfare, the bureau has increased the power of the 14-inch guns for the California, Mississippi and Idaho by increasing the length of the gun to 50 calibers and enlarging its chamber capacity. In order that these latest additions to the navy should carry the highest type of artillery, the bureau took the bold step of ordering their guns without manufacturing a trial gun.

"The bureau's confidence in its design has been fully justified. The first gun proved not only gave the desired velocity and pressure exactly, but its additional longitudinal strength which has been provided for has resulted in these guns having less droop than any guns of large caliber heretofore produced. As it stands these guns, although of lesser caliber and weight than the 15 inch guns now mounted abroad are capable of penetrating the heaviest side armor at oblique impacts and at the greatest effective battle range, and give us the advantage of flatter trajectory, with greater volume of fire, due to the increased number that we are permitted to mount on any ship of equal displacement. In August last, a type 16 inch gun of 50 calibers length was tested. This gun fulfilled the highest expectations of its design, and the bureau believes it to be as powerful a gun as is in existence today.

"Preparation of anti-aircraft guns likewise has proceeded. The bureau has designed and built a 4 inch 50 caliber anti-aircraft gun and mount. It has been proved and found to be highly satisfactory. Three inch 50 caliber anti-aircraft guns and mounts are being manufactured for the battleships."

The report states that the increase of 700,000 pounds in the total output of new powder during the fiscal year 1915 over that produced in the fiscal year 1914 was due in most part to improved methods of operation, and not to factory increase, while the facilities for the producing of smokeless powder and other explosives have been enormously increased as a result of the demands of European beligerants. The report goes on:

"It has taken many months of time and enormous expenditures of money to develop these facilities, and their conservation for the benefit of the United States Government in time of war is a problem which will require the most careful consideration of the department when the European war is over and the present demand from abroad has ceased."

Plans have been prepared and insructions issued, says admiral Strauss for the mobilization at various navy yards of all guns loaned to naval militia organizations, exclusive of guns mounted on vessels loaned to the civilian service. The reason for the recall of the guns is to make these guns available for mounting on merchant vessels with the least possible delay, should that necessity ever arise.

It is also stated that all destroyers are being fitted for mine sweeping and that a list of steam fishing vessels of over 100 tons has been prepared and arrangements made for their inspection with a view to their utilization as mine sweepers in the event of war, and that recommendations have been made and approved that six gunboats be fitted for mine sweeping work.

MUST LEARN EARTH IS ROUND

Amish Girl Ordered to School Despite Father's Creed.

Chadron, O.—Despite the fact that her father countrymen believed the world to be flat, Mary Miller, a Middlefield Amish girl, must go to school and learn the contrary.

This was the decision of Justice Brigden at Middlefield after a bitterly fought suit to compel Joe Miller, her father, to send the girl to school.

Justice Brigden decided the case in favor of the state and fined Miller $5 and costs. Motion was made for a new hearing. Middlefield Amishmen will back Miller in fighting the case.

"DOCTOR SAM" LIVES ALL ALONE ON FARM; HAPPY!

His Little Home Contains Many Articles that Hark Back to Days of the Stage Coach.

Windsor, Vt.—The day of the alchemist on the back streets of the cities are probably gone, but the unusual continues to keep abreast of its record in the country districts. Living alone on the farm where he was born 60 years ago at least, in Hartland, Vt., is Dr. Samuel Eugene Stevens, known generally as Dr. Sam, who works in a little printing office where he writes his books and sets them into type.

The doctor never served an apprenticeship to the printer's trade but he is a very careful compositor and better than the average man on the job press, so that the work turned out by him would pass as that of a finished craftsman. The doctor says he enjoys this pastime the best of anything that he has attempted since he retired from the practice of medicine about ten years ago.

The little farmhouse where he lives alone in the summer has many articles that hark back to the days of the stage coach. The old melodeon which has been in the family for many years occupies a prominent place in the household furniture. Yet there is a modern piano there upon which the aged doctor printer plays to while away the loneliness.

The once well tilled farm of his antecedents no longer shows the touch of the plow. It is all meadow land now but looks all the more in harmony with the spirit of leaving nature alone that seems to pervade the surroundings of this cloistered spot. Dr. Stevens has had a varied experience as all have had who at the close of a busy life seek such removed places and pass the evening of their life in contemplation.

It is the metaphysical that interests this retired doctor now. He completed a book in the year 1908 called the "Philosophy of the Great Unconscious" The title would mislead the average person, but the text shows that the writer has an intimate knowledge with the works of Darwin, Huxley and other scientists. The title of the book that the doctor is now writing is called "The Economy of Misery."

Dr. Stevens is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania in the class of 1871, practiced in Vermont and in Iowa, and is still a registered pharmacist. The doctor says medicine is a more or less uncertain science. He advises people to avoid doctors because, as he puts it, it is a great thing to be able to die a natural death.

The old home farm where this man lives has been christened as "Spring Lodge." Perhaps it gets its name from the spring water that is a short way from the house. The water in this spring is cold all the year round. It was on a hot day that the correspondent visited the place, and the taste of spring water at that time was a good one to test its virtue.

Dr. Stevens never married to which fact he attributes his ability as a housekeeper and cook. He can cook skilfully and his house betrays no sign of masculine negligent." He is happy in the unique work he is doing, and, he observes where a person has found happiness, what more can he ask?

WRITER OF FATHER BALLAD IS DEAD

Fred Helf Told of Everybody Working but My Old Man.

New York—J. Fred Helf, popular song writer is dead.

For almost a quarter of a century Helf's songs written in ballad form, were sung the country over.

"Someone Thinks of Someone," "When the Whip-poor-will Sings, Marguerite," "How Would You Like to Be the Ice Man?" "In the House of Too Much Trouble" and "The Barber Shop Chord" enjoyed a popularity seldom equaled.

Another Helf song, "Everybody Works but Father," was translated into many languages and sung both in Europe and America. As a result "Father" was postcarded, musical comedied, statuetted and as another result Mr. Helf's bank balance was swelled to generous proportions, and "father" songs of every conceivable description flooded the music stalls.

The chorus of the song occasionally still finds its way into vaudeville programs:

Everybody works but father,
He sits around all day,
His feet in front of the fire,
Smoking his pipe of clay;
Mother takes in washing,
So does sister Ann,
Everybody works at our house
But my old man.

Helf's songs ran the range from humor to pathos. "When You Know You're Not Forgotten by the Girl You Can't Forget" made a wholly different appeal from that of "Everybody Works but Father," yet its success was almost as great. This is the chorus:

When you know you're not forgotten
By the girl you can't forget;
When you find the one you're thinking of
Is dreaming of you yet,
Around your heart a feeling stealing
Comes to drive away regret,
When you know you're not forgotten
By the girl you can't forget.

Mr. Helf died at Liberty, N. Y. following an operation. He was born in Maysville, Ky., 44 years ago.

Some music is given out by the choir but the drummer dispenses it by the pound.

BLIND MEN LEARN SALESMANSHIP

WASHINGTON CLASS MAKES PROGRESS WITH THIS, AS WELL AS ADVERTISING

OPENS A NEW BUSINESS FIELD

Brooklyn Association for Improving Condition of the Poor Encouraged.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—With eyes sightless, but with mental perception abnormally keen, a group of 15 earnest young men are undertaking the study of advertising and salesmanship. Each Saturday afternoon the members of this unique class gather in a room on the third floor of the building at 104 Livingston street, occupied by the Brooklyn Association for Improving the condition of the poor.

A short time ago Charles B. Hayes, director of the work for the blind division of the association, hit upon a plan whereby the adult blind who have reached an academic stage in their education could become useful and independent members of society by entering branches of the trades and professions wherein lack of eyesight would not prove unsurmountable obstacle.

The experiment was first tried with a class in advanced typewriting, specializing in the transcription of court testimony by means of the dictaphone. Three graduates of the first class have already secured good positions with court stenographers who have found their services extremely satisfactory. The success of the first effort encouraged Mr. Hayes to establish a class in advertising and salesmanship.

Guy Hubbart, who volunteered to devote himself to the work and give up his Saturday afternoons for the benefit of the blind students, is a man well qualified for the task. He is both a practical advertising man and an experienced teacher of advertising and selling. Besides being connected with the staff of The Dry Goods Economist, a trade publication, Mr. Hubbart has for the past four years successfully conducted courses in advertising and salesmanship at Columbia.

During the first few weeks the members of the class have shown remarkable progress and Mr. Hubbart justly prides himself on their accomplishments thus far. He assured a reporter that much dormant talent had been discovered and that it was only a matter of a short time before the effects of the students at preparing advertising copy could be presented as models for that kind of work

The method of instruction differs but slightly from that pursued in an ordinary class. The students hear weekly lectures and individual assignments are given for preparation during the interval between sessions. This includes the preparation of advertising copy, which the members write on the typewriter, most of them being adepts at the touch system of operation.

No tuition fees are charged to members of the class residing within this borough. The class has grown rapidly and Mr. Hayes predicts it will be a matter of only a short time before a permanent institution for the education of the blind to the higher fields of endeavor will be established in Brooklyn.

Representatives of the Teachers College at Columbia have followed the movement very closely and promised their active aid in carrying on the work. It is expected that shortly the services of one of the professors of that institution will be secured in connection with the organization of a class in advanced English for the blind.

The class in advertising and salesmanship is the first of its kind in this country.

FIRE GONG SAVES PIGGIE

Firemen Sent to Capture Animal Hear Clang and With Duty Calling Give Up the Chase.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Ed Welch and Arthur Spotswood, pipemen at Station No. 11, still enjoy a semblance of a reputation as foot racers. They enjoy it yet because they have a good alibi for not catching the pig.

To start at the beginning so the pig can be identified, be it said that the pig was a prize pig. He was won in some sort of a contest and was healthy enough to break out of his pen near the owner's home.

The owner was a woman and she called up the fire station and sent an alarm of pigs astray.

Welch and Spotswood had outdone the speedy track athletes of the St. Paul fire department and were detailed to catch the pig.

The pig gave them an awful chase. It turned into a hurdle race because the pig turned under several fences. The fireman had just got the porcine fugitive in a corner and were closing in for the capture when they heard a fire gong. They had to let the pig go and answer the fire alarm from the De La Salle Institute. The pig is still at large.

Trouble never disappoints the chap who is looking for it.

The bas-relief portrays the German officer putting our soldiers through their paces.

SHARKS BITE? THEY'RE AFRAID, HAWAIIANS CLAIM

Why, One Native Drummaker Actually Rides Astride of 'Em as He Slashes With Deadly Knife.

Honolulu, Hawaii—South Sea fishermen have branded the shark story as a myth, made up by authors of adventure stories.

They say there is no such thing as a man eating shark.

There is "Dudie" Miller for instance. Every one in the South Pacific knows "Dudie" Miller of Honolulu.

Recently he dangled naked in the tide, hanging in a life preserver in 100 fathoms of water, spearing fish. A 14 foot shark began circling him, attracted by dead fish the man carried in a sack strapped to his waist.

"I want to show you something," said Miller, summoning two canoemen.

They watched the man eater sweep around the fisherman poised in his life belt.

"Dudie" merely laughed. The canoemen lifted him from the water and deposited him again 100 yards away. And there the fisherman and the shark hobnobbled all afternoon.

Kahia Moe, maker of Hula drums, is another of these myth shatterers.

Kahia Moe, a native Hawaiian, stretches shark skin across his far-famed dance drums. And to make them properly resonant, as well as to consecrate them fittingly, the shark, "must be slain in mortal combat," he maintains.

And so Kahia Moe kills his shark in the water, with a knife, slitting the pallid belly with a dexterious slash. He has dispatched hundreds of this kind of "mortal combat." And he speaks of them as cowards.

David Mahu is an expert killer. When the water is low he leaps into the Pakule and rides sharks, straddling them with his naked limbs.

"Shark attack living men?" chuckles David Mahu. "It is a joke! They are even afraid to bite a dead horse until they're almost gone with hunger!"

HIT BY FIVE BULLETS

Leaden Pellets From Revolver Strike His Breast But Leave Only Slight Bruises.

Atlanta, Ga.—A. W. Villard, 33 years old, signal operator of engine house No. 1, is apparently bullet proof. This was most convincingly demonstrated when W. S. Bacon, Jr., 36 years old, want ad manager of an Atlanta paper, fired five 32 caliber bullets into Villard from a revolver held a few inches from his body.

The shooting occurred in the Empire Life building, where Villard said he found Bacon in an office with Mrs. Villard, his wife, from whom the fireman had been separated for some time.

When Bacon started shooting at Villard, the latter was very close to the gun. Bacon fired at Villard's chest; the latter, said Bacon, instead of dropping to the floor, cursed him; Bacon fired again, and he said, Villard cursed him again. This performance was repeated five times.

Then Bacon stood with the smoking, empty revolver in his hand, while Villard, somewhat dazed and confused from loud noise of the gun and the thumping shock of the five leaden pellets striking against his chest, reached down and picked up two of the bullets which hit him.

Later Villard picked out the other three bullets from against his skin, where they lodged harmlessly, leaving nothing more serious than blue bruises.

The police could not assign any reason for the bullets not taking fatal effect upon Villard, except that at the time Villard was wearing a heavy coat and overcoat.

Mrs. Villard, her husband declared, formerly worked for Bacon as a stenographer, and for about a year had been "going with" Bacon. For a long time Villard and wife have been living apart. He said he began to suspect recently that she was still going with Bacon. So, on the afternoon of the shooting he followed Bacon to the Empire Life Building, and then up into the building and to an office of a friend of Bacon's, where the shooting occurred.

OLD HEN ISLAND WASHED OUT

PILOT'S MARK FOR HALF CENTURY CARRIED AWAY BY MISSISSIPPI CURRENT

WAS CREATED IN SINGLE NIGHT

Old Land Plot Closely Allied With History of Memphis, Tenn.

Memphis, Tenn.—"Old Hen island," that has been a pilot's mark on the Mississippi River for half a century, and closely allied with the history of Memphis is no more.

Only one of the "Old Hen's" little chickens remains. It is fast washing away. United States engineers say in a few months that "chick" will be gone and the history of "Old Hen and Little Chickens" will be written in memories.

"Old Hen Island came into existence by a prank of the mighty Mississippi River. It was created in a single night 50 years ago, when the river took a sudden notion to pull away from its old bed and dig out a new entrance into Memphis Harbor. The swift current cut around several points of sandy land, washing out new bayous until several little islands were formed. They were so grouped about one big island that river men named them the "Old Hen and Little Chickens."

In days when flatboats brought great loads of produce to the South "Old Hen" was a safe harbor for them. It weathered many a craft on stormy nights and sheltered more than one shanty boat whose owner came into Memphis of nights, committed depredations and after creeping back to his shelter, cut the ropes and floated away in safety.

A tragedy that smacked with a love romance was discovered near its head several years ago. Capt. Billy Hodge, in command of the steamer Kate Adams was a cub pilot then on the Anchor line steamer City of Baton Rouge.

"We were coming into Memphis," he said, in speaking of the tragedy. "The first streaks of day were breaking in the east. Our big boat was running like a scared wolf, for she was six hours late.

"As we rounded the point furtherest west from the head of "Old Hen Island," someone hailed us. I was on watch. We rang for the engineer to slow down, and there stepped from a clump of bushes a slip of a girl not over 12 years old.

"Capt. Horace Bixby was in command of the Baton Rouge. He ordered us to land, and when we got the girl on board she told us how a man had followed her mother and father from Lake Itasca and finally murdered them. She escaped by running.

"From the little girl's story, her father had married a former sweetheart of the murderer, who had tramped the country on their trail for 10 years, and finally got his revenge by shooting the man and the woman, then dumping their bodies into the river. He crossed the river in a skiff and so far as I know was never arrested."

Old Hen Island was a splendid landing for coal boats a few years ago. The channel ran on its west bank until 1911, when it cut through, and steamboats deserted the old route in 1912. Now the sandbar is connected with the main Arkansas shore, and the mouth of the chute is filling, just as Frame's chute had filled, and cut off all the Old Hen's Little Chickens.

GETS NEEDLES FROM PATIENT

Doctor Finally Solves Mystery of Woman's Illness.

Seneca Falls, N. Y.—After baffling all the skilled physicians for six weeks, Dr. Fred Lester of Seneca Falls has cleared up the mysterious illness of Mrs. Homer Wyer by removing five sewing needles from her left side. Seven more needles are known to be somewhere in Mrs. Wyer's body. They will be removed by the aid of electricity.

Six weeks ago Mrs. Wyer accidentally swallowed a paper of needles which she placed in her mouth in order to take care of her baby. Nothing more was thought of the incident. A week later she was taken ill and complained of severe pains in her left side. It was diagnosed as pleurisy at first, but this theory was later given up and her condition baffled all physicians that were called.

An examination by Dr. Lester disclosed the points of two needles protruding thru the skin on her left side, which recalled to Mrs. Wyer the swallowing of the paper of needles. The physician removed in all five needles and the remainder will be extracted by the aid of strong magnetic current.

In Society

The Ladies of the M. P. Aid society royally entertained their husbands at a Washington-Lincoln reception at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred B. Leighty on Friday night, February 11. The rooms were tastefully decorated with flags and hearts for the occasion. The social committee had charge of the evening and a special program was arranged in honor of the two natal days which was given as follows:

Song, America; Prayer; Paper, February Holidays, Mrs. Buchanan; Reading, Lincoln, Mrs. Ethel Cheek; Piano Duett, Flossie Widney and Lora Leighty; Items of interest about Washington, Mrs. Etha Jackson; Roll call to which eighteen members responded with Patriotic quotations. The names of Mrs. Flossie Widney and Mrs. Clara Shaffer were added to the list since the last meeting A very pleasant social hour was enjoyed by all, after which an appetizing two course luncheon was served which consisted of sandwiches, pressed chicken, French pea salad, pickles and coffee. Fruit salad, cake and almonds in baskets.

Below we reproduce the Paper on February Holidays.

By Mrs. Mary Buchanan

To you the truth is very clear,
February the shortest month of all the year,
But many days we celebrate,
The first is small, the others great.

What comes the first I cannot say,
But the second comes on Ground-Hog Day,
Comes forth, sees shadow, then retires,
To longer jaunts no more aspires.

The snow drifts high, March winds are nigh
And tempers every blast,
The heavy fog brings out Ground-Hog,
Here's bright warm Spring at last.

It is a delightful little old folklone story which makes a weather prophet of the woodchuck or ground hog as he is more popularly called. Early in the autumn the woodchuck goes to sleep in his winter quarters. He curls himself up in a little ball, with his nose under his paws so that he can keep his toes warm by breathing on them. Here he sleeps snugly all winter, and then, so the story goes, wakens up suddenly on Feb. 2nd., stretches himself and at last creeps out of his cosy nest to see what it looks like out doors. If he finds it cold and wet, the earth covered with snow, and heavy gray clouds; he feels certain, that soon the ground will be warm and the violets will wake-up and rub their eyes. But if the sun is shining brightly and he sees his own shadow the first thing after leaving his burrow, he settles down for another six weeks nap—which means a cold, wet season. This little weather prophet doesn't always hit it just right, but neither does the weather bureau, for that matter. It's a pretty tradition anyway, February is replete with special days and all such notable ones that any entertainment during these four weeks may have symbolic favors and be full of historical interest.

First comes the natal day of Abraham Lincoln on the 12th. So all are familiar with the history of Lincoln in his boyhood days as a young man, as a lawyer and as president—I believe I will refer briefly to the humorous side of his life. He was always ignored as an humorist because he was always taken at his word. He used to say, "I am not a manufacturer, but a retailer of stories". Yet as a retailer of jokes he unconsciouly, became a prince in literature. In his keen admiration of the would-be humorous writings that were then the fad, Lincoln never dreamed that the stories he was telling to ease the friction and amuse the people he met daily would be told over and over long after he only lived in the memory of the people. Another factor has entered into the neglect of Lincoln as a wit and humorist Many of the stories to him—some of them impure and lacking in wit were never told by him. He could not have moved the world with his long story-lever, if he had not been "Honest Abe" in his fun as well as in his sober dealings of life. One of his stories will suffice to illustrate his ability of story telling. He once replied to a deputation asking him to change the entire cabinet because he had retired General Cameron from the war department. "Gentlemen, your request reminds me of a story I once heard in Illinois of a farmer who was much troubled with skunks One moonlight night he loaded his old shot gun and stationed himself in the back yard to watch for the intruders. After some time his wife heard the gun go off and soon the farmer entered the house What luck had you, his wife asked. He said I hid behind the woodpile and before long there appeared not one skunk but seven. I killed one and there was such an awful odor raised that I let the other six go. Those senators saw the point at once and nothing more was said of cabinet reconstruction.

The next holiday is February 14, St. Valentines Day. Perhaps no one day in all the year gives itself over to pleasures of lovers and youth as St. Valentines Day. There is nothing solemn, nothing serious, but abound in rich and pretty sentiment. Its origin is veiled in obscurity. Good old St. Valentine was martyred in the third century and there is nothing in his life to indicate why his birthday was chosen as the festive day for the little god, love. Endless changes are wrung from the time honored symbols of the day and cupids, hearts, roses, birds and ribbons have become mixed up with St Valentine. The day has been one of the giving and receiving of love tokens since the ancient custom was established. Shakespeare says—

Muse, bid the morn awake,
Sad winter now declines,
Here's Cupid with his bow and darts,
This day's St. Valentine.

Last but not least of the great events that occur in February is the birth of George Washington on the twenty-second 1762, died 1799, was president of the United States from 1789 to 1797. It has been said of him—"Just honor to Washington can only be rendered by observing his precepts and imitating his example." In the life of every great man there are many little incidents that bear testimony to his greatness, but which, in the turmoil and excitement of passing events, frequently are forgotten. It is these little kindnesses, these seemingly trivial acts, that trace the outline of character. As this is true of other men, so is it true of Washington. There was that about him that commanded reverence and respect, and his whole life despite the hardships and deprivations caused by the revolutionary period, was filled with the love of virtue and integrity. When he stood by the bedside of the dying Rall, the enemy he had previously defeated, the spirit of victory was forgotten and the Christian man bowed his head in sympathy for the Hessian commander who lay gasping in the throes of death, Washington said, "Without virtue and integrity, the finest talents and most brilliant accomplishments can never gain the respect and esteem of the truly valuble part of mankind." These words were a part of his life's creed. He lived them in his home, upon the battlefield, everywhere. The greatest tribute the world can offer is that the world is better for his having lived.

Crook is Captured at last

Charged with having robbed Frank Griffith, of Atwood, Ind., of $60 and a watch, Ivan C. North, twenty-three years old, an ex-convict of the Jeffersonville reformatory, was arrested Friday afternoon by Detective Sergeant William F. Pappert. To the latter's great surprise a search of North's person revealed one of the biggest revolvers seen at headquarters in some time. "That's no gun. It's a cannon," remarked the detective as he picked up the weapon, a .44 calibre Smith & Wesson with a barrel which looked like a boiler flue. The gun was confiscated, and the charge of carrying concealed weapons was held over for the time being, as North made a complete confession when he saw that Detective Sergeant Pappert, by clever work, had trapped him.

Nortn had Griffith's pocket book containing $23 on him when arrested. He said he had given his wife some money but didn't know how much. She resides on Baker street. North told her he had captured a parole violator and the money he had received represented the reward. To the police he stated that he had purchased the revolver as he expected to go into the business of ferreting out reformatory parole violators or the rewards there were in it.

North met Griffith and the two struck up an acquaintance after they had had several drinks together. After Griffith was well under the influence of liquor North took his victim to 127 East Columbia street, robbed him, and left him lying in a hall way asleep after the landlady had refused them admittance. North was located at the Anthony hotel, where he was employed in the kitchen. A charge of grand larceny has been entered against him.—Ft. Wayne Journal-Gazette.

Insults to Every Voter

"Well, you voted for graft! What are you kickin' about?" was the reply of a certain politician when graft was condemned. How nice. When you object to being robbed or ask justice, to be slapped in the face by the dirty bunch of political cut-throats you helped elect, expecting justice. They now have plans for years ahead to elect more friends and relatives and grab more of your money.

AGAIN—I told a certain politician that if I became sheriff, law would be enforced. He replied, as a friend, "For that very reason, you will not be elected." People said saloons couldn't be ousted but,—this ring is worse than forty saloons. Another said,—"You can't do it alone." I don't consider I am alone when bankers, merchants, farmers and even good Democratic candidates for other offices and hundred of men of all parties are voluntarily working for me, because they are victims of this gang of pimps, smitches, brothel keepers and frequenters, blind tiger operators, moral degenerates, social lepers and well dressed bums; some so rotten with uumentionable diseases at times as to be a public menace and ordered out of public toilets. I know what I say. I've more than that on this ring of prostitutes, friends and they better lay low. This is no bluff. I'm loaded and ready. Many people credit them with great power. They have the power of gall and their own few votes. No more. Mostly gall. They ruled because people believed they were some pumpkins or stayed at home at voting time. I am reliably informed that candidates nominated this year will have their past record published, by a committee already appointed, and see that every voter gets it. Some record. One man offered $100.00 to help. The truth will be fearlessly given no matter how bad.

ANOTHER INSULT. Officials have been pretending that citizens must swear out a warrant to get an arrest or stop crime. Not much. All you need do is notify officials and if they don't act you can get them for the neglect of duty.

THE KITCHEN

Rye Griddle Cakes.

Materials—Two cupfuls rye flour, 1 cupful entire wheat flour, 3 teaspoonfuls baking powder, 1 teaspoonful salt, 2 eggs, 1 pint milk.

Directions—Sift together the two ingredients, salt and baking powder; add the milk and then the eggs well beaten. Beat thoroughly and cook at once on a hot, lightly greased griddle.

Creamed Eggs.

Boil six eggs twenty minutes. Make 1 pint of cream sauce. Have six slices of toast on a hot dish, put a layer of sauce on each one and then part of the whites of the eggs cut in strips. Rub part of the yolks through a sieve on the toast. Repeat this and finish with a layer of sauce. Place in the oven for about three minutes. Garnish with parsley and serve.

Black Bean Soup.

Materials—One cupful black beans, 1 1-2 tablespoonfuls drippings, 1-2 onion, 1-2 lemon, 1 quart stock or water, 1 stalk celery, 1 hard-cooked egg, 3-4 tablespoonful flour, 2 cloves, 1-2 tablespoonful Worcestershire sauce, salt, pepper, red pepper and mustard to taste.

Directions—Wash beans and soak overnight; in morning drain, cover with boiling water and boil thirty minutes; drain, throwing away water. Slice onion, dice celery and cook five minutes in half of drippings in soup pot; add beans, stock or water and cloves. Simmer until beans are soft. Add more water as stock or water boils away. Rub through sieve, add remaining drippings and flour rubbed together, then heat to boiling point, add seasonings. Cut lemon in thin slices, removing seeds, and cut eggs in thin slices. Put them into a hot soup tureen and strain soup over them.

Grilled Sweet Potatoes.

Plan for these by baking a sufficient quantity of potatoes on Sunday to have some left over. Peel, cut in rather thick slices, brush over with lard or butter and grill under the gas flame or over the fire, according to the fuel which is being used.

Fruit Pancakes.

Materials—One cupful cooked fruit—peaches, apricots, apples; 1 egg, flavoring to suit fruit, 1 cupful flour, 1 teaspoonful baking powder, 1 cupful fruit juice or water, sugar to taste, butter or marmalade, lemon rind.

Directions—Pass the fruit through a sieve, add the egg, flavoring, flour, baking powder and fruit juice or water, also sugar to taste. Cook as pancakes. Spread with butter or with marmalade. Roll up, sift sugar and lemon rind over and serve hot.

Au Gratin Potatoes.

Materials — Two tablespoonfuls butter, 1 quart peeled and diced potatoes, 2 cupfuls milk, 1 tablespoonful flour, 1 cupful grated cheese, 1 teaspoonful salt, 1-4 teaspoonful white pepper, few breadcrumbs.

Directions—Cut potatoes in about 1 1-2 inch pieces, then boil carefully in boiling salted water. When done, drain and pour into buttered fireproof dish. Blend butter and flour in saucepan over fire, add milk, stir until boiling, then add cheese and seasonings. Pour over potatoes; grate a little cheese over the top, sprinkle with breadcrumbs and bake five minutes in hot oven.

Baked Eggs With Cheese.

Directions—Make a cream sauce, season and pour half into a baking dish. Break in the eggs; stir the cheese into remaining sauce. Pour over the top and bake standing the dish in another containing hot water. Bake twelve minutes. Individual dishes are nice.

Macaroni Soup.

Cook down the bones of the roast beef which have been chopped small, with an onion, a carrot, a bunch of sweet herbs, a little celery and any other vegetable obtainable, with the exception of turnip. Strain through a sieve, thicken with a little cornstarch and cover with caramel. Add a beef cube or a little beef extract to this stock to give it a richer flavor, season highly and cook in it about 2 ounces of macaroni broken into very small pieces.

Baked Stuffed Eggplant.

Materials — One eggplant, cold cooked meat, breadcrumbs, seasonings and flavorings.

Directions—Parboil the eggplant, whole, then cut it into halves, scoop out most of the flesh, mash or chop this finely and add to it minced cold meat together with half as much breadcrumbs as you have meat. Season with a little stock or gravy, fill the shells of the eggplant with the mixture, dot with butter or drippings and bake half an hour in a moderately hot oven.

Colonial Rice Pudding.

Materials—Two cupfuls cold boiled rice, 1-4 teaspoonful vanilla, 1-2 cupful cream, 1 cupful apple sauce.

Directions—Sweeten the cream as liked, add the vanilla and a very little salt and whip it. Mix this with the rice and place in a pudding dish in alternate layers with the apple sauce, having rice on top. Serve cold.

Baked Corn and Peppers.

Materials—One can corn, 1-2 can peppers (chopped), salt, pepper, butter, buttered crumbs.

Directions — Blend all except crumbs. Turn into individual bakers nd cover with buttered crumbs. Bake half an hour.

Walnut Custard Pie.

Materials—Two eggs, a scant half cupful sugar, salt, 2 cupfuls hot milk, 1-2 teaspoonful vanilla, 1-2 cupful finely ground English walnuts or pecans and almonds.

Directions—Beat the eggs, add the sugar and salt, pour on the hot milk, strain and add the vanilla and nuts. The nuts will rise to the top and form a tender crust to the custard. Bake in one crust.

Corn Muffins.

Materials — One cupful flour, 2 tablespoonfuls butter, 1 cupful yellow cornmeal, 3 tablespoonfuls sugar, 1 cupful milk, 2 eggs, 1 teaspoonful salt, 3 teaspoonfuls baking powder.

Directions—Cream the butter and sugar thoroughly together, add the eggs, well-beaten, and milk. Then turn in slowly the dry ingredients which have been sifted together three times. Divide into greased gem pans and bake in a moderately hot oven twenty-five minutes. Sufficient for 12 muffins.

Toad-in-a-Hole.

Materials—One cupful flour, 1 egg, 1 rounding teaspoonful baking powder, 1-3 teaspoonful salt, milk to moisten, sausages or lamb's kidney's.

Directions—Sift together the flour, salt and baking powder, add the egg and the milk, using enough of the latter to make, a rather stiff batter. Turn into a well-greased baking pan or biscuit pan. Parboil the sausages or kidneys, whichever are being used; cut these in halves lengthwise and lay them in among the batter. Bake about twenty-five minutes. Serve with or without gravy.

Beef Olives.

Materials — Two pounds round steak cut thin, 1-4 pound salt pork, 4 tablespoonfuls powdered crackers or stale bread, 1 teaspoonful sage, 1-2 teaspoonful summer savory, pepper and salt.

Directions—Mix crackers, sage and other seasonings. Cut the meat into small strips, two or three inches wide and four inches long. Spread the mixture on the strips, roll up and tie with twine. Fry the pork and into the hot fat put the olives rolled in flour. Turn until slightly brown; take out and put into kettle. Into the fat left, put 4 tablespoonfuls flour. If not enough fat is left to thoroughly moisten the flour, add enough butter. Then pour in 1 1-2 quarts cold water, stirring all the time until it boils. Season with salt and pepper and strain over the olives. Cover and cook slowly four or five hours. Remove the twine before serving.

A FAVOR

Here is the way in which a very clever woman solved the favor problem for a luncheon which she planned rather hurriedly for a friend out of town. Because of illness and lack of help, she was kept rather closely tied to the house the week before the luncheon, and while she could order mostly anything she needed by phone she was dubious about favors which might not suit her at all.

Her heart had been set on small embroidered vanity bags, but she did not have time for that either. Then she remembered an extra set of madeira tumbler doilies, which did not match any other linen in her chest. Out came the doilies, and in scarcely no time the whole dozen had eyelets worked in them, ribbon run through and a ribbon-tied bit of cotton incased in them to show their use. They were greeted by "ohs" and "ahs" of appreciation on the day of the luncheon.

Sweaters will be as important during the coming summer as they were last year.

ALL AROUND THE FARM

Every farm should be named. Every farmer ought have a printed letterhead and return envelopes.

RUTABAGAS GROWN WITH CORN

We have found it quite profitable and very good practice to grow some rutabagas in a part of the corn field, preferably where the ground is fairly low and moist so that they will be reasonably sure to make a nice growth.

Five years ago I was on a little visit in a good farming district and it was pointed out plainly to me the value of rutabagas for the stock. At first I was a little doubtful whether it would really pay me to plant them among the corn, but after considering the matter more fully, I decided to give them a fair trial and planted about half an acre among the corn and half an acre out on the open ground.

The rutabagas on the open ground were a failure, due partly to a different kind of seed sown, as I wished to grow the best. Those sown in the corn were fine and of excellent quality.

Rutabagas are a good feed for hogs during the winter. We have found them very valauble as a feed for our brood sows since they are a succulent food, and therefore add greatly to the regular ration.

A great quantity of rutabagas can be grown among the corn each year and at a very small cost, without very little extra labor, and without extra ground.

A pound of good seed, sown under favorable conditions between the corn rows, will plant an acre at a cost of not over $1.50, this including labor and cost of seed.

There is no further work needed until fall, when they are matured and ready to be pulled and stored away somewhere for use during the winter months.

Beginning sometime in October we pull and top the rutabagas and store them away.

Light freezing will not hurt them while yet in the ground, but after they are pulled and topped they must be put somewhere so there is little danger of them freezing, as this will cause them to get soft and they will not be valuable as a feed.

If stored away in the proper manner they will keep in a good condition all winter and until late the following spring.

If the rutabagas grow very large, as they will if conditions are favorable, we cut and mash them up somewhat before feeding along with other grain.

Rutabagas are good for cattle also, and will take the place of silage where one has no silo.

Boiled and mashed up and mixed with other grain, rutabagas give good results with the chickens, and they are eaten with relish. My experience has been, however, confined to feeding them to the hogs and cattle, and with good results.

The variety we sow is somewhat similar to a turnip and white, and of a good size. We also use them in preference to the turnip for home consumption, as the meat is more fine and tender than that found in most varieties of turnips.—H. W. Swope, Danville, Pa.

CO-OPERATIVE CHERRY PICKING

High school girls from Milwaukee, clad in overalls, spent a part of their summer vacation picking cherries, gooseberries and currants in Door county, the little thumb of Wisconsin land which extends out into Lake Michigan.

Milwaukee teachers marketed the product and within another year hese same Milwaukee teachers expect to divide a profit on their venture, for the Peninsula Fruit Farm, near Sturgeon Bay, is a co-operative venture in which the majority of the seventy-odd stockholders are principals and teachers in the Milwaukee public schools.

By direct marketing and elimination of the middle man, these teachers expect to build up a demand for the entire product of their 240 acre fruit farm among their personal friends and acquaintances. By securing pickers from the Milwaukee schools and taking the entire camp from the city, another of the most serious problems of the brief fruit picking season seems fairly sure of satisfactory solution.

The idea of the Peninsula Fruit Farm originated with Thomas W. Boyce, principal of the Cass street school, Milwaukee, as the outgrowth of several summers spent in the summer resort country of Door county. His attention was attracted by the remarkable success of some experimental fruit orchards planted by experts from the University of Wisconsin and of commercial orchards which had followed the experimental ones.

He began studying the growing of cherries, apples and small fruits and the peculiar adaptability of soil and climate in Door county to the fruit industry. He talked it over with two of his most intimate friends, Principal E. L. Cooley, and Assistant Principal W. F. Siecker of the Central Continuation school, and four years ago these three men decided to organize a company. The result is the Peninsula Fruit Farm, incorporated at $50,000. There are over seventy stockholders, the majority of them school teachers, although there are a few business men and representatives of other professions than teaching. No stockholder has over a $3,000 interest and the holdings are mostly in small blocks of $100 shares.

The company owns 240 acres, 220 of which are planted. Cherries and apples are the main crops, although here are several acres in gooseberries and currants, these small, quick-bearing fruits being relied on to help out on expenses until the cherries and apples come into full bearing. By dealing direct with the consumer, the company guarantees that fruit picked one day will be delivered in Milwaukee the next. Mr. Boyce, president of the company, takes personal charge of the picking, although the company employs an experienced farmer and fruit-grower the year round.

The securing of pickers in sufficient numbers to take care of the fruit is always a problem in the cherry districts. Last summer two High School girls who were spending the summer in Sturgeon Bay, joined a group of cherry pickers for the fun of the experience. They thought it a lark to earn some spending money and instead of keeping at the work a day or two, as they had expected, they picked through the entire season.

They returned to Milwaukee and told some of their friends about it and the result is that this summer Mr. and Mrs. Boyce chaperoned a camp of High School girls who earned their own vacation and enjoyed a unique camping-out experience. They were boarded at cost and camped on the farm. The plantation came into active bearing this summer, and about 2,000 cases of fruit were marketed.

USING AN OLD BLANKET

No housewife likes to feel that the blankets on her bed are so shabby that she would be mortified to have an outsider see them. It will, therefore, sound pleasing to any one owning a blanket which shows wear to hear of a way in which to utilize the cover. The coverlet for the crib or for the coach can be very easily made from the discarded blanket. Cut the blanket to the proper size. Buy enough silkoline to cover both sides of the decreased blanket. Select a dainty pink-and-green flower spray on a blue ground and use solid blue for the border. Pink or blue zephyr should be used for tufting the material together.

If you want something more elaborate, use real silk covered with a richly colored design.

Lacking a child of your own, you can make the coverlet for some small relative or friend. The idea is too good to waste.

INVENTED TO HELP MOTORISTS

Alfred Reeves, general manager of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, asked what was the present need of the automobile industry, said:

"Of all the problems that we find nothing is of greater importance than the question of a fuel supply at a moderate price. There has been ample fuel for our needs up to this time, with a wonderful distribution, so it is obtainable almost anywhere, yet of late the price has been increasing at a rate which is a menace to the growing use of motor cars and of internal-combustion engines generally, such as those used on farms and in boats.

"If there continues to be a shortage in gasoline and the price increases, we must look for some new fuel. Its arrival is certain, because there never has been a crying demand for anything without an answer from engineers and inventors. Such new fuel may come from crude oil, but more than likely it will be a chemical. Hail to the man who will deliver us from the need of gasoline in motor cars! Just think of the time when chemicals will furnish us with tablets, one of which, in a gallon of water, will provide fuel for your motor."

The Reward of Persistency

The earth is full of rivers running far beneath the top, and when the western farmer wants to raise himself a crop, he drills a hopeful hole through all discouragement and stone for that artesian fluid which is well and widely known through very frequent mention in the lectures that we hear upon the foolishness of wine and wickedness of beer.

The world is full of forces which the energetic chap is constantly and carefully endeavoring to tap; and when it coldly tells him that it never heard of him, he simply advertises with persistency and vim, until he penetrates its outer surface, tough and hard, and ultimately gathers in a suitable reward.

But he who digs for water and the man who bores for biz must keep on drilling grimly till he gets to where it is. The one who is discouraged with a few initial knocks can never hope to penetrate a thousand feet of rocks; and all the fine prosperity by nature kindly stored will flow for other folks and fill some other fellow's gourd.

GOVERNOR GETS SHOCK WITH EACH HANDSHAKE

Iowa Executive Puzzled Over the Repetition of Sensations—Discovery Is Made.

Des Moines, Iowa — Governor Clarke's dynamic personality was much more so than usual the other day, so much more so that the Governor shocked himself and kept on shocking without knowing what was the matter.

As visitors came and went during the afternoon, every time one received the gubernatorial handshake, the executive winced a bit and drew back his arm. Finally he decided to see what was wrong.

"Say, Gus, what's going on here?" he demanded of A. C. Gustafson, his secretary. "Every time I shake hands with somebody I get a shock."

A brand new thick velvet carpet had just been placed on the floor in the Governor's office.

"Ah," exclaimed the secretary. "I'll bet that's it."

Gustafen dragged his feet over the heavy carpet as children used to do in the evening in the parlor before the gas was lighted. From the ends of the secretary's fingers the sparks of static electricity shot out.

"That's it," the secretary announced "This new carpet is dried thoroly now with the radiator heat and all you have to do is walk across it to stir up the current."

Visitors in the office experimented and succeeded in making vivid electric flashes come from their fingers on contact with some other individual or with something leading to the ground. In the course of an argument arising from the governor's experience, one man in a downstairs office succeeded in lighting a gas jet with a spark which came from his fingers after dragging his feet over a heavy carpet.

The man who boasts of being able to spell every word correctly may not be much good at anything else.

The soft green shades will be popular for spring.

Shoulder capes and sleeve caps are among the new features.

THE HORSE AND THE AUTO

That early motor car manufacturers looked upon the horse as a chief competitor is evidenced by some of the claims made by pioneers in the first catalogues issued years ago.

One section of an old catalogue describing "the Apperson four and six hourse-power motors," deals with economy as follows: "If we were desirous of contrasting the cost of maintaining a horse with that of maintainnig a motor carriage, we could not do so in a more striking manner than by taking the actual figures obtained in practice and comparing them. The contrast would be especially prominent if neither was used more than one-half of one-third of the time.

"Considered under the circumstances, the cost of keeping a motor carriage while not in use would be almost nothing, while that of keeping a horse would continue about the same. The slight cost of travel by our gasoline motor carriage seems almost incredible until proven by actual test.

"Journeys may be accomplished with our carriages, provided the roads are in good condition, at a much lower rate than one can travel on the train. If the roads are in good condition our carriages will travel at a cost of less than one-half cent per mile for gasoline, carrying four passengers, which reduces the cost per passenger per mile to about one-eighth of a cent.

"Of course, this estimate does not include the wear and tear of the machinery, which is a factor, depending largely upon the solidity and construction of the carriage, the condition of the roads, and the care of the driver. Moreover, for journeys of moderate distance, one can often take a 'short cut' and thus reach his destination more quickly by motor carriage than by train, thus saving both expense and time."

SLAYING FILMED TO AID CAPTURE

The motion picture theaters of Chicago and the United States will present what is regarded as the greatest news film scoop in the history of news presentation by means of the motion camera.

This feature, which also is the first use of the motion picture in the search for criminals, is produced by the Selig-Tribune service with the co-operation of Chief Healey and the Chicago police department.

It is the reenactment of the robbery of the Thomas Cook & Son Tourist agency and the murder of Policeman Bror Johnson.

"I regard the Selig-Tribune film of the robbery and murder in the light of an achievement in criminology," said Chief Healey. "I only wish that every criminal could be so photographed. It would be a vast step toward the capture of criminals, as it would bring to the notice of the public peculiarities in gait, the poise of the body, and other features that are impossible of description even by the best Bertillon measurements."

When Chief Healey asked the Selig-Tribune to undertake the picture it was with the idea that the capture of the slayer of Policeman Johnson is of vast significance.

"Criminals must not get the idea that they can kill policemen and go scot free," said the chief. "For this reason I urge the capture of Johnson's murderer. Every method should be used, and I think the motion camera is a huge asset.

"Not only is the picture valuable from a point of identification, but it will teach the public the hazards that a policeman encounters in the performance of his duty."

The complete story of the crime is told faithfully, with a view to giving the public proof of the vigilance and devotion of policemen. It is the hope of men high in the police department that several needed reforms be made soon, and the Selig-Tribune film is an exact corroboration of their claims.

WALLACE REID IS NEW "MATINEE IDOL"

Hundreds of thousands of women are now lost in admiration of their newest screen "matinee idol," Wallace Reid. Following is an excerpt from a striking interview with this rising star in the current issue of Photoplay Magazine:

If you have seen some of the more mildly censured editions of The Birth of a Nation, doubtless you recall the husky young white hope, who, labeled "the village blacksmith," juggles a bunch of Africans something terrible.

If you have seen the Farrar Carmen you should have no diffiulty in recalling "Don Jose," who finally and fatally carves Carmen after she has made a "boob" of him.

Fists or foils; bottles or brickbats—it's all the same with "Wally" Reid, respectively horseshoer and Spanish dragoon.

In addition to being an adept at the right-cross, half-Nelson, rapier rattling and bottle-busting, Mr. Reid is also one of the thrillinest film lovers and "girl-grabbers" in our nightly midst.

He went to college—Lafayette—and then Pullmaned west to grow up with the country.

"I landed in Cody, Wyo., with 15 cents in my pocket," says our hero. "The next day I went to work as night clerk in a hotel."

From this humble position "Wally, the Wonderful" meteored into vaudeville, newspaper work and through motion pictures until he landed, very recently, near the top of the golden stairway of film fame.

"I got into pictures more from curiosity than anything else," says Reid, "although I landed my first job because I could swim. It was with the Selig Co. in Chicago. I saved the heroine from the icy burning building in the same picture, The Phoenix."

PLAYFUL 'DAWG' PUTS END TO REAL FIGHT

Running around the Gaumont (Mutual) studios at Jacksonville, Fla., is a rolly polly, inquisitive little dog, a black and white mixture of big brown eyes and funny little legs, that answers the name of Gaumont Garrick. He is the particular pride and concern of General Manager and Director Richard Garrick. Gaumont all but started a riot recently.

Haddock was directing the final scenes of As a Woman Sows, a Mutual masterpiece, de luxe edition. In one scene was shown a fistic fight. It was a fight to the finish—or would the set from bric-a-brac to heavy have been. But just when the gore was aboue due, and everything in table, had been smashed up, young Gaumont, evading a dozen hands that started to catch him, made one funny little spring for the scene and landing just within the camera sight started barking.

QUITE A SALARY

The question as to what Mary Pickford will do, now that her contract with the Famous Players Co. has expired, is answered in the current issue of Photoplay Magazine. She will continue with Famous Players for another year, the deciding factor in the negotiations being the offer of 50 per cent of the stock of a new company, the Famous Players-Pickford Co. Adolph Zukor, president of Famous, will hold one-half the stock and Miss Pickford the other, and their films will be offered through the Famous Players Film Co. Under last year's contract, which included a percentage of receipts as well as her much advertised salary, Miss Pickford cleared in the neighborhood of $200,000.

MOVIE "WILLUNS," BEWARE

In the old days of melodramas, it was not unusual for some absorbed member of the audience in the gallery to call out and tell the hero that the villain was hiding behind a near-by rock. It was not believed that degree of wrapped attention would ever develop at a picture play, however. Yet, this is just what occurred in a Los Angeles house recently, where The Red Circle, Balboa detective story, was showing. As Ruth Roland was about to step into a trap, someone shrieked a warning to her, just as if she had been there to hear. More and more, the illusion of the films is becoming complete.

Pearl White returns to pictures in The King's Game, with Arnold Daly as director.

Pathe is featuring Lois Meredith in a new Gold Rooster play, The Precious Packet.

Robert Edeson will make his initial appearance with Pathe in The Light That Failed.

Thomas Ince has just purchased 200 saddle horses for use in western productions.

Lillian Drew, Essanay player, is a strict vegetarian. She says a vegetarian diet guarantees a beautiful complexion.

Daniel Gilfeather, the grand old man of Balboa films, recently received a letter of appreciation from friends in Somerville, Mass.

"Fatty" Arbuckle, Mable Normand and Minta Durfee (Mrs. Arbuckle) have commenced work at the new Keystone studios at Fort Lee, N. J.

Henry Walthall, premier Essanayite, studied law in Birmingham, Ala., but gave it up to enlist in the Spanish-American war. After the war he decided to become an actor.

Marguerite Clayton, Essanay star, is learning to skate at the Chicago studio. Having spent the greater part of her life in a warm climate, ice skating is a novel and thrilling recreation.

Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, who is to star in Griffith's production of Shakespeare's plays, was given a royal welcome by the mayor and city officials of Los Angeles upon his arrival at the studios.

Hollywood was recently shocked at a company of Universal girls in ballet costume who appeared on one of its busiest corners and capered about before the camera, in a scene of Love Laughs at the Law.

The Balboa company spent $5,000 in dispensing Christmas cheer among its workers. Fifty of the finest Swiss watches were distributed among employees who had been with the firm over two years. No discrimination was shown. Stars and janitors were treated alike.

The Lincoln, Dixie and other notable motor highways have been nearly completed in 1915. They will offer a perfect highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific oceans and almost from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico for the motorist. They will vastly increase the number of tourists, their pleasure and health and add unknown millions to the value of land.

Notes and Comment

Of Interest to Women Readers

KITCHEN BOXES OF DELFT WARE

It is possible to have the kitchen as attractive in its own way as the living room, especially when the woman does the greater part of her work and takes pride and pleasure in having the reputation of being a good housewife.

The display of quaint delft ware kitchen boxes on view in one hardware department is enough to tempt any housewife to refit a dingy kitchen. These boxes which are made to hold sugar, salt and spice, are labeled and have quaint dutch scenes in blue and white on them.

Half a dozen of these boxes on the kitchen shelf with a background of clean paint or tiling, present an attractive appearance, as well as a very convenient way of having these articles close at hand. The newest bread boxes have rounded glass windows in the lid, so that the contents may be inspected without raising the lid and admitting the air.

Home Helps.

Cocoanut matting should be well scrubbed with hot water and soap.

Clean fire irons, brass and nickel ornaments with rotten stone and sweet oil and polish with a chamois skin.

Carbonate of soda will remove the most obstinate of mud stains. Rub off with a cloth or flannel dipped in the soda, then press well on the wrong side of the material with a warm iron.

If the seats of caned chairs are sagged down, wash well on the bottom side and when nearly dry rub the bottom over with water in which a little glue has been dissolved. Let them dry bottom side up.

When washing new curtains you will generally find that they are full of lime. A great deal of trouble may be saved by soaking the curtains over night in water in which a little salt has been dissolved. The salt draws out the lime and makes the curtains easy to wash.

To Carve Mutton.

Carving a leg of mutton is an easy and graceful task when you know how. With the left hand take hold of the bone end and with a firm stroke of the knife first cut away the portion not to be eaten. Then cut thin slices down to the bone and loosen each slice by putting the knife flat on the bared bone and cutting through. The slicing should gradually change direction, so as to cut always across the grain. After the upper portion is gone proceed in a similar manner to carve the under cut.

Raisin Candy.

Two cupfuls of sugar and one cupful of water boiled together until the syrup is brittle. Test a little of it in cold water. Then add one teaspoonful of butter and one cupful of seeded chopped or whole raisins, mix with a fork quickly and remove from the fire at once. Have ready a plate greased with butter, drop with a spoon small pieces of the candy on the plate. Set in a cool place to harden.

Laying Hems.

A friend who offered to lay the hems of my curtains astonished me by calling for mucilage. Cutting a guide card the width desired for the hem, she pasted it to her left thumb. "No picking up and putting down of the guide," she said, and her needle flew after the card at an astonishing rate of speed. It has proved a great time saver.

For Cleaning Silver

Precipitated chalk is excellent for cleaning tarnished silver. Place a little in a saucepan and add just enough liquid ammonia to moisten it. Rub this lightly over the silver and the stains will quickly disappear. Then wash in hot suds, dry carefully and polish with a clean chamois leather.

Nothing Sticks.

Before using my tins for cooking I always fill them with cold water, adding a handful of salt, and allow them to stand several hours, then rinse well in clear, cold water, says a New York Press contributor. You will find this well worth the trouble, for nothing sticks to them.

Books in Oilcloth.

When packing books line the boxes with table oil cloth. You will preserve the volumes in this way from damage during long journeys or from mold and mildew if left in a damp storage house. —Good Housekeeping.

Sponge in Jar

A sponge in a porcelain umbrella stand will keep the umbrellas from striking the bottom of the jar, which is often broken in this way, and will also absorb the rainwater from the wet umbrella.

Worth Knowing.

Milk will not turn sour if a teaspoonful of fine salt be added to every quart.

To make glassware clear and sparkling, add a little washing blue to the suds when washing.

Recipes.

Sweet Cream Cake—One cup sugar and three eggs creamed together, one half cup sweet cream, one cup flour, one teaspoon baking powder, one teaspoon lemon extract.

Dictates of Fashion

A little handwork now and then is appreciated by the busiest of men. Especially is this so when the handwork is applied to an article which is both beautiful and ornamental.

New hats are very high in the back.

Brilliant-colored face veils are said to be promised by Paris.

Wool or silk jersey cloth increases in favor for sport suits.

Many of the new gowns have the slighest suggestion of a bustle.

Circular cut flounces are being shown on some of the new jackets.

The smartest of street suits has no fur around the bottom of the coat.

The French woman of fashion hesitates to adopt a high bust corset.

There is something wrong when January plagiarizes April's best lines.

Redingotes of extreme length are said to be coming, with short cutaway fronts.

Black velvet and chiffon are very successfully combined in afternoon dresses.

The little child's hat may have a soft, not very full ruffle of lace around the face.

South America is at last beginning to snuggle up to Uncle Sam in a most fetching way.

The winter gown may be freshened by the addition of a straight little over jacket of chiffon or lace.

If the allies hurry up they ought to be able to save at least a sample of heroic Serbia—but not if they don't.

A striking evening dress has the low-cut bodice of black velvet, and the full skirt in three tiers of brocade.

A surprising combination is green satin, skunk fur and pink and gold embroidery. This is for a semi-evening frock.

A novel and becoming way to trim a child's straight dress is to pretend to button it straight down both sides, from shoulder to bottom of hem, and set buttons close together with imitation buttonholes made of braid.

Sleeves are an interesting feature of the gown, and there are sleeves pointed, sleeves which fit closely all the way down to the hand, full sleeves rather small at the top and full at the bottom; and some of the newest sleeves are puffed at the top, fitting the arm down to the wrist where they spread into a flaring ruffle.

DAINTY HATPINS ARE MADE OF SEALING WAX

Here is an idea for the inventive girl. It comes from London, and proves that the hatpin can be something besides a relic of the inquisition. She who likes an odd touch of color and of originality in her own handiwork can now mold "sealing wax" hatpins. Lovely new colors are now found in sealing wax—sticks of exquisite "hortensia" pink, emerald green, lizard green, gemlike purples — which are captivating. These, softened and cunningly modeled by the wearer's own fingers, produce beautiful results, and, too, are puzzling to the looker-on who wonders of what substance the hatpin heads are produced.

TOUCHES OF LACE

Most of the more elegant blouses to match the tailored velvet suit skirt have a dainty touch of white lace in their decoration. A black blouse to go with a velvet skirt has a black velvet skeleton blouse, with underblouse and sleeves of black chiffon. This underblouse descends below the belt in narrow ripple flare, overbound on the edge with a narrow fold of black satin. The neck frill, of Bruges lace, also overbound with satin, is held up about the ears by a satin neckband. Bruges lace falls in jabot surplice fashion at each side of the front. The loose sleeves have deep cuffs with a little overbound black satin frill.

PUMICE GOOD CLEANER FOR DIRTY WINDOWS

A bag filled with powdered pumice stone is an excellent window cleaner. Make a bag of unbleached cotton cloth of a soft quality, not too firm. When finished, the bag is six inches wide and twelve inches long. Into this put about one-eighth of a pound of pumice stone. To prevent soiling this bag, it is slipped into a cheesecloth case that can be removed and washed. No water is used on the window, but it is rubbed first with a piece of tissue paper, then polished with the bag.

NEW DELICACIES MADE OF CRISP POP CORN

Pop corn wafers are a novelty for the children to try. For these wafers prepare some boiled white sugaring, just as for a cake. Keep this soft and do not let it become brittle like candy. Stir into it some popped corn that has been buttered and salted, and flavor the mixture with either lemon or vanilla. This is to be spread on plain crackers. Pop corn balls may also be varied by making them with maple sugar. The quantities required are two cups of sugar, three-fourths of a cup of water, and butter the size of an egg. Cook this all together until it candies. For the balls, pick out only perfect grains of popped corn. Turn this corn into the cooked sirup and stir in all it will take. One's hands should be buttered while forming the hot corn into balls and the mixture is best handled after it has been turned out on warm plates.

Suit jackets are somewhat shorter. They have belts and pockets; also flairing tails.

The spring turbans are not worn straight on the head, but tipped slightly on one side.

PRESENTS FOR THE NEW BABY

What a host of lovely things there are to make for the new baby, and the mother does so appreciate gifts made by the loving fingers of friends and relatives.

A white layette is always in good taste, but touches of color add a charm. Pink is sanctioned for the boy and pale blue is chosen for the girl.

A gift always welcomed is a carriage robe, either for summer or winter use. Those of soft eiderdown lined with crepe de chine, of embroidered linen or some soft tufted silk, are finished with a lace plaiting and possibly a cluster of the satin ribbon flowers or a large flat bow at one end.

Another welcome gift is the little morning wrapper, made of padded silk crepe. Mothers do not object to snug bonnets made to match, as these garments are frequently utilized as first coats, they are so easily put on.

The assortment of pillows for the baby cradle or carriage is fascinating. One can make use of all kinds of lovely bits of lace, embroidery linen, net and even brocades in fashioning these. They may be square, long or round; just now the round ones are particularly popular. For dressy occasions, when the wee one is on parade, the soft pink or pale blue brocade covered pillow with a large fine filet motif almost covering the top makes a welcomed adjunct. Whatever the shape chosen, these little slips of linen, sheer batiste, or net ornamented with Irish crochet, real Valenciennes or Venetian lace must be lined or put on over a silk covered pillow of down.

Among the other gifts in the line of equipment for the crib or carriage are the veils of sheer on coarse net to protect the baby from flies or mosquitoes. The most attractive of these is of the square mesh net, with wreaths of the Dresden flowers done in cross stitch in the corners. When edged with an imitation filet lace and insertion, under which the narrow colored ribbon can be run, the effect is charming. The ordinary white net finished with lace around the edge and clusters of the satin flowers with the rosettes at the corners make attractive baby presents.

If one cares to put more time, more stitches and possibly more expense into the gift, there are fascinating slips on the long dresses with the old-time panel front, handsomely embroidered, and to be used for the christening robe.

One can make adorable linen booties which are washable, with a lace crocheted around the top and a tiny rosette bow below the strap, which has an embroidered design. The old-time booties crocheted out of the fuzzy white wool with pink and blue borders are never old-fashioned and find a happy place in the layette.

Bibs are important on the list of baby requisites. Some of these are no more than filmy bits of real lace and linen, over a padding, while a more practical style is of a fine white pique with a scalloped edge.

Tiny armlets to hold up the frock sleeves, which are usually too long, are fashioned out of bits of ribbon and lace, shirred over the narrowest elastic and finished with a small rosette of lace or ribbon with a center of a few tiny ribbon roses. A cross stitch design is also used effectively on these useful little gifts.

The motor coat may be brightened by adding plaid ribbon on the edges.

No hat, no matter what the shape, dares to have much trimming.

Our Last Shell

FARMERS' INSTITUTE

This is our last shell and we hope it will explode in the minds of the people so severely that it will impress on them the great effort that has been put forth to bring to them three nights and two days of entertainment and instruction that will prove profitable financially, mentally and morally to the entire corner of the county. Every precaution known to us has been followed to assure you of good speakers. They are more than deserving of your attendance and support. Following is a brief sketch which will familiarise you with each one to some extent.

The evenings are given over largely to recreation. They are divided into two parts entertainment and lecture. A good variety of musical talent has been engaged. The entertainment is provided for those who can get around early in the evening and lets them spend a half hour pleasantly before the real program, the lecture, begins. If you do not want to hear the entertainment please try to come to the lecture at 7:30 sharp so as not to annoy those who come early for the entertainment. Tonight's program begins at 7:00 and is not divided as just explained. You should be on time so as to see what all the different schools of the three townships have to give you a pleasant hour-and a-half.

All evening admissions are 15c to non members. Anyone can become a member by paying a fee of 25c. See last issue of News and Souvenir Program for details. Membership cards are NOT transferable. Day sessions free to all.

HISTORYS

John M. Life, Friday Eve.

Mr. Life comes to us well recommended by our Angola friends. They say he tells a wonderful story in a beautiful way and becomingly emphasizes it with stereoptican views. You cannot miss hearing Mr. Life.

Otis Crane, Friday.

Otis Crane is one of the best authorities on farming we have in the state. He has had many years experience in the profession, both in school and on the farm. Last fall at an Auburn meeting of people from all over the county Mr. P---- said, "I would drive clear across DeKalb county to hear that man speak." His address was spoken of as the best given there, by many and there were some of the strongest speakers in the state on the program. Crane is one of those men that is wanted by everybody and consequently hard to get. The management congratulates themselves for the good fortune of getting him to go on the program at St. Joe.

Clarence Henry, Friday.

Mr. Henry needs no introduction to the people of this community. We are all more or less familiar with his splendid work in the adjoining county. He is a farm boy, farm raised; has had the advantage of an education and spent the greater part of his life farming and studying farm problems. Mr. Henry has added interest to his talks by taking pictures explaining his views and having them so arranged that he can throw them on a screen where his audience can study them. The value of these views is greater because they are not produced by some artist in his studio but taken with a Kodak right on the job and of the real thing. And that's what we want, things that are practical and that other farmers are doing. We can get enough theories swimming around in our heads without having someone give us more of them. Henry is practical

Honor Among Farmers

The old "hay seed" of long ago was a man much joked about but admired because of his simplicity and open honesty. The modern farmer of today has gotten away from these desirable traits to some extent caused probably by the close contact with his city brother then the telephone, automobile, etc. As a steward of the Auditorium Hotel put it when asked why he didn't buy direct from the farmers, "I'm just a wee bit suspicious of this man, the honest farmer so much talked about."

But there are honest farmers and dishonest farmers and our attention is just now called to an honorable farmer who lives in our community.

This man has had the misfortune of having an outbreak of cholera among his hogs. What did he do. Before he knew for certain it was cholera he went to his neighbors and told them his suspicious and advised them to watch their herds.

How does this compare with the man who had the same disease, kept still about it and caused his neighbors to come on his farm and help thresh. Resulting in a loss of over $5,000 to the community.

The first man mentioned has set a splendid example in this, our community. Let every farmer do as he did the minute he suspicions cholera on his premises.

Cholera is certainly an awful disease to fight Thru united effort we can keep it under control in the Tri-Townships.

W. E. Peterson and wife entertained ye editor and family at Sunday dinner.

Mrs. Harry Kees came Saturday and remained over Sunday with her mother, Mrs. Adda Filley.

"Cavaleria Rusticana" is the one musical extravaganza of modern days. Not so elaborate nor so expensive is the little company styled "CAVALIERS," but just as strong in their line which is BASKET BALL. This snappy aggregation is full of fire and will inject enough "punch" into the game next Monday night, (Feb. 28,) to make it of gripping interest from start to finish. The team is under the management of Mr. E. F. Hargrave, catcher on the 'Chicago Cubs' base ball team and he is making an extra effort to encourage clean spirit in this interesting line of athletics.

The local team will present each lady who patronizes this game a ticket for the Spencerville-St Joe game which will follow on Friday night. Break away from "Father Time" just this once and help the boys out. They need your financial aid to just break even. You will be royally entertained, will get your money's worth and do a good turn all at one throw. This is not the team begging your support, in fact they are utterly ignorant of the origin of this appeal, yet they admit that, financially, they are in close quarters and the expense of getting this strong team will pinch them much closer if YOU do not come to their assistance. Place your stamp of approval upon this good clean sport by being one of the crowd next Monday night.

NEWVILLE

Mrs. Maude Palmer was a St. Joe visitor, Thursday.

Mac Richmond and Sidney Brunson were at Scipio, Tuesday.

John Gillingham and wife were Tuesday evening guests of John Miller and family.

J. Glenn Miller, of Auburn, made a professional call at Newville, Tuesday afternoon.

A large crowd attended the Richard sale, Tuesday. The U. B. Ladies served lunch.

The Richmond Brothers and John Seeley packed ice, last week. Elmer Wyatt, Sam Wyatt and Jay Rickett also packed ice, last week.

Elmer Wyatt and wife went to Hicksville. Tuesday, to see their grand-daughter, Mrs. Jessie Scott, whose operation was noted last week.

Wm. McNabb and wife, C. E. Tarney, wife and daughter Fern, and John Gillingham and wife were Monday evening guests of Harry Ayers and family of Orangeville, helping Mr. Ayers celebrate his birthday.

It seems that Claud Tarney is having a series of accidents while hauling his hay, Wednesday, his load turned over and even the rack went off. Sam Stafford was thrown to the ground lighting on his feet; injuring his right foot considerable while the other foot only slightly. Mr. Tarney fell off the front of the load falling over the double-trees to the ground at the horses heels. Mr. Tarney was injured so that he crawled to the side of the road and laid there for a while. The team being very quiet saved farther trouble. The men managed to reload after putting the rack on, but both were pretty badly used up. Mr. Stafford is not able to walk on his foot and is using crutches at the present time, and Mr. Tarney is all O. K.

The school fair was held Friday afternoon and evening and was quite a success. The display consisted of corn, potatoes, a number of different kinds of small grain, fine carpenter work such as pedestals, book racks, plate racks made by the boys, canned fruit and baking both cakes and pies also some fine sewing and crochet work made by the girls and a number of old time articles such as a small spinning wheel and reel, many drawings adorned the wall, birds, fruit flowers, geographical maps, and other features were presented to view. All being highly appreciatiated. Songs, recitations and dialogues were rendered. Oliver Widney, of Auburn was present and gave a talk which was appreciated by a full house. The evening program was conducted on the same plan as that of the afternoon. Both teachers have spared no pains to make this fair a success and the pupils have entered into the work with zeal. All who were present seemed to enjoy both the exhibit and the entertainment.

Dewey Miller is another that has the measles.

David Griest, who was injured by falling from a load of hay, is still unable to be up.

John Friend, Jr., had two ribs broken and his hand badly injured while working at bridge building. He is at his mother's home in Newville at present.

COMB SAGE TEA IN LIFELESS, GRAY HAIR

Look young! Common garden Sage and Sulphur darkens so naturally nobody can tell Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and abundant with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair fell out or took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, ready to use, for about 50 cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair and is splendid for dandruff, dry, itchy scalp and falling hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and abundant.

C. M. Wearley spent Sunday with his family.

Many people in this neighborhood are having lagrippe.

QUIT MEAT IF YOUR KIDNEYS ACT BADLY

Take tablespoonful of Salts if Back hurts or Bladder bothers—Drink lots of water.

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with uric acid, says a well-known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from the overwork; they get sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and thus the waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lumps of lead, and you have stinging pains in the back or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or the bladder is irritable, obliging you to seek relief during the night; when you have severe headaches, nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach or rheumatism in bad weather, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking a little occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active.

OPEN NOSTRILS! END A COLD OR CATARRH

How To Get Relief When Head and Nose are Stuffed Up.

Count fifty! Your cold in head or catarrh disappears. Your clogged nostrils will open, the air passages of your head will clear and you can breathe freely. No more snuffling, hawking, mucous discharge, dryness or headache; no struggling for breath at night.

Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist and apply a little of this fragrant antiseptic cream in your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothing and healing the swollen or inflamed mucous membrane, giving you instant relief. Head colds and catarrh yield like magic. Don't stay stuffed-up and miserable. Relief is sure.

DRINK HOT TEA FOR A BAD COLD

Get a small package of Hamburg Breast Tea, or as the German folks call it, "Hamburger Brust Thee," at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the tea, put a cup of boiling water upon it, pour through a sieve and drink a teacup full at any time during the day or before retiring. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieving congestion. Also loosens the bowels, thus driving a cold from the system.

Try it the next time you suffer from a cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

RUB BACKACHE AND LUMBAGO RIGHT OUT

When your back is sore and lame or lumbago, sciatica or rheumatism has you stiffened up, don't suffer! Get a 25 cent bottle of old, honest "St. Jacobs Oil" at any drug store, pour a little in your hand and rub it right into the pain or ache, and by the time you count fifty, the soreness and lameness is gone.

Don't stay crippled! This soothing, penetrating oil needs to be used only once. It takes the ache and pain right out of your back and ends the misery. It is magical, yet absolutely harmless and doesn't burn the skin.

Nothing else stops lumbago, sciatica and lame back misery so promptly!

No More Croup

Medicine Made At Home; Children Cry For It

A safe, pleasant and reliable remedy for croup, coughs, colds and bronchial affections can quickly and cheaply be made at home. There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

THE CHIEF LEGATEE

by ANNA KATHERINE GREEN.

Author of [illegible] Case, [illegible] Closed Doors, etc.

SYNOPSIS

Chapters I to III—A few hours after marriage the wife of Roger J. Ransom is missing from the hotel where they have just registered. A detective, Mr. Gerrage, is called into the case. The bride, formerly Miss Georgian Hazen, becomes alarmed over something which happened while passing down the aisle from the altar.

While standing at the hotel desk with the groom the woman disappears. A man with a twisted face was seen whispering to the bride at the reception. Evidently flight was meditated after that meeting.

The bell boy noted peculiarities about the woman and was the only one who noticed her slip away. The detective claims the maid was a substitute for the wife, and rode from the house to the hotel while the wife left by the basement door in the maid's clothes.

Chapters IV to V—The woman who left by the basement door was traced to a meeting with the man with a broken jaw. Ransom receives a note from his wife who claims to have found a long lost twin sister, supposed to have been dead. The twin is of unbalanced mind and stone deaf. Ransom meets the man with the broken jaw and who declares himself to be Mrs. Ransom's brother who was in need of money.

Chapters VI to VII.—Ransom interviews his wife's lawyer, who insists that she has a twin sister. When leaving the office the office boy gives him his wife's address.

Ransom goes to Stitford, Conn., and finds the hotel where his wife has secured rooms. He visits the cemetery and finds a man about to efface from the tombstone the record of the death of the twin sister, which was supposed to have occurred years previously. He also finds the announcement of the death of the man with whom he had recently talked who claimed to be his wife's brother.

Chapters IX and X.—Ransom learns that his wife, her sister, and the lawyer, are coming to the inn.

The sister who had left the coach for a walk appears later and he is surprised at the resemblance to his wife. He learns that his wife has had the lawyer draw her will.

Chapters XI to XIII—The inmates of the hotel were aroused by a piercing cry in the night. The sister declared that Ransom's wife had gone to the waterfall to destroy her life.

The mill stream never gave up its dead. A letter was found from Mrs. Ransom confirming the fact that she had tired of life. Some doubt was expressed by the detective.

Chapters XIV and XV—After a full investigation of the house and grounds by both Ransom and the lawyer come to the conclusion that the woman remaining in the hotel and known as Anitra was Ransom's wife.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

The lawyer desisted from further advice, but sighed as he followed his new client into the hall. At the turn of the staircase they were stopped by the sound of wrangling voices in the office below. Mr. Harper heard his name mentioned and hastened to interfere. Assuring Mr. Ransom of his speedy return, he stepped down-stairs, and in a few minutes reappeared with a middle-aged man of characteristic appearance, whom he introduced to Mr. Ransom as Mr. Goodenough. The sight of the uncouth head of their youthful acquaintance of the morning peering up after him from the foot of the stairs was warranty sufficient that this was the man who had met the strange young lady on the highway early that morning.

At sight of him Mr. Ransom felt that inner recoil which we all experience at the prospect of an immediate and definite termination of a long brooding doubt. In another instant and with one word this uncultured and hitherto unknown man would settle for him the greatest question of his life. And he did not feel prepared for it. He had had impulse almost of flight, as if in this way he could escape a certainty he feared. What certainty? Perhaps he could not have answered had he been asked. His mind was in a turmoil. He had feelings—instincts; that was all.

"We hear that you met this morning a young girl going towards the Ferry. There is great reason why we should know just how this young girl looks. A lady disappeared from here last night, and though, from a letter she left behind her, we have every reason to believe that her body is somewhere in the river, yet we don't want to overlook the possibility of her having escaped alive in another direction. Can you describe the person you saw?"

"Wa'al, I'm not much good at talk," was the embarrassed, almost halting reply. "I saw the gal and I remember just how she looked, but I couldn't put it into words to save my soul. She was pretty and chipper and walked along as if she was part of the mornin'; but that don't tell you much, does it! Yet I don't know what else to says. P'raps you could help me by asking questions."

"We'll see. Was she light-complexioned? Yellow hair, you know, and blue eyes?"

"No; I don't think she was. Not what I call light. My Sal's light; this gal wasn't like my Sal."

"Dark, then, very dark, with a gipsy color and snapping black eyes?"

"No, not that either. What I should call betweens. But more dark than light."

Beckoned Mr. Goodenough into Mr. Ransom's room

"What did she have on her head?"

"Bless me if I can tell! It wasn't a sunbonnet, nor was it slapped all over with ribbons and flowers like my darter's."

"But she had some sort of hat on?"

"Sartain. Did you think she was just running to the neighbors?"

"But she wore no coat?"

"I don't remember any coat."

"Do you remember her frock?"

"No, not exactly.'

"Don't you remember its color?"

"No."

"Wasn't it black? the skirt of it, at least?"

"Black? Wa'al, I guess not. A gal of her age in black! No, she was as bright as the flowers in my wife's garden. Not a black thing on her. I should sooner think her clothes were red than black."

Harper showed his surprise.

"Not a black skirt?" he persisted.

"No, sir'ee. I haven't much eye for fixin's but I've eye enough to know when a gal's dressed like a gal and not like some old woman."

Harper's eye stole again towards Ransom.

"Checkmate in four moves," he muttered. "The person we are interested in could have worn no such clothing as Mr. Goodenough describes. Yet clothing can be changed. How, I cannot see in this instance; but I will risk no mistake. The trail we followed led too surely in the direction of the highway for us to drop all inquiries because of a colored skirt and a hat we cannot quite account for. If the face is one we know (and I really believe it was), we can leave the other discrepancies to future explanation." And turning back to the patient countryman, he composedly remarked: "You are positive in your recollections of the young lady's features. You would have no difficulty in recognizing her if you saw her again?"

"Not a bit. Once I get a picter in my mind of a man or a woman I see it always. And I can see her as plain as plain the moment I stop to think. She was pretty, you see, and just a little scared to speak to a stranger. But that went as she saw my face, and she asked me very perlite if she was on the right road to the Ferry."

"And you told her she was?"

"Sartain; and how much time she had to get there to catch the boat."

"I see. So you would know her again if you saw her."

"I jest would."

The lawyer made a move towards the door which Mr. Ransom hastened to open. As the long vista of the hall disclosed itself, Mr. Harper turned upon the countryman with the quiet remark:

"There were two ladies here, you know. Twins. Their likeness was remarkable. If we show you the remaining one who now lies asleep, you surely will be able to tell if she is like the lady you saw."

"If she looks just like her you can bet beans against potatoes on that."

"Come, then. You needn't feel any embarrassment, for she's not only sound asleep but so deaf she couldn't hear you if she were awake. You need only take one glance and nod your head if she looks like the other. It is very desirable that none of us should speak. The case is a mysterious one and there's enough talk about it already without the women hiding and listening behind every shut door you see, adding their gossip to the rest."

A knowing look, a twitch at the corners of a good-natured mouth, and the man followed them down the hall, past one or two of the doors alluded to, till they reached the one against the panel of which Mr. Ransom had already laid his ear.

"Still asleep," his gesture seemed to signify; and with a word of caution he led the way in.

The room was very dark. Mrs. Deo had been careful to draw down the shade when she put her strange charge to bed, and at this first moment of entrance it was imposible for them to see more than the outline of a dark head upon a snowy pillow. But gradually, feature by feature of the sleeping woman's countenance became visible, and the lawyer, turning his acute gaze on the man from whose recognition he expected so much, impatiently awaited the nod which was to settle their doubt.

But that nod did not come, not even after Mr. Ransom, astonished at the long pause, turned on the stranger his own haggard and inquiring eyes. Instead, Mr. Goodenough lifted a blank stare to either face beside him, and, shaking his head, stumbled awkwardly back in an endeavor to leave the room. Mr. Ransom, taken wholly by surprise, uttered some peremptory ejaculation, but a glance from the lawyer quieted him, and not till they were all shut up again in that convenient room at the head of the stairs did any of the three speak.

And not even then without an embarrassed pause. Both the lawyer and his unhappy client had a deep and, in the case of the latter, a heartrending disappointment to overcome, and the clock on the stairs ticked out several seconds before the lawyer ventured to remark:

"Miss Hazen's face is quite new to you, I perceive. Evidently it was not her twin sister you met on the high road this morning."

"Nor anything like her," protested the man. "A different face entirely; prettier and more saucy. Such a gal as a man like me would be glad to call darter."

"Oh, I see!" assented the lawyer. Then with the instinctive caution of his class, "You have made no mistake?"

"Not a bit of a one," emphasized the other. "Sorry I can't give the gentleman any hope, but if the sisters look alike, it was not this woman's twin I met. I'm ready to take my oath on that."

"Very well. One catches at straws in a stress like this. Here's a fiver to pay for your trouble, and another for the lad who brought you here. Good day. We had no sound reason for expecting any different result from our experiment."

The man bowed awkwardly and went out. Mr. Harper brought down his fist heavily on the table, and after a short interval of silence during which he studiously avoided meeting his companion's eye, he remarked:

"I am as much taken aback as yourself. For all he had to say about her gay clothing, I expected a different result. The girl on the highway was neither Mrs. Ransom nor her sister. We have made a confounded mistake and Mrs. Ransom—"

"Don't say it. I'm going back to the room where that woman lies sleeping. I cannot yet believe that my heart is not shut up within its walls. I'm going to watch for her eyes to open. Their expression will tell me what I want to know;—the look one gives before full realization comes and the soul is bare without any thought of subterfuge."

"Very well. I should probably do the same if I were you. Only your insight may be affected by prejudice. You will excuse me if I join you in this watch. The experiment is of too important a character for its results to depend upon the correct seeing of one pair of eyes."

CHAPTER XVI.

"Love."

SHE lay in the abandonment of profound slumber, one hand under her cheek, the other hidden by the white spread Mrs. Deo had been careful to draw closely about her. Both Mr. Harper and Mr. Ransom regretted this fact, for each instinctively felt that in her hands, if not in her sleeping face, they should be able to read the story of her life. If that life had been a hard one, such as must have befallen the waif, Anitra, her hands should show it.

But her hands were covered. And so, or nearly so, was her face; the latter by her long and curling locks of whose beauty I have hitherto spoken. One cheek only was visible, and this cheek looked dark to Ransom, decidedly darker than Georgian's; but realizing that the room itself was dark, he forbore to draw the attention of the lawyer to it, or even to allow it to affect his own judgment to the extent it reasonably called for.

His first scrutiny over, Mr. Harper crossed over to his old seat against the wall. Mr. Ransom remained by the bed. And thus began their watch.

It was a long and solemn one; a tedious waiting. The gloom and quiet of the small room was so profound that both men, for all their suspense and absorption in the event they awaited, welcomed the sound of a passing whisper or the careful stepping of feet in the corridor without.

If they turned to look they could just catch the outline of each other's countenance, but this they did not often attempt. Their attention was held by the silent figure on the bed, and so motionless was this figure in the profound slumber in which it lay enchained, and so motionless were they in their increasing suspense and expectation, that time seemed to have come to a standstill in this little room. There was one break. The lips which had hitherto remained mute opened in a quiet murmur, and Mr. Harper, watching his client, saw him clutch the headboard in sudden emotion before he finally rose and, with looks still fixed on the bed, approached him with the startling announcement:

"The word she whispered was 'Love'! It must be Georgian."

Alas! the same thought struck them both. Was this a proof? Mr. Ransom flushed hotly and crept softly back to his post.

Again time seemed to stop. Then there came a cautious rap on the door, followed by the hasty retreat of the person knocking. It caused Mr. Ransom to stir slightly, but did not affect the lawyer. Suddenly the former rose with every evidence of renewed agitation. This drew Mr. Harper from his seat.

"What is it?" he cried, softly approaching the other and whispering, though after events proved that he might have spoken aloud with impunity.

Mr. Ransom pointed to her temple from which her hair had just fallen away.

"The veining here. I have often studied it. I recognize its every convolution. It is Georgian, Georgian who lies there—ah, she's stirring, waking! Let me go—"

He dragged himself from Mr. Harper's detaining hand, bent over the bed and murmured softly but with the thrilling intensity of a suffering hoping heart, the name which at that moment meant the whole wide world to him:

"Georgian!"

Would she greet this expression recognition and a smile? The lawyer half expected her to and stepped near enough to see, but the eyes which had opened upon the white wall in front of her stared on, and when they did turn as they did after one halting, agonizing minute, it was in response to some movement made by Mr. Ransom and not in reply to his voice.

This sudden and unexpected overthrow of his secretly cherished hopes was terrible. As he saw her rise on one elbow and meet his gaze with one which revealed the astonishment and resentment of a wild creature suddenly entrapped, he felt, or so he afterwards declared, as if the viper which had hitherto clung cold and deathlike about his heart had suddenly sprung to life and stung him. It was the most uncanny moment of his life.

Aghast at the effect of this upon his own mind, he reeled from the room, followed by the lawyer. As they passed down the hall they heard her voice raised to a scream in uncontrollable shame and indignation. This was followed by the snap of her key in the lock.

They had made a great mistake, or so the lawyer decided when they again stood face to face in Mr. Ransom's room. That the latter made no immediate answer was no proof that he did not coincide in the other's opinion. Indeed it was only too evident that he did, for his first words, when he had controlled himself sufficiently to speak, were these:

"I should have taken your advice. In future I will. To me she is henceforth Anitra, and I shall treat her as my wife's sister. Watch if I fail. Anitra! Anitra!" He reiterated the word as if he would fix it in his mind as well as accustom his lips to it. Then he wheeled about and faced Harper, whose eyes he doubtless felt on him. "Yet I am not so thoroughly convinced as to feel absolute peace here," he admitted, striking his breast with irrepressible passion. "My good sense tells me I am a fool, but my heart whispers that the sweetness in her sleeping face was the sweetness which won me to love Georgian Hazen. That gentle sweetness! Did you note it?"

"Yes, I noted what you mention. But don't let that influence you too much. The wildest heart has its tender moments, and her dreams may have been pleasant ones."

Mr. Ransom remembered her unconscious whisper and felt stunned, silenced. The lawyer gave no evidence of observing this, but remarked quite easily and with evident sincerity:

"I am more readily affected by proof than you are. I am quite convinced myself, that our wits have been woolgathering. There was no mistaking her look of outraged womanhood. It was not your wife who encountered your look, but the deaf Anitra. Of course, you won't believe me. Yet I advise you to do so. It would be too dreadful to find that this woman really is your wife."

"What?"

"I know what I am saying. Nothing much worse could happen to you. Don't you see where the hypothesis to which you persist in clinging would land you? Should the woman in there prove to be your wife Georgian—" The lawyer stopped and, in a tone the seriousness of which could not fail to impress his agitated hearer, added quietly, "you remember what I said to you a short time ago about guilt."

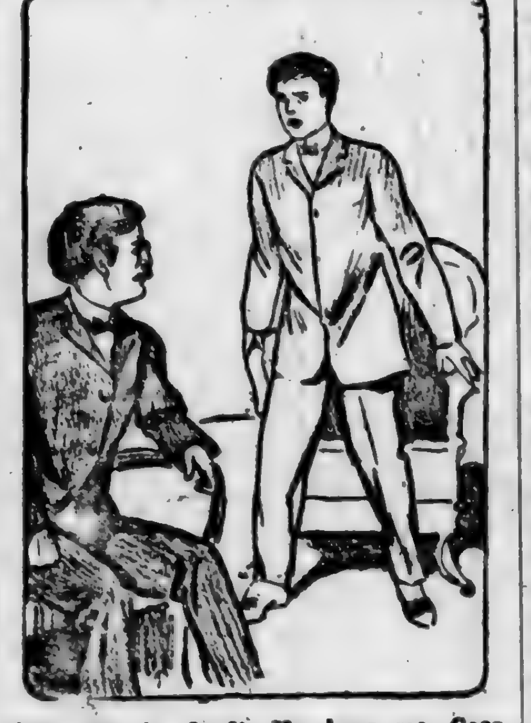
"Guilt!"

"No, the word was shame. But guilt better expresses my meaning. I repeat, should the woman prove to be, not the lovely but ignorant girl she appears, but Georgian Ransom, your wife, then upon her must fall the onus of Anitra's disappearance if not of her possible death. No! you must hear me out; the time has come for plain speaking. Your wife had her reasons we do not know what they were, but they were no common ones—for wishing this intrusive sister out of the way. Anitra, on the contrary, could have desired nothing so much as the preservation of her protector. The conclusion is not an agreeable one. Let us hope that the question it involves will never be presented for any man's consideration."

Mr. Ransom sank speechless into a chair. This last blow was an overwhelming one and he sank before it.

Mr. Harper altered his tone. He had real commiseration for his client and had provided himself with an antidote to the poison he had just so ruthlessly administered.

"Courage!" he cried. "I only wished you to see that there were worse losses to consider than that of your wife's desertion, even if that desertion took the form of suicide. There is a reason which you have forgotten for acquitting Mrs. Ransom of such criminal intentions and of accepting as your sister-in-law the woman who calls herself Anitra. Recall Mrs. Ransom's will; the general terms of which I felt myself justified in confiding to you. In it there are no provisions made for this Anitra. Had Mrs. Ransom, for any inexplicable reason, planned an exchange of identities with her sorely afflicted sister, she would have been careful to have left that sister some portion of her great fortune. But she did not remember her with a cent. This fact is very significant and should give you great comfort."



"Georgian is dead! You hear me, Georgian is dead!"

"It should, it should, in face of the other alternative you have suggested as possible. But I fear that I am past comfort, it all means woe and disaster to me. I have made a mess of my life and I have got to face the fact like a man."

Then rising and confronting Mr. Harper with passionate intensity, he called out till the room rang again:

"Georgian is dead! You hear me, Georgian is dead!"

CHAPTER XVII.

"I Don't Hear."

THE afternoon passed without further developments. Mr. Harper, who had his own imperative engagements, left on the evening train for New York, promising to return the next day in case his presence seemed indispensable to his client.

That client's final word to him had been an injunction to keep an eye on Georgian's so-called brother and to report how he had been affected by the news from Sitford; and when, in the lull following the lawyer's departure, Mr. Ransom sat down in his room to look his own position resolutely in the face, this brother and his possible connection with the confusing and unhappy incidents of this last fatal week regained that prominent place in his thoughts which the doubts engendered by the usual character of these incidents had for a while dispelled.

What had been the hold of this strange and uncongenial man on Georgian? And was his reappearance at the same time with that of a supposedly long deceased sister simply a coincidence so startling as to appear unreal?

He had not seen Anitra again and did not propose to, unless the meeting came about in a natural way and without any show of desire on his part. The landlady, with a delicacy he highly appreciated, cared for the young girl without making her conspicuous by any undue attention. The quiet of the night remained unbroken for everybody; even poor Mr. Ransom slept. He was up, however, with the first beam entering his room. How could he tell but that news of a definite and encouraging nature awaited him?

At half-past ten the representative of the county police called on Mr. Ransom, but with small result. Shortly after his departure, the mail came in and with it the New York papers. These he read with avidity. But they added nothing to his knowledge. He flung the papers from him and went out to gather strength in the open air.

There was a corner of the veranda into which he had never ventured. It was likely to be a solitary one at this hour, and thither he now went. But a shock awaited him there. A lady was pacing its still damp boards. A lady who did not turn her head at his step, but whom he instantly recognized from her dress, and wilful but not ungraceful bearing, as her whom he was determined to call, nay recognize, as Anitra Hazen.

It was the first opportunity he had had of observing her features in broad daylight. The effect was a confused one. She was Georgian and she was not Georgian. Her skin was decidedly darker, her eyes more lustrous, her bearing less polished and at the same time more impassioned. She was not so tall or quite so elegantly proportioned;—or was it her rude method of dressing her hair and the awkward cut of her clothes which made the difference. He could not be sure. Resolved as he was to consider her Anitra, and excellent as his reasons were for doing so, the swelling of his heart as he met her eye roused again the old doubt and gave an unnatural tone to his voice as he advanced towards her with an impetuous utterance of her name:

"Anitra!"

She shrunk, not at the word but at his movement, which undoubtedly was abrupt; but immediately recovered herself and, meeting him half-way, cried out in the unnaturally loud tones of the very deaf:

"They don't bring my sister back. She is drowned, drowned. But you still have Anitra," she exclaimed in child-like triumph. "Anitra will be good to you. Don't forsake the poor girl. She will go where you go and be very obedient and not get angry ever again."

He felt his hair rise. Something in her look, something in her manner of making evident the indefinable barrier between them even while expressing her desire to accompany him, made such a disturbance in his brain that for the moment he no longer knew himself, nor her, nor the condition of things about him. If she saw the effect she produced, she gave no evidence of it. She had begun to smile and her smile transformed her. The wild look which was never long out of her eyes softened into a milder gleam, and dimples he had been accustomed to see around lips he had kissed and called the sweetest in the world flashed for a moment in the face before him with a story of love he dared not read, yet found it impossible to forget or see unmoved.

"What trial is this into which my unhappy fate has plunged me!" thought he. "Can reason stand it? Can I see this woman daily, hourly, and not go mad between my doubts and my love?"

His face had turned so stern that even she noticed it, and in a trice the offending dimples disappeared.

"You are angry," she pouted. "You don't want Anitra. Nod if it is so, nod and I will go away."

He did not nod; he could not. She seemed to gather courage at this, and though she did not smile again, she gave him a happy look as she said:

"I have no home now, nor any friend since sister has gone. I don't want any if I can stay with you and learn things. I want to be like sister. She was nice and wore pretty clothes. She gave me some, but I don't know where they are. I don't like this dress. It's black and all bad round the bottom where I fell into the mud."

She looked down at her dress. It showed, in spite of Mrs. Deo's effort at cleaning it, signs of her tramp through the wet lane. He looked at it too, but it was mechanically. He was debating in his mind a formidable question. Should he grasp her hand, insist that she was Georgian and demand her confidence and the truth? or should he follow the lawyer's advice and continue to accept appearances, meet her on her own ground and give her the answer called for by her lonely and forsaken position? He found after a moment's thought that he had no choice; that he could not do the first and must do the last.

"You shall come with me," said he quietly. "I will see that you have every suitable protection and care."

She surveyed him with the same unmoved inquiry burning in her eyes.

"I don't hear," said she.

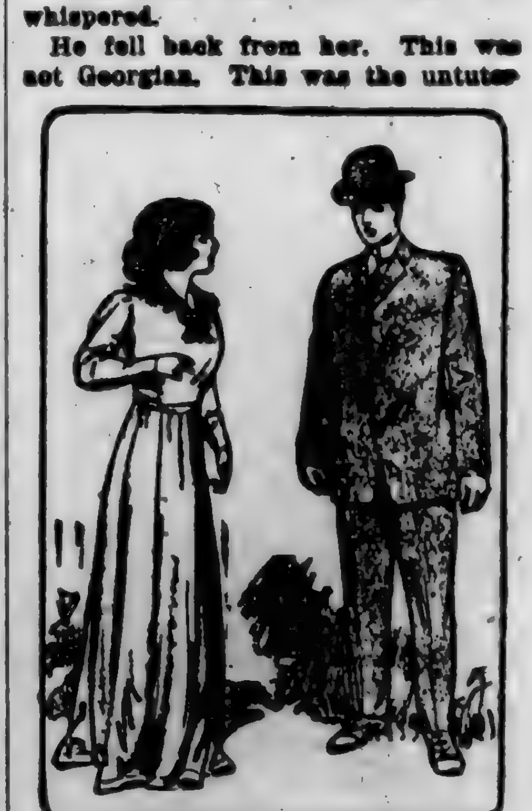
He looked at her, his lips set, his eyes as inquiring as her own.

"I don't believe it," he muttered just above his breath.

The steady stare of her eyes never faltered.

"You loved sister, love me," she whispered.

He fell back from her. This was not Georgian. This was the untutored girl about whom Georgian had written to him. Everything proved it, even her hands upon which his eyes now fell. Why had he not noticed them before? He had meant to look at them the first thing. Now that he did, he saw that he might have spared himself some of the miserable uncertainties of the last few minutes. They were small and slight like Georgian's, but very brown and only half cared for. That they were cared for at all astonished him. But she soon explained that. Seeing where his eyes were fixed, she cried out:



"I don't hear," said she.

USED TURQUOIS TO DECORATE MOUTHS

NATIVES OF CENTRAL AMERICA INLAID THEIR TEETH WITH GEMS

IS PHOSPHATE OF ALUMINUM

Stone Invested With Great Virtues as Cure-All by Writer

Washington—The division of Mineralogy of the United States Museum at Washington has on exhibition a large collection of the gem known as turquois. In the exhibits of the division of anthropology additional specimens are to be seen which fact goes to vouch for its historical value and its close relations to the life of man.

Dr. Joseph E. Pogue, late of the museum staff has made an exhaustive study of this mineral, which has recently been published.

The turquois is an opaque mineral, prized mainly for its perfection of color, since it lacks the brilliant lustre which forms the chief charm of transparent gems. Specimens of the finest quality possess a soft and pleasing blue tone like the color of the sky called in the trade sky blue or robin's egg blue, but the value is often lessened by a greenish cast, while in many stones the green predominates.

It occurs near the surface of the earth where it is readily found and mined. Being but slightly harder than glass, it may be worked with ease, even by primitive people who possess only the crudest tools.

Chemically the turquois is a phosphate of aluminum carrying small quantities of copper and iron, to which its color is due. With variscite, a green mineral of similar character but less value and beauty, it is the only phosphate to find a place among the precious stones. Like many minerals, this stone has more than one origin.

It is usually formed, however, by the percolation of surface water through aluminous rocks containing apatite and disseminated copper minerals.

Although at the present day this stone is outranked by the diamond, ruby, sapphire and other gems among the civilized peoples, with semi civilized peoples it takes foremost rank, its value depending not only upon its intrinsic worth, but also upon the mystic properties and religious significance it is supposed to possess.

It is the most highly prized possession of the Navaho Indian of the deserts of Arizona, and the Bedouin of the plains of Arabia, while the Tibetan and Mongolian natives esteem this gem no less than do the Hopi and Zuni pueblo dwellers in our own south west.

By virtue of this general use in parts of the Orient and America, and its introduction into legends and myths of diverse and widely separated peoples, the turquois has considerable ethnologic interest.

From the dawn of civilization down to the present day the turquois has played an important role and found a variety of ornamental and religious uses. Not only was it always held in in high esteem but it was frequently invested with marvelous virtues. From the tombs of the earliest Egyptian kings has come beautiful jewelry inlaid with turquoises from the Sinai peninsula.

The inhabitants of central Asia have long valued the turquois and been lavish in its use, while the Persians and neighboring races of Western Asia have from time immemorial drawn upon the famous Nishapur deposits near the Caspian Sea. The mineral was probably known in Europe even prior to the beginning of the Christian era.

Turquois occurs in but few places on the globe, most of them barren and arid, yet in nearly every place where it has been found prehistoric mining sites have also been discovered, showing that the ancients knew nearly all the localities of this stone.

Many early writers attributed great medicinal value to this pretty blue stone. They also held that this gem brought good luck, fortune, etc, and protected its wearer from harmful accidents, even death itself. Another virtue was its supposed ability to prevent a horse from tiring.

Medical properties were also claimed for it in Mexico by the Aztecs, although there this gem had more of a religious value, being offered or devoted primarily to divinities, and at first worn only by priests and the mightiest nobles.

The natives of Central America are said to have inlaid their teeth with turquoises, and an ancient jaw studded with these gems unearthed in Yucatan attests to this belief.

Mythologically the turquois has a long and curios history, both with the ancients and the ignorant of today. Its color, varying from blue to green, was significant for ages as representative of the sky, sea and verdure.

"It cures all diseases of the head and heart. By application over the eyes it insures their lustre, and prevents the fall of fluid therefrom. It is a sovereign remedy for flatulence, dyspepsia, insanity, and ulcers. Whether taken with other drugs or simply with honey, it has the power of curing epilepsy, spleen, etc."

The turquois seems to have been a veritable cureall."

INDIANS RETAIN OLD NAMES

Picturesque Titles Brought to Light by Reservation Sale.

St. Paul, Minn.—That Indian names still possess their early strength and picturesqueness is shown by those which figured prominently in the recent sale of Indian lands in the Standing Rock Reservation in North and South Dakota.

An inspection of the list reveals such names as Kate Good Crow, whose nearest neighbor is Barney Two Bears Mary Yellow Fat adjoins Melda Crowghost while Mrs. Crazy Walking, on the southeast quarter of section 19-23-25, has probably reached the condition indicated by her name through being in the same section with Elk Ghost.

Mary Lean Dog rather envies Agatha Big Shield for her aristocratic name. In like manner, Jennie Dog Man and Mary Shave Head may be all too willing to assume on short notice the heroic name borne by Morris Thundershield, heir apparent to Long Step Thundershield.

Mrs. Did Not Butcher, judging from her name, is in no condition to supply the wants of her nearest neighbor, Mrs. Frosted Red Fish, who lives on a half section not far from Helen Difficult.

SEES HUMAN GROWTH CONTROL

Science May Dictate Size and Weight of the Race

Philadelphia—That science is on the threshold of discoveries which will make it possible to retard or hasten the growth of human beings was the statement made by Dr. M. W. Jacobs. He asserted that experiments with rats have proved that animals fed on certain proteins for extended periods maintain a constant weight, but as soon as other necessary constituents are added, growth is resumed. He cited one instance in which a rat was kept stunted for 532 days, an age corresponding to about 45 years in human life. By changing the diet growth was permitted to develop that would normally have taken place in youth.

"We have it in our power," said Dr. Jacobs, "to say whether animal shall do its growing in youth or old age or whether it shall have several periods of growth. This being true, it is not too much to expect that the ultimate outcome of such work will be the scientific control of the forces of organic growth even in human beings."

RECOVERS LONG LOST WATCH

Eighteen Years in Mill Race and Still Running?

Penn Yan, N. Y.—One day eighteen years ago W. Henry Townsend, county superintendent of the poor, lost a watch from his pocket. He worked at two tasks that day—assisting in cleaning out a mill race and unloading straw. He searched the straw without finding the timepiece. The mill race was soon full of water so that further search could not be made.

A few days ago the race was cleaned out and a watch was found. Townsend examined it and found in it his old timepiece. It was in excellent condition after its long rest under the water.

One of the official's friends asked him if the watch was still running and Mr. Townsend gravely replied that it surely was. It was a stem winder, he said and very likely the action of the swiftly running water kept it wound up all these years.

DISPLAYS HIS HAPPY FAMILY

Printing Firm's "Zoo" Proves Real Attraction.

Perry, Okla.—In the front show window of the Southern Printing Company's office here is a "Happy Family" that attracts the attention of hundreds of people. Living happily together and eating from the same dishes are many beautiful canary birds, guinea pigs of different kinds, squirrels, white and spotted rats, horny toads and a pair of beautiful Persian kittens. It it a sight worth looking at.

Back of the office is a garden of beautiful flowers and cages in which are tame possums, pet coons that will follow visitors around like dogs, over a hundred guiea pigs of many kinds pigeons and other birds and animals. "Wish you could all enjoy them with us," is the company's message to Blade readers.

COCKEREL STEALS DIAMOND

New London, Conn.—Lloyd Hallenbeck of Greendale, N. Y., had a diamond stolen from his scarf pin while acting as judge at a poultry show here, the thief being a cockerel in a pen of Rhode Island Reds on exhibition. Hallenbeck values the stone at $100.

The cockerel attracted by the sparkle of the gem as Hallenbeck stood close to the pen, removed the stone from its setting with a well directed jab of its beak and swallowed it.

As the owner of the diamond does not know which of the exhibits has his jewel it may be necessary to kill a number of them to find the right one a proceeding which, it is said, promises complications with the owner of the poultry.

G. WASHINGTON RELICS SHOWN

COLLECTION OF MEMENTOES OF FATHER OF COUNTRY HEART TOUCHING DISPLAY

BIG VARIETY OF MATERIAL SHOWN

Infant Robe Worn at Christening Vies With Old Continental Uniform

Washington, D. C.—"Among the many interesting objects pertaining to the history of this country, there is probably nothing which touches the hearts of true Americans more quickly than the relics and mementoes of "The Father of His Country," George Washington, many of which are displayed at the old building of the United States National Museum in Washington," says a statement issued by the Smithsonian Institution.

"This collection consists of a variety of material gathered from numerous sources. While composed largely of articles of domestic and artistic interest owned by Washington at Mt. Vernon, the collection also includes mementoes of his life in the field during the War of the Revolution, and a number of other miscellaneous relics of greater or less importance.

"The most noteworthy objects are: Four pieces of plaster statuary, and a face mask; several portraits and engravings; many pieces of furniture, including Washington's easy chair, tables, chairs, mirrors, bedstead and footstool; numerous candelabra, lamps and candlesticks; glass and chinaware and table furnishings; as well as many personal relics. These latter perhaps represent more to the visitor, since they were the individual property of this great statesman and warrior.

"There are two interesting costumes worn by Washington; the first an infant's robe of white brocade silk, lined with old rose China silk, used on the occasion of his christening, and the other a continental army uniform, worn when he resigned his commission as commander in chief of the continental army at Annapolis, Md., December 23, 1783. Representing as these costumes do, two such separated periods of the life, they tend to remind the observer of the great things which were accomplished by Washington between the times these diversified costumes were worn. Other articles of wearing apparel comprise a waistcoat and what were known as small clothes or knee breeches.

"Three tents with poles, pegs and pouches, a mess chest, spyglass, field glass, portable writing case and shaving glass, make up the field equipment used by Washington in his campaign. Other relics, including an iron treasure chest and a zither and case, a music case of mahogany, a Chinese tea chest and a gold medal commemorating his death besides a number of other miscellaneous articles complete one of the most interesting collections of historical objects in this country.

"Since many of the articles relate so pertinently to the home of Washington, a brief mention of its history is here made.

"Mount Vernon House, historically the most interesting of American mansions and closely associated with nearly all the objects herein described, was erected in 1743 for Lawrence Washington, the half brother of George, and so named in honor of Admiral Edward Vernon, R. N., under whose command Lawrence Washington had served during the British expedition against Cartagena in 1741. The property passed into the hands of George after the death of Lawrence in 1752 and the house was later improved and enlarged.

"When Mrs. Washington died in 1802, Mount Vernon became in accordance with Washington's will, the property of his nephew, Bushrod Washington who in turn bequeathed it to his nephew, John Augustine Washington, from whom it passed to a son of the same name, and in 1858 was purchased from him by the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association.

"By an act of Congress, approved June 20, 1878, the Government purchased a collection of Washington relics from G. W. Lewis and others, the heirs of Mrs. Lawrence Lewis, the adopted daughter of Washington, and the wife of his nephew, Maj. Lawrence Lewis. After the death of Mrs. Washington, in 1802, these objects had passed into the hands of Mrs. Lewis, and on her death in 1852, were received by her heirs, who held them until their purchase by the government in 1878, when they were deposited in the United States Patent Office, where they remained until transferred to the United States National Museum in 1883.

"The objects purchased from the Lewis heirs form the greater portion of the Washingtoniana in the museum, and are designated as belonging to the 'Lewis collection.' The sources of other Washington relics received by the museum at various times as loans or gifts, are noted on the descriptive labels."

YOUNG BRIDE IN JAIL WARNS GIRLS OF DRUG

Tells Tragic Story of Ending of Romance and Her Fight Against Morphine.

Los Angeles, Cal.—A little wanderer in the gray land of drugs tossed and turned on a cot in a cell at the matron's department of the city jail.

"Never take the first dose," she sobbed. "It's grip is terrible."

She was Mrs. James Dellarocca, 19 years old, and a bride of but three months.

In a separate cell on the floor below was her husband, facing a charge of forgery.

But even in the torment of her soul, that "little wanderer" sobbed that her next fight against the use of morphine would be a successful one, and with tears rolling down her cheeks told the story of her life in the clutches of drug habit.

"When I did start" she sobbed. "Oh, that is the worst part of the story. It was a woman who started me—a woman who said she was my friend. That was about four months ago. I knew that she was queer—that is, she was a drug user.

"One day I was very sick. I had been ill for several weeks. I was suffering terribly. Then this woman came to me and told me she could relieve my suffering. I knew what she meant and I refused.

"She kept right after me. I was in agony. She said I could take it once and then not again. Finally I gave in. The pain was numbed.

"Oh, it's the same old story from then on. I could not stop.

"I was compelled to increase the dose every day. Inside of a few weeks I was taking a grain and a half.

"Then I met Jimmy—Dellarocca—it was love at first sight. I loved him. He asked me to marry him. I was foolish and told him yes. He did not know I was taking morphine. I decided it was best to tell him before we were married and I did so—two days before.

"I remember he put his arm around me and said, 'Never mind, little girl, you and I will fight it out together, you'll be all right in a little while.'

"We were married and we started to fight. We began saving our money so that I could be cured. I could not stop, tho. I would take a little each day. But we fought hard and we smiled as we fought, because we were going to win.

"Then his business went broke. Our money went fast. He could not bear to see me in agony without morphine. He would buy it altho it hurt him to do it and give it to me.

"I became worse. The fight seemed hopeless. I was taking two grains 3 or 4 times a day. Then we were arrested.

"I am glad I have been arrested. I will have another chance to fight morphine. They tell me I can be cured and I am going to try, oh, so hard, for Jimmy's sake and my sake.

"Oh, tell girls never to touch drugs. Tell them to run from it. Tell them to stop their ears every time it is mentioned. Please do, 'cause it may do some good."

The "little wanderer" declared that her husband was innocent of the charge of the forgery of counter signatures to nine $100 checks.

"I will stay by him until the end," she sobbed as she turned her face to the wall.

Wins Life Partner.

Passaic, N. J.—Called by neighbors "the man with the big heart," Thomas Miller, builder and contractor, is going to marry. And his love affair grew out of his pity for a baby waif, to whom nobody wanted to give a home. Miller, a bachelor, adopted sickly Frances Albina Berkowitz, who was born September 1, 1910, and left by her mother with a poor Polish family in Passaic.

"She was in mighty bad shape," Miller said, "but I bathed her and powdered her as I thought a woman would, and in the end she came out of it like a pink and white jewel, and she has been well ever since. The best medicine for a baby is love, and she has had all mine from the start."

Correspondence followed with several women and he is to wed Miss Louise Niedermann of McComb City, Miss.

TRAIN INSANE IS NEW MOVEMENT

PHYSICIANS AND NURSES ADOPT SYSTEM AT PHILADELPHIA GENERAL HOSPITAL

TO SELL THE WORK OF PATIENTS

Instructor of Handicrafts Gives Regular Lessons to the Unfortunates

Philadelphia, Pa.—One of the most encouraging movements within the walls of the Philadelphia General Hospital at Brockley is the movement for the training of the insane. While this is being taken up by the physician and nurses in charge, and while insane patients are being given, under the supervision of Miss M. E. Turner, supervisor of the woman's department, a new vision of life and a new opportunity for forgetting their maladies, great credit for the occupational work done in the insane department is due to the Association for the employment of the insane.

The association will hold a sale of patients' work at 115 South Thirteenth street, which will demonstrate the capacity of the insane for artistic achievement. The work includes many varieties of handicrafts, embroideries, basket weaving, matmaking and kindred occupations, the introduction of which have completely changed the patients' outlook upon life, and have proved the immense value in maintaining discipline in the hospital.

So thoroughly have the physicians in charge of the insane department appreciated the value of the occupational training for patients that they have encouraged the association to employ an instructor of handicrafts, who gives regular attention to the work.

Miss S. Lillian Clayton, chief nurse of the hospital says in a letter that has been sent out to members of the association and deals with the tremendous advantage of the work, that it has roused a spirit of anticipation among the patients; that they forget to quarrel among themselves, forget their pains, fancied or real; that they talk of their work and plan for it, and have become so absorbed that the new interest has brought life and interest into the wards where previously there was only deadly monotony.

While the work of the association dates back to 1898, it has taken on new aspect and become part of the socializing movement which is gradually taking hold within the walls of Blockley. Those in charge of the sale are particularly anxious that it should be a success, for the money realized will go toward carrying on the work during the coming year and providing funds for the monthly balls given to the patients.

MAN LOST SEEKING MINE

Prospector Insane from Suffering Thought Desert Sand Was Water

Prawley, Cal.—Losing himself in search for the lost "Peg Leg" mine, Henry Zimmerman, 50, of Alhambra, was found in the desert west of the Salton Sea, crazed from thirst and stumbling over the sands under the delusion that he was wading in water.

He was found by Tom Marshall of Brawley.

Marshall was on his way to Harper's Well for water and when eight miles this side came upon Zimmerman. The prospector was wild and delirious. He had removed his shoes and carried them in his hands. His trousers were rolled to his knees. His mouth was open and sand stuck to the thick lips where he had scooped handfuls thinking it water. Marsnall gave him a sip of liquid from his canteen and took him to camp.

There Zimmerman was cared for and he had so far revived that his speech became rational. He talked but a short time when he lapsed again into unconsciousness. He said he and his partner were looking for gold, for the "Peg Leg" mine.

The story of the mine is that years ago a stump legged miner descended upon Los Angeles periodically and each time with a new supply of wealth. He jealously guarded the secret of his store and eluded those who sought to trace him.

In a brawl in a dance hall of those days he was killed and ever since efforts have been made to find the lost mine. The common supposition is that it was in the superstition Mountains west of the valley.

Zimmerman says he became separated from his partner, lost his bearings, and finally drank the last drop from his canteen. The partner returned to Rockwood a station north of here, and reported Zimmerman missing.

School Celebration

Did you see those school children last Friday, when they paraded the streets celebrating Indiana's One Hundredth birthday? Did you? Two hundred and forty-seven of them! Didn't they look fine? Were you not proud of our public schools when you saw and heard those noisy youngsters go by? And that was only one item on the grand program which they rendered, commencing at nine o'clock in the morning and continuing until four in the afternoon.

It was sketched on the sandwich idea with a wonderful dinner serving as a delightful intersperse.

Too extensive to permit of special mention of individual number, though each was worthy of extended praise. All bore directly upon the great subject in hand and the story of our great state was unrolled before us as upon a large screen, and I imagine that, like myself, a great many know more about our history than ever before.

It was a grand success from start to finish. All of Concord township schools were united for the first time, and we trust that many more such events maybe planned for the future. We become acquainted—we visited—we inspected the school house—in fact, I believe that every person enjoyed themselves to the limit all day.

The south room upstairs was devoted to a mighty interesting display of relics of olden days, covering a wide range of articles including old fire arms, Indian relics, spinning wheels etc., and was certainly a credit to the management of the event.

The building was tastefully decorated with the national colors, and a spirit of patriotism pervaded the atmosphere. National songs and a grand state song entitled "Indiana" were sung and stirring scenes were portrayed in speech and declamation. Every person taking part showed that they had given much time and attention to the preparation of the work assigned to them. The rural schools were in no less evidence than the town school, and did their work equally well A fitting climax for this great days work came in the form of a flag drill by the high school girls.

NOTES

About two hundred visitors were present and were strong in their praise of the efficiency and energy of Concord teachers and pupils.

We trust that trustee Hathaway will inaugerate many more of the union meetings. A world of good comes from them.

Over three hundred children and grown ups enjoyed the big picnic dinner.

Everybody should learn to sing "Indiana." The "one" song we all love the first time we hear it.

FRANK BALTZ, Candidate for Nomination of SHERIFF.

The desire of the voter to know something about the candidates for whom he is expected to vote, is the reason for this brief biographical sketch of Frank Baltz, who is asking the Democrats to nominate him at the Primary as their party candidate for Sheriff.

Frank Baltz was born south of Spencerville thirty-six years ago, and nearly all of his life has been spent around St. Joe and Spencerville; that part of the county was his home, until he came to Auburn to assume the duties of Deputy Sheriff some three years ago.

It was his ambition to be a teacher in the schools of the county and to gratify his desire and qualify himself to fill this position, he acquired a good education and for twelve years he taught school in the townships of Concord, Spencer, Newville and Keyser. During his term as Deputy Sheriff he has had full charge of the clerical department of the Sheriffs Office and the examination of the books by the State Board of Accountants, has shown every dollar properly accounted for and the work of the office without error. He has shown himself efficient outside of the office as well, and if elected, will make a careful and economical official.

He is genial in his disposition, but firm in the discharge of his official duties and has made friends in every nook and corner of DeKalb County.

The Voter will make No Mistake to Mark His ballot for FRANK BALTZ for Sheriff.

Business men and citizens generally thought so well of him that they sent in a written petition asking for his retention in the office of marshal. Mr. Duerk for five years was employed by the Zimmerman carriage works at Auburn, as a carriage trimmer. He came to Garrett in 1900, working as a brakeman four years and a conductor six years He has been in the restaurant business at 105 Quincy street for the past two years All of his life Mr. Duerk has been a democrat and a taxpayer. He holds up his record for the inspection of the voters and on his merit he asks them to give him support at the primary necessary for his nomination. NOW TIME TO FERTILIZE.

Conserve Soils Before They Reach the Failing Point, Says W. G. Eckhardt.

"The time to conserve Iowa soils is before they reach the point of failing fertility; find the element which is limiting crop yields and supply it," stated W. G. Eckhardt, county agent of DeKalb county, Illinois, in a talk at the recent Ames short course on "Soil Acidity and Use of Lime." Mr. Eckhardt discussed the results of state experiments relative to liming and use of phosphorus which he had supervised at the University of Illinois.

"On land worth $150 per acre, is there more profit in one acre yielding 80 bushels of corn, or on four acres yielding 50 bushels per acre" was the problem which the Illinois expert submitted to the farmers present. With corn at 35c a bushel, taxes at 50 cents per acre, interests at $7.50 per acre and labor, including husking, totaling $8.00 per acre, Mr. Eckhardt showed that the profits in either case were $12. In other words, the farmer with the 80 bushels corn is making the same profit from 40 acres as the grower of 50 bushel corn realizes from 160 acres.

Slides were shown illustrating the enormous increase resulting from the use of rock phosphate on Illinois soils. The yield of wheat in one case was raised from 22.5 bushels to 53.5 bushels per acre by the use of one ton of rock phosphate in four years. At the Illinois station, one plot receiving 200 pounds of steamed bone meal annually had averaged 91 bushels of corn per acre for upwards of ten years.

Liming of southern Illinois soils was proven to have made the difference between a 7 bushel and 26 bushel wheat crop. "Mortgage the farm or sell a part of it, and lime the remainder," is the advice that Mr. Eckhardt offers to farmers whose land is acid, and who are unable to afford limestone.

HENS "LAYING" DOWN ON JOB.

Average of 75 Eggs Per Hen Is Too Low, Says Prof. Turpin.

That the average of 75 to 80 eggs per laying hen for the state of Iowa is too low, was brought out by Prof. G. M. Turpin in his talk to short course students on "Selecting the Best Breeding Stock."

He showed that a foundation flock of hens with a laying record of 200 eggs per year cannot be maintained without selection. The individual average is so high that the production will tend to revert back to the general average. In the selection work, individual records must be kept. In this selection work, Prof. Turpin emphasized the importance of uniformity of character, such as size of individual and period of growth to maturity.

FARM & GARDEN

DISPOSAL OF DEAD ANIMALS

Burying or Burning All Carcasses Will Reduce Spread of Infectious Disease

Often when animals die on the farm no disposal is made of their carcasses other than to drag them into a field or a nearby woods, where they are left on the surface of the ground to decompose or to be eaten by buzzards, crows, dogs, and other scavengers, or animals which feed on carrion.

This practice cannot be too severely condemned, because it contributes seriously to the dissemination of disease germs and the perpetuation of infectious diseases.

The carcasses of animals which have succumbed to infectious diseases like anthrax, hog cholera, blackleg, tuberculosis, etc., are charged with myriads of virulent disease germs, and just as long as they remain where scavengers can reach them and portions of them can be carried away promiscuously, they are a dangerous menace over a large territory to all animals which are liable to be attacked by disease germs. Even carcasses of animals which have died from other causes than infectious diseases, unless they are disposed of in a proper way, are a source of danger. Left on the surface of the ground their odor soon invites scavengers to congregate and to bring with them the infectious material with which they may have become contaminated by eating carrion elsewhere.

Dead animals on the farm should be buried deep enough to prevent them from being dug up again, or they should be burned. To burn large carcasses like those of dead horses and cattle it is difficult and laborous and requires a large quantity of fuel. In most instances it is most economical to bury them. All animals which have died of infectious diseases and are buried should be covered with a heavy layer of lime before the graves are closed.

In the winter when the ground is frozen, it is more difficult to dig graves than at other times of the year but it is just in cold weather that disease germs remain alive and virulent longest in dead organic matter and that scavengers travel the longest distances, have the best appetites, and are most likely to carry disease germs on and in their bodies. The extra trouble of digging graves in the winter is easily offset by the greater danger in counteracts. Low temperature prevents the multiplication of disease germs, but many kinds of disease germs are not killed or deprived of their pernicious possibilities by exposure to a lower temperature than the lowest reached during an icy, arctic winter.

Everywhere farmers not only should attend to the proper and safe disposal of the bodies of their own animals which unfortunately die, but they should insist on the proper disposal of the bodies of all animals which die anywhere in the regions in which their farms are located.

Preventing Mottled Butter

Mottled butter is frequently found on the market at this time of the year and even though it may be of very good flavor it is strongly discriminated against by the purchaser. As this defect is one of workmanship, it can be overcome by the application of the proper methods on the part of the butter maker.

Mottles are caused primarily by an uneven distribution of salt in the butter. This may be produced by insufficient working of the butter or by churning, washing, and working it at a very low temperature several degrees higher or lower than the churning temperature.

When the quantity of butter made in one churning is much less than usual, it is necessary to work it a greater number of revolutions of the churn than usual in order to produce the same results on the butter.

Extremely low temperatures of churning, washing and working should be avoided, because they produce so firm a butter that it is only with great difficulty that the salt can be worked uniformly into it. High temperatures of churning, washing and working must also be avoided to prevent an abnormal loss of fat in the buttermilk and also the making of a greasy, leaky butter.

Great variations in temperature during the manufacturing process should always be avoided. Under normal conditions the temperature of the wash water should be the same as, or within two degrees of that of the buttermilk.

When the churn room is so cold that the butter becomes chilled before working is completed, mottled butter is frequently the result. To prevent this it is preferable to increase the amount of working rather than to raise the temperature of the wash water.

Mottled butter, then, may be prevented by using methods that will insure a uniform distribution of salt.

Use plenty of sand in the soil to be used for starting early plants.

Don't neglect to make germination tests of your seeds.

Use a little lime in your seed bed soil.

FARM HANDICRAFT CLUB

Planned to Maintain Interest in Club Work During Winter Months and To Develop Manual Skill.

To encourage boys and girls especially those in the country, to spend their spare moments during the fall and winter months usefully, the department's directors of juvenile club work in the north and west, working in cooperation with the state colleges of agriculture, have developed plans for farm and home handicraft clubs for boys and girls. The purpose of these clubs is twofold: First, to maintain interest in the agricultural club during the season when active work in the field and garden is suspended; and, second to develop manual skill in members through practical work that readily may be correlated by teachers with the manual training work of the school as well as with the agriculture of the farm and the domestic activities of the home.

The work is so planned as to be capable of extension throughout the year, or it may be limited to the regular nine months school year. While effort will be directed primarily toward interesting members of the agricultural and home economic clubs in these activities, membership is to be open to children 10 to 18 years of age.

These clubs will be directed much as are the corn clubs, girls' gardening clubs, canning clubs, and other organizations aimed to give skill and experience in raising crops or animals or in utilizing by-products of the farm. The leaders of the clubs will supply the members with specially prepared circulars of direction, in which are to be included working drawings and lists of materials for accomplishing the different projects.

The clubs, while directly vocational also will be designed to minister somewhat to the winter social needs of children and will provide for exhibits and even for contests. Members will be encouraged to select and carry through during the year 10 of what might be called the handicraft units suggested in the list below. This list designed for the guidance of the directors of these special clubs, and of teachers offers valuable suggestions also to parents who wish to plan useful activities for their children, and should be found suggestive by those concerned with the development of almost any type of organized work for the amusement and improvement of rural children. Following is the list of activities suggested for the boys and girls who enroll in the clubs.

The Wages of Silence

Two little birds were bachelors. Each was the other's chum. Said one of them: "This single life is growing stale and bum. I wish to candidly and most emphatically state that I shall advertise the fact that I desire a mate." The other said: "I would not have you think my feet are cold, but I should never advertise, for that is coarse and bold."

The wise one opened wide and deep his highly gifted throat, and sang with ardor and technique his amatory note. The maiden birds from far and near flocked in to hear him sing, and signified their willingness to wear his wedding ring; and very soon the anthem which he warbled from his breast had won a highly skilful wife to supervise his nest.

The one who wouldn't advertise still sits upon a limb, but lonely lady birds will never pause to look at him. He has some lovely qualities peculiarly his own, but just because he doesn't fill his lungs and make them known, his atmosphere is darkened by a cold and dismal blight, and neighbors have the notion that he isn't very bright.

WATCH INCUBATOR MOISTURE.

Maintaining Proper Humidity Important in Chick Raising.

Although most incubators can be depended upon to maintain the proper temperature, they do not always properly regulate the moisture content, which is a very important consideration, asserts G. M. Turpin, head of the poultry husbandry department at Iowa State college.

As a rule, hot water incubators have less ventilation than hot air machines. In such a case the moisture given off from the eggs is retained and produces too high a moisture content. Boring ventilation holes in the incubator will remedy this trouble.

Most hot air machines are too dry and require the addition of moisture. This can be done by placing in the incubator a shallow pan filled with wet sand. The water in the pan must not be allowed to puddle, as this will destroy rapid evaporation.

To determine if the moisture content of an incubator is too high or too low, weigh the eggs when they are first placed in the incubator and then again three or four days later. Eggs should lose ⅔ of 1% a day and will do so at proper moisture content. If there is a greater loss the incubator is too dry; if the loss is less, the incubator has too high a moisture content.

CHOOSE FROM LARGE LITTER.

Breeding Gilts Should Be Selected From Prolific Sows.

Make the first selection of next year's breeding gilts at the teat and pick from the large litters, advise the animal husbandrymen at Ames.

Although some breeders insist that a sow's prolificacy depends upon her length and roominess of body, science points strongly toward the conclusion that prolificacy is inherited as a characteristic itself, independent of body form.

The fact will demonstrate the importance of selecting breeding gilts from the sow that gets the large litter.

GREEN FEED TO SHOW WETHERS

Stuff Fitted for International Proves Value of Proper Feeding.

Fed to be exhibited at the International, which was called off, the prime lot of wethers fitted at Iowa State college prove what proper selection and good feeding will do toward producing show animals. Plenty of green feed in the way of rape, alfalfa, cabbage and mangels has been the feeding secret of their present show condition.

The wethers, which, if exhibited, would undoubtedly have been blue ribboners, were carefully selected while in but fair condition, which, the Ames animal husbandrymen say, is the first and most important step in preparing to fit for show stuff. On July 5 they were brought in from clover pasture. At first they were fed a handful of grain in the morning of a mixture of 2 parts oats, 1 part bran, ¼ part corn and ½ part oil meal. In 6 weeks this was increased to ½ lb. a day. Alfalfa hay, second and third cuttings, was fed twice a day, all they would clean up. At nights they were out on rape and alfalfa pasture. August 15 a little cabbage each day, gradually increased to 2 lbs., was fed twice a day before the grain was fed. In two weeks this was fed 3 times a day.

After September 1 green alfalfa was fed in the barn. September 15 grain was gradually increased by feeding in the evening, starting with a small handful and getting them on full feed by October 10. As the weather grew colder, the corn was slightly increased. From October 10 chopped mangels have been fed, starting with ½ lb. daily, which have been used in place of alfalfa and cabbage. This was increased to 2 to 2½ lbs. a day. The appetite and condition of the wethers has, of course, guided the amount to be fed.

The average daily gain on the entire feeding period has been from .3 to .44 lb.

Miss Geneva Moser, aged 21 years, has defeated eight male candidates for the office of auditor of St. Clair county, Illinois.

TO FILM PHOTOPLAY AMID ARCTIC WASTES.

Metro Company of Players Leaves Soon For Frozen Labrador.

In the fastnesses of ice and snow in Labrador, a company of Metro players will very soon be at work on a marvelous five-part feature production, which promises to be one of the most notable and unusual ever planned for the Metro program. The company will shortly leave Portland, Maine, for the frozen North in two ships, one of which is a staunch Arctic-going vessel, and the other a tramp steamer, which will be used in staging this unusual photoplay. In the final scene in which it is used it will be shown in a head-on collision with a huge iceberg.

Hamilton Revelle, one of the foremost leading men on the English-speaking stage, who was last seen in the Metro production, "An Enemy to Society," is to be starred in the production. O. A. C. Lund, who recently joined the Metro staff of directors, will produce this five-part drama of the North. Real icebergs and bona fide views of the desolate Arctic wastes, which are required in the development of the story, led to the determination of the Metro officials to send the company under Mr. Lund's direction into the Labrador region.

Through the courtesy of Metro, Mr. Revelle has been playing in the big Broadway stage success, "Fair and Warmer," but was compelled to leave the cast when his services were required for this feature. He is under a long contract to appear exclusively in Metro wonderplays.

CLYDE FITCH'S MASTERPIECE, "THE CITY."

"The City," universally acclaimed at the time of its production as the greatest play written by the late Clyde Fitch, master dramatist of America, has been put on the screen. No such scenes as attended the opening performance of "The City" at the Lyric Theatre have ever been witnessed before or since at the premiere of a New York theatrical production. The audience became hysterical in its expression of approval, rising in a body and cheering as the curtain rose again and again on the final tableau.

There is no reason to believe that the play has lost anything by its transference to the screen. On the contrary, the film version is expected to prove even more a sensation than the original play. The story is maintained intact with the addition of scenes of an elaborate character. Thurlow Bergen, well known throughout the United States as a Broadway and stock star, will be seen in the principal role, associated with a company of carefully selected photoplay favorites.

This is the first film presentation of a Clyde Fitch play. The brilliant dramatist died just prior to "The City's" opening night in New York, and with him America lost its greatest contributor to modern dramatic literature. His last work brought forth glowing commendation not only from the press of the nation, but from great leaders in all phases of public life. Prominent clergymen and the heads of big universities added their tributes to the expression of admiration that poured in from statesmen and educators all over the land.

"POWDER"—BIG WAR FILM PLAY.

Thrills With Tremendous Scenes of Intrigue and Infamy!

Two warring nations plot to control a new American explosive. This lays the basis of the stirring Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition—"Powder," in five parts, to be released February 10. A stupendous production has been given this titanic film drama, under the direction of Arthur Maude, a brother of the celebrated English actor, Cyril Maude, internationally known for his impersonation of "Grumpy" and other famous roles.

A veritable maelstrom of plot and counterplot, of humanitarianism and sordid ambitiousness, of love and heroism, carries the participants from range of shell fire in the war zone to the American munitions plant and back again, to the congressional committee and the foreign embassies! A whirlpool of sensations draws them down—the conspiring foreign representatives—the woman spy in the confidence of the three governments—the pacifist opposed to "Powder"—the money-mad manufacturer who sacrifices his son on the pires of his god of gold!

Arthur Maude and Constance Crawley—known for the big parts they play in Mutual Masterpictures, in "Lord Loveland Discovers America" and others—in this electrifying drama enact stirring roles with convincing realism.

MYSTERIOUS BLONDE AT AMERICAN STUDIOS.

A remarkable demonstration recently followed the report that a new blonde beauty and famous film star had arrived at the studios at Santa Barbara, California. A great crowd came to admire the charmer and crowded Director McMackin's stage so badly that the production of "Billy Van Deusen and the Vampire" was halted temporarily. Those who discovered the identity of the blonde did not divulge the secret but kept spreading the report until the "Keep Out" signs were put up.

The cause of the sensation was Al Santell, who plays female parts with rare femininity, and who, as the vampire, makes heaps of trouble for our funny fat friend, Billy Van Deusen, in the latest "Beauty" comedy to be released February 13th. John Steppling, Carol Halloway and John Sheehan lead the piece and race away with a lot of new stuff—providing an irresistible laugh-producer.

SECOND "OLD HOMESTEAD."

"The Spoilers" bids fair to become a second "Old Homestead" in point of endurance. The American people have taken the picturization of Rex Beach's great story to their hearts and instances are many where numerous individuals have seen it six or seven times. The thrill that comes with that titanic struggle of brain and brawn cannot be gainsaid, and the de luxe edition in twelve reels about to be issued by the Selig Company promises to create a sensation.

MISS CLAYTON BUYS PRIZE WINNING DOG.

Marguerite Clayton, whose many friends will see her again in Essanay's latest five-act release, "Vultures of Society," has just purchased a beautiful Russian wolfhound. The dog is nearly as large as Marguerite herself and, being a prize winner, the young actress and her pet make quite a "beauty and beast" picture when strolling along the street. Lillian Drew, Marguerite Clayton, E. H. Calvert and Ernest Maupain make up the leading roles in "Vultures of Society."

FACE PAINT UNNECESSARY.

Harry Lichtig, who attends to most of the engagements at the World's Film's Peerless studio in Fort Lee, receives many a queer application for work in the pictures. Here is one that came by mail last week:

World Film Corporation.

Gents:

Much against my families' wishes I have decided to be a movie actor and as I have seen pictures so much and like them awfully much, I want you should have the first chancet to hire me. I would make a fine type for leading man, hero parts, first villens comical caracters and Jewish.

Another reason why you should ceaze this chancet is that you would save a lot of money on me in face paint. I understand all movie actors paint their faces yellow. This would not be necessary in my case as I have the jaundice.

JUNE ELVIDGE.

Few film players have made such swift progress toward the stellar regions of the screen world as Miss June Elvidge who, after only six months' experience before the camera, is featured in a five-part drama, "Love's Crucible." Miss Elvidge owes her success to her unflinching determination to "get there," aided and abetted, of course, by her undoubted beauty and photographic possibilities.

This young player joined the World Film Stock company at Fort Lee last June after two years at the Winter Garden, the second of which she spent as understudy to Josie Collins, whose part she played on the road. Miss Elvidge hails from Pittsburgh. She is broad shouldered, athletic girl, with golf cups, sailing trophies and medals for horsemanship galore to her credit.

Marie, Helene, Camile and Madeleine Vatel, sisters, have been decorated with the cross of war by the French government.

Miss Frances Thornton of Kansas City, Mo., has become known as the "speed demon," because of her daring in driving racing motor cars.

Mrs. John W. Griggs, wife of one time Attorney-General Griggs, is the owner of a priceless set of autographs of notable people.

Notes and Comment

Of Interest to Women Readers.

For the Housewife.

An excellent substitute for cloth in window washing is an old newspaper or a chamois skin, which should be wrung from the water and passed rapidly over the glasses.

If the house is infested with ants, dip a sponge into sweetened water and lay it where they can get at it. They will soon cluster upon it and the sponge can then be dropped in hot water.

If a cake sticks to the pan, turn the pan upside down and lay on the bottom of it a cloth wet with cold water. After about five minutes the cake can usually be removed quite easily.

A simple method to soften hard water is to boil it for a quarter of an hour, pour it into an earthen jug, add a quarter of an ounce of common soda to each two gallons, stir, and when cold carefully pour off the clear water.

Almost every one has the experience, when filling and icing a layer cake, of the layers slipping and sliding, thereby causing an unattractive looking cake when dry. If you will stick two or even three of the skewers used by butchers down through the layers they will hold the cake in place until set.

If your vegetables or preserves scorch while cooking, advises a cook, remove the vessel instantly from the range and set it in a pan of cold water, letting it remain there for ten or fifteen minutes. At the end of that time you will find that the scorched taste has all vanished from the food. When cooking cabbage, turnips, or onions boil at the same time some vinegar with few spices. This will destroy all vegetable odor. When boiling a ham leave it in the water in which it has been boiled until it is quite cold. This will make it juicy and quite tender.

Jonquils and daffodils are placed to advantage in a brass or copper urn or vase.

Stale macaroons, which can be bought cheap at the baker's, make the tastiest addition to pudding and custards if pulverized and sprinkled over the top.

It is a good plan to keep the oven door open part of the time when not in use, so that all traces of gas or odors of food may escape.

When apples have to be cored but served whole, it is advisable to core before peeling them, as they are then less liable to break.

Should you spill hot fat on the floor or a wooden table, pour cold water upon it at once. It can then be more easily scraped off, not having had time to sink into the wood.

Folding coat hangers that fit in a flat leather case are useful for the traveler, for whom also are designed equally flat cases that contain folding Pullman slippers of soft leather.

Instead of always folding tablecloths and sheets lengthways, it is an excellent plan to sometimes fold them the other way so that the folds will be changed.

Jam which has been laid aside long and has got hard and sugary and unfit for use can be made quite as good as when new if it is put into the oven for a little while till the sugar melts and then left to cool.

If walnuts or any other kind of nuts are packed in layers of sand and kept in a cool place they will keep fresh for an indefinite period. Soak them in warm water for an hour before using if you would have them peel as if they had just been gathered fresh from the tree.

Fruit Dishes.

The fruits are so delicious and last so short a time that we should utilize them to the full to provide variety for our menus.

A thoughtless or uninterested housekeeper will so often order "blancmange and stewed fruit today" and "stewed fruit and custard tomorrow," but surely we can do better than this, although it is really more in the fresh methods of serving than actually new dishes that our changes will be discovered, says the Queen (London).

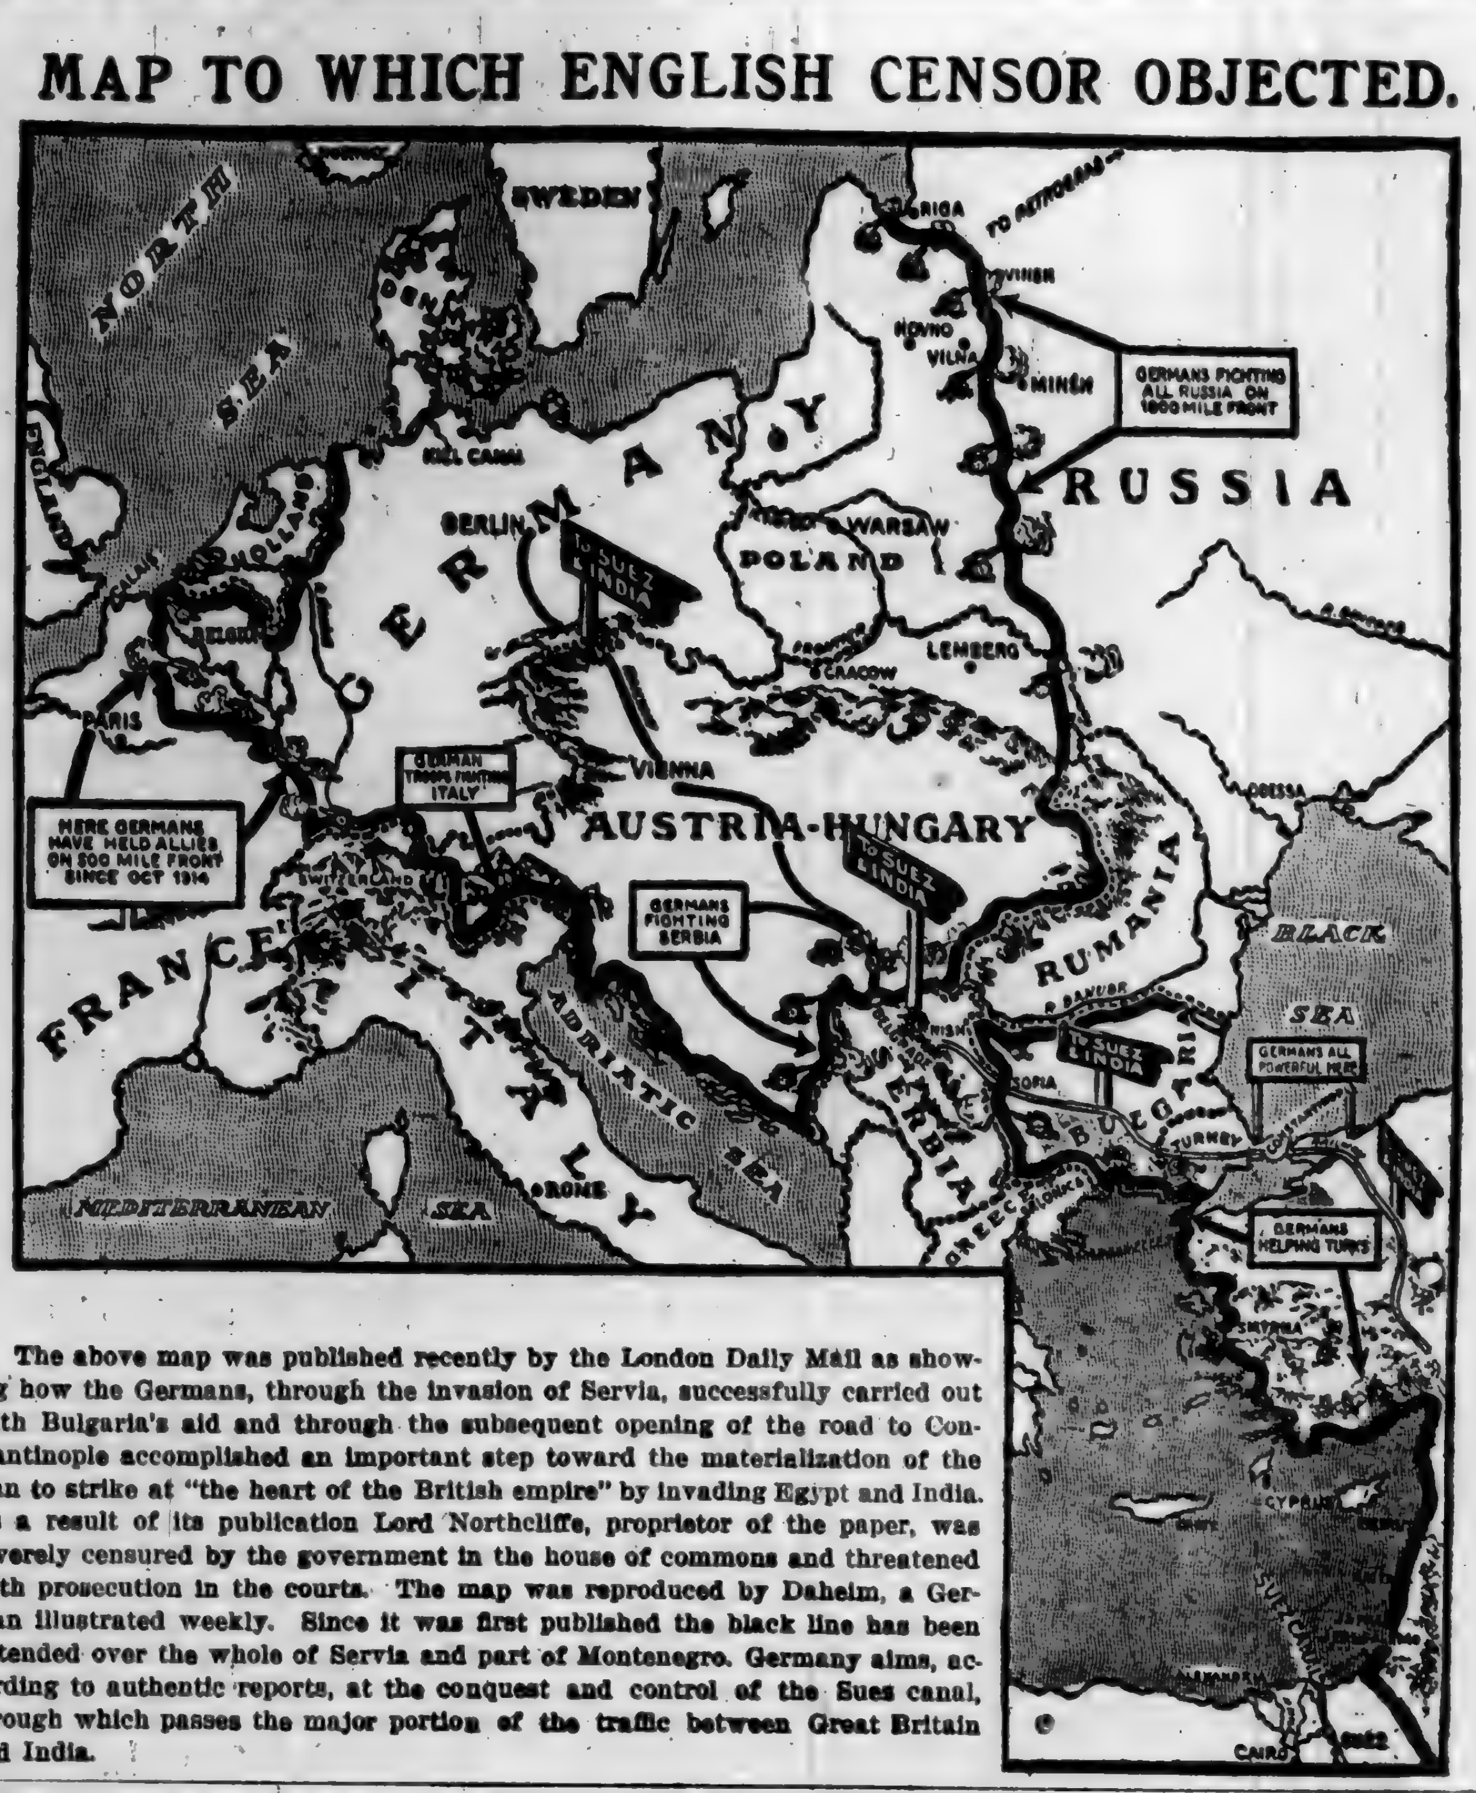
First, be sure that simplest dishes are perfectly prepared. Let the blancmange be a lustrous jelly, just the usual one and a quarter pint of milk and three tablespoons of cornflour, but simmered eight minutes and stirred all the time; or, if ground rice is used, add a well beaten egg and be careful it is not too stiff.

Custard could be made the previous day and thoroughly beaten till smooth or, if preferred, make it rather thicker than usual and turn out as a mold

Cook a rice pudding in a porridge saucepan for four hours till a creamy mass; or if using fine tapioca or semolina, add an egg when cooked and bake in a pie dish till set; rice cream can be set in a border mold or in tiny cups, and with all these accompaniments, be sure that whatever "stewed fruit" is used is gently simmered till tender in a little thick sugar-and-water syrup.

But many fruits are really much nicer made into a puree as follows: Stew the fruit till tender with a little water and sugar to sweeten in a jar in the oven, then rub through a sieve and serve in a glass dish, with cream or custard on top. Or just mix the puree with a small pot of cream and you have an excellent food; apples or gooseberries are the best.

MAP TO WHICH ENGLISH CENSOR OBJECTED.



The above map was published recently by the London Daily Mail as showing how the Germans, through the invasion of Servia, successfully carried out with Bulgaria's aid and through the subsequent opening of the road to Constantinople accomplished an important step toward the materialization of the plan to strike at "the heart of the British empire" by invading Egypt and India. As a result of its publication Lord Northcliffe, proprietor of the paper, was severely censured by the government in the house of commons and threatened with prosecution in the courts. The map was reproduced by Daheim, a German illustrated weekly. Since it was first published the black line has been extended over the whole of Servia and part of Montenegro. Germany aims, according to authentic reports, at the conquest and control of the Sues canal, through which passes the major portion of the traffic between Great Britain and India.

Dictates of Fashion

NEW STYLES ARE ON THE WAY.

If Queen Elizabeth could but see us now!

They say that clothes were never uglier than when she was here to wear them. And yet we have back-pedaled down the ages and clasped her farthingale not to our bosoms but around our lovely waists, downward from which they extend until we have hips on us like the side cargoes of a camel of Egypt! Truly, my paper friends, it is marvelous!

Shall we find further inspiration in the rayol appearance of the virgin queen? Let us hope not, since Walpole said that she had a pale Roman nose, which, no doubt, is more au fait than a red one, and yet it sounds doubtful.

These are trembling days. Weird things are doing in "the realms."

Even so, we should not mourn.

The farthingale is as mysteriously beautiful as its name. Called hip hoops it is even yet as lovely. Name them panniers if you like—and dream of Watteau! If fashion does no more for us than to make us happy—and nothing can do more than that—it gives us delightful glimpses of days that are gone, lives that have been lived splendidly, and arts that shall exist for all time.

Fashion a folly? Heavens, no! It is an institution as old as Eve.

Styles Looted From Period of Louis XV.

While Elizabeth may have and retain credit for the hip hoops, the outward arrangement of fabric is decidedly of the period of Louis XV.

They call them pannier draperies, because many are much longer than the pannier with which we have been familiar, that little shepherdess pouf on either side, arranged as if the lady had tucked up her frock to perform the humble duties of housework, permitting the display of a ravishing petticoat of chiffon and lace.

Besides the pannier there is also the hip ruffle—sometimes one, sometimes two, sometimes a family group, forsooth! When there are many they are caught up hither and thither, elsewhere and there with tiny clusters of artificial flowers.

Taffeta works up beautifully into these farthingale effects, and the rich metallic brocades are courtly and splendid. There is, naturally, a hankering for the Pompadour shades and the dull pink and faded blues of the French court. These two colors are combined in many an exquisite frock designed for evening wear. All the lovely shades which we know as petunia, begonia, bordeaux and dregs of wine, shades wavering between reds and purples or reds and lavenders, are about to have a wild and glorious vogue.

Tulle and Metallic Laces Are Combined.

The pannier gown is not confined to silk. Tulle is used, that perishable stuff which seems to have no body and which is nothingness held together with silken threads of no more substance than those of a cobweb blowing in the breeze. Combined with tulle, metallic laces are used. This is quite delightful, as it is utterly idiotic. But the heavy laces are employed for the underdrop. To place them on tulle is to have one's gown break its moorings and go heaven knows where nor heaven knows how. The gold and silver stuffs are never displayed boldly, but are veiled with tulle, while tulle forms huge billows about the hips. Little tinsel effects show up on the bodice. They take the form of flowerettes and leaves, or appear in conventional design.

The pointed bodice will remain as long as skirts are so abundantly full.

It does not give a long waistline, as one may suppose; everything depends upon just how and where the gownmaker orders that the waist may nip in. Its effect is entirely in the cut and seam arrangements.

Tabliers Now Have Ruffles on Them.

A variation of the pannier is the tablier, which is edged with ruffles of fabric or laces and which may appear at the front only or at the front and back. In any event it must drape at the hips. Enormously wide ribbons are used also for panniers, and sometimes the designer shows much human gayety by finishing the job with a frivolous and abundant sash at the back.

All of which makes a decidedly sharp line between waist and hips. That is the idea now, ever-present, ever-prevailing. And there is a certain sad consolation in the fact that if one cannot pull in one can, at any rate, puff out. The draped silhouette is the order of the day. Escape it if you desire, oh, lovely one, but remember you will be dropping off of the edge of things if you do. We do not refer to the street gown. That must be more or less plain. But for the grand occasion you must be as drapy as drapes can possibly drape you.

Bodices Remain of Victorian Mode.

These draped effects bring with them bodices of many forms.

There is the square neck and elbow sleeve, edged with ruffles, wholly a distinct part of the Louis periods. There is also the Victorian bodice with rounded neck, sloping shoulders and puff sleeves about as big as a minute. Also there is the fichu, which seems oddly enough out of place on an evening gown, but which appears just the same. All old rules are being broken these days, which makes fashions particularly alluring, zestful and altogether delightful. The little shoulder cape of tulle, part of which forms the sleeves, is also correct.

We wish also to add that many of the pointed bodices are stiffly boned; otherwise they would not stay put.

Everything, you see, is suggestive of the corset and the farthingale, the wasp waist and the draped hips. Also the corsage must remain very flat. The woman who has a boyish figure, as straight up and down as a lamp post, except as she pulls it in at the waistline, is the one who is envied by others of the feminine contingent who are builded more abundantly.

The "stouts," as they are so cruelly called by the garment trade, have still a difficult road to travel on the way to the goal called Fashion.

But the real charm of the frock is yet to be revealed. It is a fringe of crystal beads falling from the under petticoat of chiffon. Tiny strings of these beads are fluttering from the back of the corsage, down to the important cuff.

DICTATES OF FASHION.

There is simply no end to the usefulness of ribbon for frock trimming.

Paris favors the use of many artificial flowers for trimming evening gowns.

Occasionally there is an extreme gown which shows a trifle of Turkish influence.

Skating coats, like all other sport clothes, are made up in brilliant colors.

There is a suede waistcoat, soft and easy fitting, to wear under the motor coat.

Suit jackets are somewhat shorter. They have belts and pockets; also flaring tails.

The spring turbans are not worn straight on the head, but tipped slightly on one side.

The winter gown may be freshened by the addition of a straight little overjacket of chiffon or lace.

Picot edged taffeta as well as taffeta pinked as to edges forms a substitute for the inevitable fur trimming.

Cape attachments are considered smart. While there may be a few high collars, the high ones will be of the convertible order, for who wants to swathe the neck in humid weather? New knitted materials form smart sport suits. Glazed kid trims many suits and is used in combination with velvet and cloth when it does not form whole garments.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

Do all spinsters secretly hate old bachelors?

Early to bed and early to rise isn't bad—as a theory.

A man has no use for the pillmakers when he's lovesick.

Some men are like doormats—useful chiefly to be walked over.

But the man who shines in society seldom shines in his business.

A man must acknowledge that he's a chump before he can begin to acquire wisdom.

It takes a powerful magnifying glass to see anything good in some men—or women.

When a man smokes cigarettes and wears passionate socks—but why say it; no man ever does.

But a woman seldom sees the cloven hoof of a man until after she gets a whiff of his cloven breath.

A bachelor physician says the microbes in kisses are often fatal—at least they often develop into matrimonial germs.

Sometimes the world thinks a man wise simply because he doesn't make the mistake of talking when he has nothing to say.

Law or Laxity

Laxity of law enforcement in DeKalb Co., has resulted in almost absolute reign of the vicious element, grafters, pimps and smitchee; waste of peoples money, officials in league with vice and crime. I see it almost daily; brazen prostitutes on the streets, brothels unmolested. Why? Immorality rampant. Girls and boys subject to evil influences when worst for them. Rank lawlessness daily openly ignored. Legitimate business, life and welfare without protection. Reckless speeding in town and country without even protest from officials, endangering lives and property needlessly. Protests against lawlessness ignored until forced to act by outraged citisens or victims. I've seen too much Voters! It is up to you and if you will back me up in this fight for right, home, children, tax-payers, and justice by hanging another X onto them, you will help each other and your pocket-book most and harm no one. You can use the money these bums squander on fast women and booze, etc. How can a candidate keep still when all know the above things unless they favor them. They can't straddle the fence. They are on one side. Which? The sheriff's office is no place for a man who is afraid to do his duty for fear of offending someone. Haven't we had too many such? The result is with us and what a result with more unless stopped with that X.

LAW ENFORCEMENT

Many people seem to fear law enforcement and that I would be a crank if elected sheriff. Not much. I understand law enforcement to be protection of all, not a few. My aim would be to offend few and arrest few. To protect right not wrong. To let it be known that law would be enforced and act when defied. Not rashly but firmly and kindly, as a friend not an enemy, except when necessary. Only a few will refuse to obey law if asked to do so in a friendly way. That few deserve no leniency. Law is for the good of all not a few, and will work a hardship only on persistant, selfish offenders. Many violate laws, like speeding, only because there is no restraint and restraint need not be drastic to be effective. Drastic action would be about as bad as none.

I enjoy no ones downfall, neither would I neglect duty and be morally responsible for it as is often the case. Why do not other candidates take a stand for what they know is right? Politics. Hang such politics designed especially as a skin game. Voters the victims, candidates victims of the ring, often willingly, that is the rub.

A PUBLIC OUTRAGE, IF SO.

It is reported from numerous scources, tactly admitted by those who should know, is openly stated with names on the streets of Auburn and seems undenied, that certain ring politicians are attempting to control the appointing of rural carriers to the two vacant routes out of Auburn, in open violation of law which says such would be illegal and appointee subject to removal. It seems a deliberate attempt to nulify and drag into politics the civil service which was designed to prevent political control and limit to merit alone. It seems a conspiracy against Federal laws that should be reported to the Federal grand jury for investigation and if found so, subject to severe penalty. To substitute politics for law and justice and being myself one of the high three in the examination for rural carriers (not official, but obtained by comparison of grades, and all three Republicans) it becomes personal and I believe the delay caused by politics. It seems similar to the Terre Haute election fraud case where more than 100 were convicted. When a Federal jury gets after a case there is something done. If Republicans would do the same trick I would say the same. Is it not time to put a stop to this?

DO YOU REALIZE that at this time, when the nation is confronted with problems concerning a World's war, you do not want to break in a new man?

DO YOU REALIZE that your Congressman is the ranking member of the Foreign Affairs Committee and that you rob our Government of the services of a man who is needed now more than at any other time in the past?

DO YOU REALIZE that the many things started for your benefit can only be completed by the man who secured the promise therefor and that they were given to him in consideration of hard and faithful service?

Make Democratic Success Sure; Vote For Harry Hilgeman For Congress.

The welfare of the Twelfth district and the success of the Democratic party depend wholly and entirely upon the candidate who is best able to hold the elements of his party together and win for it a victory at the election next fall. The candidate who is to carry his party to victory at the November election must be nominated next week at the primary, and it is therefore necessary and essential that the voters choose the best man. Knowing these facts to be true, the democrats of Allen county decided that the man who possessed those qualifications was Harry H. Hilgemann. He was closing his second term as prosecutor, and was free from entanglements that usually weaken a candidate. Mr. Hilgemann had no sore spots to heal, and was in a position to enter this race with a free and open hand. His friends, and democrats all over the county knew that he would make an ideal candidate and that he would be able to wage a vigorous campaign to a successful conclusion. Eloquent on the stump, fearless in his duties, a man with a broad mind, character above reproach and a man who makes friends wherever he goes. Mr. Hilgemann entered this race to win, knowing that his nomination at the primaries inevitably means his election in November. Mr. Hilgemann was twice a leader of his party in Allen county and, if nominated for Congress Tuesday, Mar. 7, he can again lead his party to victory next fall. To make democratic success in this district sure, vote for Harry H. Hilgemann for Congress at the primary.

THE CHIEF LEGATEE

by ANNA KATHERINE GREEN.

AUTHOR OF "THE LEAVENWORTH CASE," "BEHIND CLOSED DOORS" ETC.

COPYRIGHT, [illegible]

SYNOPSIS

Chapters I to III—A few hours after marriage the wife of Roger J. Ransom is missing from the hotel where they have just registered. A detective, Mr. Gerrage, is called into the case. The bride, formerly Miss Georgian Hazen, becomes alarmed over something which happened while passing down the aisle from the altar.

While standing at the hotel desk with the groom the woman disappears. A man with a twisted face was seen whispering to the bride at the reception. Evidently flight was meditated after that meeting.

The bell boy noted peculiarities about the woman and was the only one who noticed her slip away. The detective claims the maid was a substitute for the wife, and rode from the house to the hotel while the wife left by the basement door in the maid's clothes.

Chapters IV to V—The woman who left by the basement door was traced to a meeting with the man with a broken jaw. Ransom receives a note from his wife who claims to have found a long lost twin sister, supposed to have been dead. The twin is of unbalanced mind and stone deaf. Ransom meets the man with the broken jaw and who declares himself to be Mrs. Ransom's brother who was in need of money.

Chapters VI to VII.—Ransom interviews his wife's lawyer, who insists that she has a twin sister. When leaving the office the office boy gives him his wife's address.

Ransom goes to Stitford, Conn., and finds the hotel where his wife has secured rooms. He visits the cemetery and finds a man about to efface from the tombstone the record of the death of the twin sister, which was supposed to have occurred years previously. He also finds the announcement of the death of the man with whom he had recently talked, who claimed to be his wife's brother.

Chapters IX and X.—Ransom learns that his wife, her sister, and the lawyer, are coming to the inn.

The sister who had left the coach for a walk appears later and he is surprised at the resemblance to his wife. He learns that his wife has had the lawyer draw her will.

Chapters XI to XIII—The inmates of the hotel were aroused by a piercing cry in the night. The sister declared that Ransom's wife had gone to the waterfall to destroy her life.

The mill stream never gave up its dead. A letter was found from Mrs. Ransom confirming the fact that she had tired of life. Some doubt was expressed by the detective.

Chapters XIV and XV—After a full investigation of the house and grounds by both Ransom and the lawyer come to the conclusion that the woman remaining in the hotel and known as Anitra was Ransom's wife.

Chapter XV to XVIII—Ransom is convinced, after following several clues, that he was mistaken and that his wife had perished.

The sister endeavors to win Ransom's love, but is repulsed.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

"Don't look at my hands. I know they are not real nice like sister's. But I'm learning. She showed me how to rub them white and cut the nails. A woman did it for me the first time and I've been doing it ever since, but they don't look like hers, for all the pretty rings she bought me. Was I foolish to want the rings? I always had rings when I was with the gipsies. They were not gold ones, but I liked them. And Mother Duda liked rings too and made me one once out of beads. It was on my finger when my sister took me home with her. That is why she brought me these. She didn't think the bead one was good enough. It wasn't much like hers."

Ransom recalled the diamonds and the rich sapphires he had been accustomed to see on his bride's hand.

But this did not engage him long. Some method of communication must be found with this girl, which could be both definite and unmistakable. Feeling in his pocket, he brought out pencil and a small pad. He would write what he had to say, and was hesitating over the words with which to open this communication, when he saw her hand thrust itself between his eyes and the pad, and heard these words uttered in a resolute tone, but not without a hint of sadness:

"I cannot read. I have never been taught."

CHAPTER XVIII.

God's Forest, Then Man's.

THE pencil and pad fell from Mr. Ransom's hands. He stared at the girl who had made this astonishing statement, and his brain whirled.

As for her, she simply stooped and picked up the pad.

"You feel badly about that," said she. "You want me to read. I'll learn. That will make me more like sister. But I know some things now. I know what you are thinking about. You are curious about my life, what it has been and what kind of a girl I am. I'll tell you. I can talk if I cannot hear. I heard up to two years ago. Shall I talk now? Shall I tell you what I told Georgian when she found me crying in the street and took me home to her house?"

He nodded blindly.

With a smile as beautiful as Georgian's—for a moment he thought more beautiful—she drew him to a seat. She was all fire and purpose now. The spark of intelligence which was not always visible in her eye burned brightly. She would have looked lovely even to a stranger, but he was not thinking of her looks, only of the hopelessness of the situation, its difficulties and possibly its perils.

"I don't remember all that has happened to me," she began, speaking very fast. "I never tried to remember, when I was little; I just lived, and ran wild in the roads and woods like the weasels and the chipmunks. The gipsies were good to me. I had not a cross word in years. The wife of the king was my friend, and all I knew I learned from her."

"You are curious about my life."

Then she went on to tell how, when the king began to show fondness for her, after she had got beyond the years of girlhood, the queen sent her on an errand to a small town, and when she returned the gipsies were gone; now, thrown upon her own resources, she was obliged to hunt work. She drifted to New York city, where she peddled, was persecuted, underwent numberless privations, and almost starved, for years. She got into association with poor and lawless people, among whom one night there was a dynamite explosion,—the explosion of a bomb—which caused the loss of her hearing.

"All sorts of policemen came into the house, doctors came, priests came. The old life was over, and when the food was all gone from the shelves, I took my little basket and went out, not meaning to come back again. And I did not. I sold my basket out; got a handful of pennies and went to the market to get something to eat. Then I went into a park, where there were benches, and sat down to rest. I did not know of any place to go to and began to cry, when a lady stopped before me, and I looked up and saw myself.

"I thought I was dreaming, or had the fever again, as when I was sick with my ear, and I thought it was myself as I would look in heaven, for she had such beautiful clothes on and looked so happy. But when she talked, I could see her lips move and I couldn't hear; and I knew that I was just in the park with my empty basket and my onion and bread, and that the lady was a lady and no one I knew, only so like what I had seen of myself in the glass that I was shaking all over, and she was shaking all over, and neither of us could look away. And still her lips moved, and seeing her at last look frightened and angry that I didn't answer, I spoke and said that I was deaf; that I was very sorry that I couldn't hear because we looked so much alike, though she was a great lady and I was a very, very poor girl who hadn't any home or any friends, or anything to wear or eat but what she saw. At this her eyes grew bigger even than before, and she tried to talk some more, and when I shook my head she took hold of my arm and began drawing me away, and I went and we got on the cars, and she took me to a house and into a room where she took away my basket and put me in a chair, and took off first her hat, then my own, and showed me the two heads in a glass, and then looked at me so hard that I cried out, 'Sister,' which made her jump up and put her hand on her heart, then look at me again harder and harder, till I remember way back in my life, and I said:

"'When I was a little girl I had a sister they called my twin. That was before I lived in the woods with the gipsies. Are you that sister grown up? The place where we played together had a tall fence with points at the top. There were flowers and there were bushes with currants on them all round the fence.'

'She made a sudden move and I felt her arms about my neck."

"She made a sudden move, and I felt her arms about my neck. I think she cried a little. I didn't, I was too glad. I knew she was that sister the moment our faces touched, and I knew she would care for me, and that I needn't go back into the streets any more. So I kissed her and talked a good deal and told her what I've been telling, and she tried to answer, tried as you did to write, but all I could understand was that she meant to keep me, but not in the place where we were, and that I was to go out again. But she fixed me up a little before we went out, and she bought me some things, so that I looked different. Then we went into another house, where she talked with a woman for a long time, and then sat down with me and moved her lips very patiently, motioning me to watch and try to understand. But I was frightened and couldn't. So she gave up and, kissing me, made motions with her hands which I understood better; she wanted me to stay there while she went away, and I promised to if she would come back soon. At this she took out her watch. I was pleased with the watch, and she let me look at it, and inside against the cover I saw a picture. You know whose it was."

The depths to which her voice sank, the trembling of her tones, startled Ransom. Had she been less unfortunate, he would have moved to a different seat, but he could not show her a discourtesy after so pitiful a tale. But the nod he gave her was a grave one, and her cheek flushed and her head fell, as she softly added: "It was the first time I ever saw a face I liked—you won't mind my saying so, —and I wanted to keep the watch, but sister carried it away. She didn't tell me what it meant, her having your picture where she could see it all the time, but when she came again she made me know that you and she were married, by pointing at the picture and then throwing something white over her head; I didn't ask for the watch after that, but—"

A far-away look, a trembling of her whole body, finished this ingenuous confession. Ransom edged himself away and then was sorry for it, for her lip quivered and her hands, from being quiet, began that nervous interlacing of the fingers which bespeaks mental perturbation.

"I am very ignorant," she faltered; "perhaps I have said something wrong. I don't mean to, I want to be a good girl and please you, so that you won't send me away now sister is gone. Ah, I know what you want," she suddenly broke out, as he seized her by the arm and looked inquiringly at her. "You want me to tell why I jumped out of the carriage that night and vexed Georgian and was naughty and wouldn't speak to her. I can't, I can't. You wouldn't like it if I did. But I'm sorry now, and will never vex you but do just what you want me to. Shall I go upstairs now?"

He shook his head. How could he let her go with so much unsaid? She had talked frankly till she had reached the very place where his greatest interest lay. Then she had suddenly shown shyness of her subject and leaped the gap, as it were, to the present moment. How recall her to the hour when she had seen Georgian for the second time? How urge her into a description of those days succeeding his wife's flight from the hotel, of which he had no account, save the feverish lines of the letter she had sent him. He was racking his brain for some method of communicating his wishes to Anitra, when he heard steps behind him, and, turning, saw the clerk approaching him with a telegram.

He glanced at her slyly as he took it. Somehow he couldn't get used to her deafness, and expected her to give some evidence of surprise or curiosity. But she was still studying her hands, and as his eyes lingered on her downcast face he saw a tear well from her lids and wet the cheek she held partly turned from him. He wanted to kiss that tear, but refrained and opened his telegram instead. It was from Mr. Harper, and ran thus:

"Expect a visitor. The man we know has left the St. Denis."

CHAPTER XIX.

In Mr. Deo's Room.

A PREY to fresh agitation, he stepped back to Anitra's side. Surely she must understand that it was Georgian and not herself about whom he was most anxious to hear. But she did not seem to. The smile with which she greeted him suggested nothing of the past. It spoke only of the future.

"I will learn to be like sister," she impulsively cried out, rising and beaming brightly upon him. "I will forget the old gipsy ways and try to be nice and pretty like my sister. And you shall learn me to read and write. Then I shall know what you think; now I only know how you feel."

He shook his head, a little sadly, perhaps. There were people who could teach her these arts, but not he. He had neither the ability, the courage, nor the patience.

"Then some one shall learn me," she loudly insisted, her cheek flushing and her eye showing an angry spark. "I will not be ignorant always; I will not, I will not." And turning, she fled from his side.

The possibly speedy appearance on the scene of Georgian's so-called brother did not detract from his difficulty. He felt helpless without the support of Mr. Harper's presence. At two o'clock occurred the event of which he had been forewarned. A carriage drove up to the hotel and from it stepped two travelers; one of them a stranger, the other the man with the twisted jaw. Mr. Ransom advanced to meet the latter. He was anxious to listen to his first inquiries and, if possible, be the person to answer them.

He was successful in this. Mr Hazen no sooner saw him than he accosted him without ceremony.

"What is this I hear and read about Georgian and her so-called twin?" he cried. "Nothing that I can believe, I want you to know. Georgian may have drowned herself. That is credible enough. But that the girl we read about in the papers and whom she evidently induced to come to this place with her should be the dead girl called Anitra—why, that is all bosh—a tale to deceive the public, and possibly you, but not one to deceive me. The co-incidence is much too improbable."

"'There are stranger things in heaven and earth'"—quoted Ransom; but Hazen was already in conversation with the group of hotel idlers who had crowded up at sound of his loud voice.

After a careful look which had taken in all of their faces, he had approached one young fellow, covering the lower part of his face as he did so.

"Halloo! Yates," he called out.

"What is this I hear about Georgian and her so-called twin?"

"Don't you remember the day we tied two chickens together, leg to leg, and sent them tumbling down the hill back of old Wylie's barn?"

"Alf Hazen!" shouted the fellow, thus accosted. "Why, I thought you—"

"Dead, eh? Of course you did. So did everybody else. But I've come to life, you see. With sad marks of battle on me," he continued, dropping his hand. "You all recognize me?"

"Yes, yes," rose in one acclaim from a dozen or more throats after a moment of awkward uncertainty.

"I know the eyes," vigorously asserted one.

"And the voice," chimed in another.

"How did it happen, Alf? What took off your jaw?"

"I'll tell you about that later," he replied, after silence had in a measure been restored. "What I want to say now is this. Is it believable that simultaneously with my own return from the grave another member of my family should reappear before you from an older and much more certain burying? I tell you no. The riddle is one that calls for quite another solution and I have come to assist you in finding it."

Here he cast a sinister glance at Ransom.

The latter met the implied accusation with singular calmness.

"Any assistance will be welcome," said he, "which will enable us to solve this very serious problem."

"I will explain myself to you," said Hazen, "but not to this crowd. And not to you till I am sure of the facts which as yet have reached me only through the newspapers. Let me hear a full account of what has transpired here since you all came to town."

"Follow me," was the quiet reply. "There is a room on this very floor where we can talk undisturbed."

Hazen stepped after Ransom into the small room where the latter had held his first memorable conversation with the lawyer.

"Now," said he as the door swung to behind them, "plain language and not too much of it. I have no time to waste, but the truth about Georgian I must know."

Ransom settled himself. He felt bound to comply with the other's request, but he wished to make sure of not saying too much, or too little. Hazen's attack had startled him. It revealed one of two things. Either this man of mystery had assumed the offensive to hide his own connection with this tragedy, or his antagonism was an honest one, springing from an utter disbelief in the circumstances reported to him by the press and such gossips as he had encountered on his way to Sitford.

With the first possibility he felt himself unable to cope without the aid of Mr. Harper; the second might be met with candor. He decided upon candor at all costs. It suited his nature best, and it also suited the strange and doubtful situation. Meeting the latter's eye frankly, he remarked:

"I have no wish to keep anything back from you. I am as much struck as you are by the mystery of this whole occurrence. I was as hard to convince."

Then he told his story without subterfuge or suppression. One thing, and only one thing, caused a movement in the set figure before him. When he mentioned the will which Georgian had made a few hours prior to her disappearance Hazen's hand slipped aside from the wound it had sought to cover, and Ransom caught sight of the sudden throb which deepened its hue. It was the one infallible sign that the man was not wholly without feeling, and it had sprung to life at an intimation involving money.

When his tale was quite finished, he rose. So did Hazen.

"Let us see this girl," suggested the latter.

It was the first word he had spoken since Ransom began his story.

"She is up-stairs. I will go see—"

"No, we will go see. I particularly desire to take her unawares."

Ransom offered no objection. Perhaps he felt interested in the experiment himself. Together they left the room, together they went up-stairs. A turmoil of questions followed them from the throng of men and boys gathered in the halls, but they returned no answer and curiosity remained unsatisfied.

Once in the hall above, Ransom stopped a moment to deliberate. He could not enter Anitra's room unannounced, and he could not make her hear by knocking. He must find the landlady.

He knew Mrs. Deo's room. He had had more than one occasion to visit it during the last two days. With a word of explanation to Hazen, he passed down the hall and tapped on the last door at the extreme left. No one answered, but the door standing ajar, he pushed it quietly open, being anxious to make sure that Mrs. Deo was not there.

The next moment he was beckoning to Hazen.

"Look!" said he, holding the door open with one hand and pointing with the other to a young girl sitting on a low stool by the window, mending, or trying to mend, a rent in her skirt.

"Why, that's Georgian!" exclaimed Hazen, and hastily entering he approached the anxious figure laboriously pushing her needle in and out of the torn goods and pricking herself more than once in the attempt.

"Georgian!" he cried again and yet more emphatically, as he stepped up in front of her.

The young girl failed to notice. Awkwardly drawing her thread out to its extreme length, she prepared to insert her needle again, when her eye caught sight of his figure bending over her, and she looked up quietly and with an air of displeasure, which pleased Ransom,—he could hardly tell why. This was before her eyes reached his face when they had, it was touching to see how she tried to hide the shock caused by its deformity, as she said with a slight gesture of dismissal:

"I'm quite deaf. I cannot hear what you say. If it is the landlady you want, she has gone down-stairs for a minute; perhaps, to the kitchen."

Hazen did not retreat; if anything he approached nearer, and Ransom was surprised to observe the force and persuasive power of his expression as he repeated:

"No nonsense, Georgian," opening and shutting his hands as he spoke, in curious gesticulations which her eye mechanically followed but which seemed to convey no meaning to her, though he evidently expected them to and looked surprised (Ransom almost thought baffled) when she shook her head and in a sweet, impassive way reiterated:

"I cannot hear and I do not understand the deaf and dumb alphabet. I'm sorry, but you'll have to go to some one else. I'm very unfortunate. I have to mend this dress and I don't know how."

Hazen, who could hardly tear his eyes from her face, fell slowly back as she painfully and conscientiously returned to her task. "Good God!" he murmured, as his eye sought Ransom's. "What a likeness!" Then he uttered two or three quick sentences which Ransom could not catch.

His persistence, or the near approach of his face to hers, angered her. Rising quickly to her feet, she vehemently cried out:

"Go away from here! It is not right to keep on talking to a deaf girl after she has told you she cannot hear you." Then catching sight of Ransom, who had advanced a step in his sympathy for her, she gave a little sigh of relief and added querulously:

"Make this man go away. This is the landlady's room. I don't like to have strangers talk to me. Besides—" here her voice fell, but not so low as to be inaudible to the subject of her remark, "he's not pretty. I've seen enough men and women who are—"

At this point Ransom drew Hazen out into the hall.

"What do you think now?" he demanded.

Hazen did not reply. The room they had just left seemed to possess a strange fascination for him. He continued to look back at it as he preceded Ransom down the hall. Ransom did not press his questions, but when they were on the point of separating at the head of the stairs, he held Hazen back with the words:

"Let us come to some understanding. Neither of us can desire to waste strength in wrong conclusions. Can that woman be other than your own sister?"

"No." The denial was absolute. "She is my sister."

"Anitra?" emphasized Ransom.

The smile which he received in reply was strangely mirthless.

"I never rush to conclusions," was Hazen's remark after a moment of possibly mutual heart-beat and unsettling suspense. "Ask me that same question to-morrow. Perhaps by then I shall be able to answer you."

CHAPTER XX.

Between the Berry Bushes.

NO." The word came from Ransom. He had reached the end of his patience and was determined to have it out with this man on the spot.

"Come into my room," said he. "If you doubt her, you doubt me; and in the present stress of my affairs this demands an immediate explanation."

"I have no time to enter your room, and I cannot linger here any longer talking on a subject which at the present moment is not clear to either of us," was the resolute if not quite affable reply. "Later, when my conclusions are made, I will see you again. Now I am going to eat and refresh myself. Don't follow me; it will do you no good."

He turned to descend. Ransom had an impulse to seize him by his twisted throat and drag from him the secret which his impassive features refused to give up. But Ransom was no fool and, stepping back out of the way of temptation, he allowed him to escape without further parley.

Then he went to his room. But, after an hour or two spent with his own thoughts, his restlessness became so great that he sought the gossips below for relief. He found them all clustered about Hazen, who was reeling off stories by the mile. This was unendurable to him and he was striding off, when Hazen burst away from his listeners and, joining Ransom, whispered in his ear:

"I saw her go by the window just now on her way up-street. What can she find there to interest her? Where is she going?"

"I don't know. She doesn't consult me as to her movements. Probably she has gone for a walk. She looks as if she needs it."

"So do you," was the unexpected retort given by Hazen, as he stepped back to rejoin his associates.

Ransom paused, watching him askance in doubt of the suggestion, in doubt of the man, in doubt of himself. Then he yielded to an impulse stronger than any doubt and slipped out into the highway, where he turned, as she had turned, up-street.

But not without a struggle. He hated himself for his puppet-like acceptance of the hint given him by a man he both distrusted and disliked. He felt his dignity impaired and his self-confidence shaken, yet he went on, following the high road eagerly and watching with wary eye for the first glimpse of the slight figure which was beginning to make every scene alive to him.

It was the cemetery road, and odd as the fancy was, he felt that he should overtake her at the old gate, behind which lay so many of her name. Here he had seen her name before its erasement from the family monument, and here he should see—could he say Anitra if he found her bending over those graves; the woman who could not hear, who could not read,—whose childish memory, if she had any in connection with this spot, could not be distinct enough or sufficiently intelligent to guide her to this one plot? No! Human credulity can go far, but not so far as that. He knew that all his old doubts would return if, on entering the cemetery, he found her under the brown shaft carved with the name of Hazen. The test was one he had not sought and did not welcome. Yet he felt bound, now that he recognized it as such, to see it through and accept its teaching for what it surely would be worth. Only he began to move with more precaution and studied more to hide his approach than to give any warning of it.

The close ranks of the elderberry bushes lining the fences on the final hill-top lent themselves to the concealment he now sought. As soon as he was sure of her having left the road he drew up close to these bushes and walked under them till he was almost at the gate. Then he allowed himself to peer through their close branches and received an unexpected shock at seeing her figure standing very near him, posed in an uncertainty which, for some reason, he had not expected, but which restored him to himself, though why he had not the courage, the time, nor the inclination to ask.

OKLAHOMA PIE GIRL A LOSER

SHE ADMITTED IT "RAN OVER"

Anyhow Her Friends Admit Creations Are Good Enough for Them

Enid, Okla.—Miss Ressie Warrenberg of Enid claims the pie baking championship of Oklahoma.

She goes still further and claims the championship in this intricate art in Kansas and Texas also.

But when she went to Denver to compete with all the pie bakers of the West, she, like the Irishman that said he could whip anybody in the United States, took in too much territory. She was defeated by Mrs. Charles E. Cummings of Denver.

Miss Warrenberg has met pie bakers of the Southwest in numerous contests and has always come away with highest honors. She believed her pies compared favorably with any in the West and went to Denver to show her skill. It was in the cooking contest of the Housewives' League, held in connection with the Colorado Food Products Show that she met her match.

At that, the Oklahoma daughter was not badly beaten. The judges, three of them, gave Mrs. Cummings and Miss Warrenberg two points, Mrs. Cummings winning on quality baking and Miss Warrenbery earning her points on flavor and time.

While the judges were deliberating and there was every prospect of a "hung jury" Miss Warrenberg solved the problem by confronting the judges by asking that the prize be awarded to her rival because her own pie, she admitted, had "run over." This was due to the fact, Miss Warrenberg asserts, that her pie pan was too shallow. The Oklahoma girl is the holder of six prize cups awarded her in previous contests.

Two hundred housewives watched with interest the prize pie baking contest in which Miss Warrenberg took part in Denver.

The pies turned out by both the first and second prize winning contestants were almost as perfect as it is possible to make them. They were of the apple species, the real old fashioned apple pie "like mother used to make," with the apples cut in great thick slices, dropping in flour and then laid in layers over the bottom crust. Lumps of rich butter and plenty of sugar were placed on top and then the top crust was added.

Two cups flour.
One teaspoonful salt.
Two thirds cup lard.
Ice water to moisten to the proper consistency for rolling.

This amount of material makes two pies with an upper and lower crust for each.

In speaking of mixing the dough for the crust she says:

"The flour should be sifted twice and salt added. All materials must be ice cold. Never work the lard into the flour with your fingers; rub it between your palms. It makes the crust flakier. If your hands are warm, cool them in ice water. When your lard is well mixed into the flour add ice water slowly. I never measure the water, as flour is sometimes much dryer than at other times. Mix in water until the dough barely hangs together, then roll with as little handling as possible."

NEGROES ACCUSED OF DIGGING INTO GRAVE CLOSED 61 YEARS

For Years Blacks at Gloster, Miss., Have Heard of Treasure in Coffin.

Gloster, Miss.—Charged with digging into the grave and breaking the glass in the coffin in which Dr. T. M. Rogers was buried 61 years ago, five negroes have been arrested here.

Dr. Rogers who was also a wealthy planter, while returning from a trip to the North was taken off a steamboat at Memphis, Tenn., because of suspicion that he was suffering from cholera. The same night he died and was temporarily interred there, the body later being removed to his place near here.

Negroes of the vicinity for years have been telling each other stories to the effect that a considerable sum in gold, which was buried with Dr. Rogers because of fear to take it from his clothing on account of cholera, was in the grave. The talk gradually enlarged the amount of money thus disposed of until one aged negro gave a vivid description of the big key of gold I saw put in the grave. It was search for this money that is believed to have caused the negroes to dig into the grave.

Woman 100, Walks Nine Miles

English, Ind.—Mrs. Mary Hobbs, who is 100 years old, residing at Birdseye, fifteen miles west of English, a few days ago walked from her home to that of her daughter at Doolittle Mills, a distance of nine miles. The following day she spent with her granddaughter, where five generations ate dinner together.

STUDIES OF MARKETING

Office of Markets and Rural Organization Reports on Results of Year's Work.

The advantages of cooperation in the marketing of farm products are emphasized in the annual report of the Office of Markets and Rural Organization of the Agricultural Department. "The conclusion seems warranted says the report, "that in communities where cooperation is practically applied to the farmer's business, the results obtained are far more satisfactory than those secured by individual methods." It is estimated that farmers' cooperative marketing and purchasing organizations will transact this year a total business amounting to more than $1,400,000,000. Agricultural cooperation in the United States is, therefore, far more prevalent than is generally believed, but it is not yet upon a sufficiently strong business basis. For this reason the Office of Markets has studied the various methods employed by these associations and has worked to devise means by which these methods can be perfected. The studies also have included the prevailing methods of marketing perishable products—cotton, grain, cotton seed, live stock, and animal products.

Studies have also been made of city markets in order to secure in this way information which may open up outlets for farm products. In this connection the report calls attention to the experimental work in distributing timely market information concerning perishable products. An effort has been made to keep producers informed of arrivals and conditions in the large markets and, on the other hand, to keep dealers informed of shipments from the important producing sections. Strawberries, peaches, tomatoes, and cantaloupes were the crops covered in this way during the past season. There is evidence, says the report, that as a result of this service, distribution has been improved, glutted markets have been prevented to some extent, total shipments from several districts have been greater than they would have been otherwise, and that large bodies of growers have received accurate and disinterested information concerning prevailing conditions in competing producing areas and in distant markets. Several important newspapers have cooperated in this work by publishing these reports, and there is reason to believe that others will publish them when the service is extended to cover products that are of particular interest to their readers.

The work of encouraging the proper preparation of products for market has been continued. The ultimate aim of this campaign of education is the national standardization of market grades and also packages or containers.

Investigation into the problems of transportation and storage has been continued with a view to determining the causes of the great loss of foodstuffs between the producer and the consumer. Experimental shipments by parcel post and express were made during the year with many kinds of fruits and berries, lettuce, milk, butter, eggs, sirup and vegetables.

Milk as a Source of Protein

A quart of milk and three quarters of a pound of sirloin steak contain about equal amounts of nutritive material. One quart of milk contains about 520 grains of protein besides its sugar and fat. Milk, then, is our cheapest and surest protein supply. To make it pure and appetizing is our problem. People who eat a great deal of meat rarely like milk. In fact milk and meat are not easily digested together. Of the two milk is so much cheaper and so much better in its results that a comparison with meat is hardly possible.

Good, well flavored milk means good healthy cows, well fed and well cared for. Really the fine flavored milk cannot be produced unless the milk is drawn in a covered pail. We have tried both ways and the milk drawn in a clothcovered pail is so much finer that the other method has long since been abandoned. Milk must be clean all the time. Then, too, milk must be cooled quickly and be kept cold all the time. This is old to most of our readers, but it must be repeated over and over again. The outdoor window shelf, mentioned recently is great for cooling milk quickly in clean air. Then cooled milk must be set on shelves in a clean place. Those who use separators will not be concerned with cream raising, but I cannot refrain from saying that one cow giving about sixteen quarts a day, furnishes all the cream and butter for a family of five, three quarts a day to a neighbor and a gallon of skimmilk every other day to a needy friend, besides a two quart pitcher full for every meal of the day. The milk that comes to the table is from thirty-six to forty-eight hours old, and it is simply delicious, the best protein food that can be found at any price. Milk goes into the cooking in every possible way.

When I hear persons say that the children do not like milk, that no one cares for milk in their family, I am pretty sure where the trouble began. The milk simply must be good, appetizing, cold and sweet. It may require a little time to cultivate a large demand for even so good an article of food as milk. But the cases are very few in which it cannot be done. "Without protein food all animals starve, even with an abundance of other food elements."

Let the farm boys and girls have a truck patch, the proceeds to be theirs.

RESEARCH URGED FOR ENGINEERS

DEAN GOETZE ASKS VAST LABORATORY WHICH WILL HELP INDUSTRIAL CORPORATIONS

NEEDS $500,000 TO START

His plan Based on Famous Schools of Engineering in Germany

New York—Research laboratories, the equal of those of Germany, are under consideration by Columbia University according to the report of Dean Frederick A. Goetze of the graduate engineering school.

After outlinging the successful research work accomplished by Dr. Walter Rittman and Profs. Armstrong and Pupin in the field of wireless telephony and telegraphy, Dean Goetze's report says:

"There is no doubt that much could and should be done to extend our engineering research and to make it of even greater value to the university and to the industries of our country.

"Many of us are firmly convinced that this can best be accomplished by establishing, on a site of ample era, easily accessible to the university, but among neighbors who will not be too particular as to the smells and noises which we will create, laboratories adequately equipped for all branches of industrial engineering research and administered by the heads of four engineering departments, to which manufacturers and practising engineers could turn for the solution of problems which are beyond the scope of their equipment or the capabilities of their force.

"In my mind these laboratories should be patterned after those of the German Reichsanstalt, connected with the Technische Hochshule at Charlottenburg, and located in the outskirts of Berlin.

"If Columbia were to establish laboratories of this kind, equipped with every facility for experimentation and research with the staff of our technical schools available for consultation and advice manufacturers and individual experts would be glad to avail themselves of these facilities and to establish research fellowships for solving their industrial and engineering problems.

"These laboratories should be developed around a special technical library, the business of which should be to collect, compile and classify in a way to make it best available every scrap of information bearing upon the special problem to be investigated. At the present time our technical library facilities are rather meagre for a school of our standing.

"The cost will depend largely upon the site, which should be close to tidewater and railroad facilities. The site at the northeast corner of 116th street and Broadway has been tentatively assigned for the next applied science building. A building on this site would have to conform with Hamilton, Kent and Journalism and would cost at least $500,000. With the same amount of money we could buy a site with railroad and water facilities within five minutes walk of the university, erect on it a building twice the size of a modern factory construction and have about $150,000 left for equipment.

"We should however, make provision for extension and endowment as well, and from $2,000,000 to $5,000000 will be needed. It would not all be required at once, but in installments as the work developed and justified the expenditure. No greater or more enduring monument could be erected by the public spirited persons who would equip and endow laboratories for this purpose."

STUNG BY THOUSAND BEES

Falls Unconscious From Tree and Breaks Three Ribs.

Beaver, Pa.—William Scherm is in the hospital here suffering from at least a thousand bee stings. His condition is critical. Scherm climbed a tree and started to saw a limb on which the bees had swarmed. The limb broke and the angry bees attacked Scherm covering his head and ankles.

Fighting to save himself from the stinging of the insects he lost consciousness and fell to the ground, breaking three ribs and otherwise injuring himself.

Rescuers tried to reach the injured man, but were driven back by the bees. A hose was finally attached to a nearby hydrant and the bees were driven off by the stream of water.

"MOVE UP" ORDER NO GOOD

Street Car Passengers Not Pawns, Supreme Court Decides

Washington, D. C.—Railroads which take on more passengers than a car can seat have no right to move such passengers about "like pawns on a chess board," according to a decision by the District of Columbia Supreme Court.

A judgment of the lower court was affirmed, awarding $1,000 damages to William A. Morgan from the Capital Traction Company, whose motorman tried to enforce a move up front order.

BOY'S DEPOSITS REACH MILLION

At Age of 16 Starts First National Bank of Chickasha, Now Leading Concern.

Chickasha, Okla.—Twelve years ago Chickasha was a struggling country town with no sidewalks, no pavements—nothing but hopes and a future. It was located in the Indian country and nobody but members of the five civilized tribes owned property in the town or country around. It was yet the cattleman's country. There was scarcely an acre of land under cultivation in the country.

And, twelve years ago, Benjamin Johnson, a 16 year old boy, the son of Indian parents was as poor as the proverbial church mouse. But young Johnson was not like most Indian boys who spent their time riding cow ponies and lassoing wild steers. He was a boy with an ideal and he determined to live up to it. Altho he owned nothing, personally, except his little patch of unimproved land, he had a brother and other relatives who were possessed of considerable wealth, and they believed in and trusted the boy.

So, with the help of these relatives, this enterprising youth formed the First National Bank. The bank was located in a small one story frame structure. People laughed at young Johnson and made much fun of what they termed his mushroom bank. Nevertheless, within the year there were $16,000 on deposit there, most of it, to be sure, belonging to his relatives.

However, young Johnson never lost faith in his bank, his town or his county. The gloomier things looked and the tighter the money became, the more he boosted. He believed that some day the First National Bank would have a million dollars on deposit. Altho but a boy, he was the guiding spirit of the institution. The bank was his hobby, his one diversion.

Johnson joined in every movement which made for the upbuilding of his town and county. Finally he was elected president of the Chickasha Commercial Club. Outsiders became interested. They not only deposited their money in young Johnson's bank but they boosted for it, and the institution began to flourish.

It was the boast of the First National Bank that no honest man who ever asked for financial assistance was not given it. In 1907, during the financial panic, when big banks all over the country refused to make specie payments, the First National Bank of Chickasha, an Indian institution paid cold cash to every depositor who asked for it. Never was a clearing house certificate issued thru the teller's window of "Ben Johnson's bank."

The bank prospered. Gradually the deposits began to pile up, and about a year ago the concern was moved into its new quarters, a five story brick building, one of the finest in Oklahoma.

This year Grady county harvested a bumper wheat crop, the largest by far in its history. The deposits in the First National grew by leaps and bounds. On a certain afternoon a short time ago, the dream of the Indian boy actually came true. The cashier of the First National Bank of Chickasha announced that the deposits had that day passed the million dollar mark.

HATCHES EAGLES FOR MARKET

Aided by the Common Domestic Hen, of Course.

Tuscon, Okla.—Hatching eagles for the market is the unique occupation of Louis Apodoca, a Mexican who lives in the mountains east of Tucson. A great many bald eagles nest in the crags near Apodaca's home and every few days he manages to rob one of the nests while the parent birds are away.

The eggs are placed under a common domestic hen and eventually she hatches out a brood of fierce young birds. After a few days the eagles become so bellingerent that they will whip even their foster mother, and Apodaca places them in a wire cage to be fed by hand. When they are fairly well grown he sells them to tourists and other persons desiring genuine samples of the great American bird for pets.

Even figures that won't lie are sometimes incased in tailormade gowns.

SMITH BOYS DID IT, IS THE PLEA

BROTHERS BLAMED FOR TRAIN, BANK, AND OTHER ROBBERIES BUT ONE CHARGE UPHELD

BIG REWARDS OUT FOR THEM

Officers of Four Counties Engaged in Continuous Search and Expect No Easy Capture

Muskogee, Ok.—Officers of Muskogee, McIntosh, Haskell and Sequoyah counties are conducting an almost continuous search for Joe and Dave Smith brothers and alleged contenders for the "bad men" championship.

For each of them there is outstanding a reward of $300, offered by the American Express Co., on suspicion that they were principals in the M. K. & T. train robbery at Onapa, Ok., and Sheriff J. S. Barger has also offered a reward of $100 for Dave, who broke jail here after a jury had sentenced him and Cole Shoemaker to serve terms of seven years each in the penitentiary for robbing a drug store at Porum of less than $50, the druggist being severely beaten.

It has come to pass that almost every crime committed in this section of Oklahoma is credited to the Smith brothers, and this is generally accepted as fact by the officers for the simple reason that there seems to be nothing for the fugitives to do but dodge officers and live from day to day on the fruit of law violations. So far as can be ascertained, the boys have not slept in a bed since the night Dave escaped from the Muskogee jail. They are believed to be on horseback every day, sometimes eating at their own campfire of game they have killed, at others in the house of someone whom they know will not betray them.

In the way of ammunition and clothing the Smiths are believed to have sufficient to last them for years. Recently a store at Webber's Falls was robbed, a large lot of ammunition and clothing being taken. The Smiths are held to have done the job.

But the officers trailing Dave and Joe Smith are not fearing surprise by them and violent death or injury. They are convinced the fugitives are guided by purpose to evade the law and not to add to their difficulties the charge of killing an officer or posseman. It is the belief of Sheriff Barger that should a lone officer encounter the brothers he would be well treated, probably fed and entertained with account of some lively experiences, but they would not harm him unless attempt were made to force them to surrender. No one, so far as known, entertains an idea that the boys will become prisoners unless surprised and overwhelmed or without being beaten in a shooting match.

Dave and Joe Smith are Muskogee county products. They hail from the southeastern part of the county and and are said to be related to most of the denizens of the Kiamichi Mountain region. They are sons of Famous Smith, who himself had a record for killing men, not as a murderer, but because he reached them before they could get to him, so that his plea of self defense always had foundation.

The first charge of violence registered against the Smith brothers, so far as is recalled, arose several years ago, when Joe shot a rival for a girl's favor at a country dance.

Two years ago complaints were made to county authorities that Dave and Joe were rustling cattle from farmers. Warrants for their arrests were issued, but the arrests were not made for the reason that the boys could not be located.

Then followed the report that Dave Smith and Cole Shoemaker had entered the drug store at Porum and robbed it. This time the officers found their men, brought them to this city and the trial ended with a sentence of both to seven years in state prison. In engineering the escape in March last, Dave Smith entered the jail runway and, awaiting a moment when a guard named Payne turned his back, dealt him a blow with a flatiron.

Payne was left for dead and Smith, Shoemaker and Will Burnett another prisoner, hastened into the jailor's office, beat him down, seized guns and fled. Outside the jail they seized a buggy and drove to the fair grounds, where they took three race horses and escaped to the Warner Bottoms. Shoemaker was recaptured after being wounded, and Burnett, whose whereabouts was disclosed by farmers, was also returned to jail. Smith has not since been a prisoner.

Nothing but suspicion exists upon which to hang the charge that Dave and Joe Smith were members of the gang of eight men who recently held up the Katy train at Onapa, but every officer who has had a part in the investigation entertains no doubt that they were, and that the express company so believes is shown by the offer of $300 reward for each of the brothers.

There also is talk that the boys have committed some of the bank robberies, which have so aroused people of the state that the legislature enacted a law offering specific rewards for capture of that class of criminal, but, so far as known, as in the case of the train robbery, positive evidence is not available.

Mr. and Mrs. Cloy Berry are the proud parents of a baby girl, born Saturday. Mrs. Berry is at the home of her parents Carl Johnson and wife.

Miss Berneice Hart was compelled to miss Sunday School last Sunday on account of sickness. This is the first time for five years. Who can beat that?

Mrs. J. M. Dermott, who has been so very ill with iritis is not improving as rapidly as her friends would like to see her. She is able to sit up a few minutes at a time however.

T. H. Shull took a high dive off Bear Creek R. R. bridge Saturday night when on his way home from the Farmers' Institute. He was blinded by the light on a freight train coming toward him as he was crossing the bridge and before he had time to think found himself about twenty feet below in the middle of the stream. Fortunately he lit on his feet and was no worse for the dive except a complete wetting. He crawled out and walked home a distance of about two miles, when he arrived his clothing was frozen stiff, but at this writing he has suffered no ill effect.

HILGEMANN FOR CONGRESS

He is Popular, Honest Fearless, Eloquent, a Loyal Democrat and a Sure Winner.

MARK BALLOT LIKE SAMPLE

Hilgemann Has no Enemies—His Nomination will Bring Strength and Confidence to the County Ticket—His Number is 18

To the democrats of DeKalb county who are more interested in the success of the party than in satisfying the ambition or the private interests of an individual, we make this appeal:

Party victory is the paramount issue to every loyal democrat. Therefore it is his duty to use every effort in placing the cleanest, the strongest and the best vote-getter on the ticket.

This was the motive that induced three hundred Fort Wayne democrats representing all classes, in joining in a letter asking Harry H. Hilgemann to become a congressional candidate. He has just finished four years service as prosecuting attorney of Allen county and has won the esteem of lawyers, judges, jurors and the general public.

Harry H. Hilgemann has been a consistant and loyal democrat. He inherited his political faith from his father, and there is no taint on his democracy.

Allen county and Fort Wayne claim that they are entitled to a congressman this year and three out of the five candidates of the two strong parties are from that city and county. Allen county has the votes to elect. Shall the next congressman be a democrat or a republican? Will it be Bob Hanna or Harry H. Hilgemann? Can the democratic party stand the loss of a congressman? That is for us to decided next Tuesday.

There is no disputing the fact that in the distribution of official patronage the present congressman has antagonized leading working democrats all over the district, Mr. Hilgemann has no such opposition to overcome. He has no enemies who will work to defeat him.

It has been the plan of the republican papers of the district to belittle the campaign of Harry H. Hilgemann, and the reason was disclosed in the statement made by the republican county chairman, H. C. Willis, in the last issue of his paper, saying that he favored the present congressman because he would be an easy man to defeat this fall.

The three republican candidates have all admitted that they wanted the present congressman renominated next Tuesday.

The present congressman warns the people that it is unsafe to send a new man to Washington! Does he mean that he is to hold office forever? Are we to understand that he is the only man in the district that can fill the position? If this is true what would happen to the 12th district should he die.?

It is ability, grit and brains that count. In the greatest crisis in our national history it was new men tha' solved the new problems. Lincoln never had any experience as a president, but he guided the ship of state through tempestruous seas. Senator Kern during his first term became the senate leader and now holds that position. New men coming direct from the ranks of the people understand national needs more than the statesmen who live in Washington's atmosphere. It was the unwise legislation of the so called experienced congressman that wrecked the republican party four years ago.

In the campaign literature of the present congressman great stress is laid on the fact that he is on the job in Washington! That's what he's getting paid for! "If its a good thing pass it along" is a familiar expression. The present congressman has had four terms with a salary of $7,-500, clerk hire of $1,500, mileage and other incidental expenses every one of the eight years—more than $72,000.00 Why not let some other democrat have this for a time?

The mass of democrats think that the present congressman has been generously treated by the party of this district. He asks for a fifth term! No county official would dare make such a demand in old DeKalb. If a congressman can ask for five terms why not apply the rule to a county official.

VOL. XXX ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY MARCH 9 1916 NO. 10

Farmer's Institute

Largest and Best in the History of the Organization.

The success of the Tri-township Farmers' Institute, which was held in the Widney Opera House on February 24-25-26 inclusive, has been noised abroad all over the state of Indiana, and is now a matter of History. This organization is several years old and farmers all over this neighborhood, some of whom have attended every institute here and some elsewhere, say that this year beat anything they ever attended, which means considerable to those, who were responsible for the success of this meeting. Men of unusual ability along the line of farming, appeared on the program, to speak of the every day problems of the farmer and the talks were practical, leaving with his audience some excellent thoughts, that if worked out would mean dollars to our farmers, where they are loosing money today.

Thursday evening the program was given by the school children of the three townships, namely Newville, Spencer and Concord, and the attendance was 700, which taxed the capacity of the seating and standing room. The program was exceptionally interesting as the children were the whole show. The program was in charge of Prof. Roy Maxwell, Miss Thornburg and Mr. Abel.

FRIDAY

Clarence Henry, County Agent of Allen Co., was the first speaker on the Institute program Friday morning, and his talk was illustrated by slides thrown upon the screen. "Silos and Ensilage"—The silo is 30 years old and has developed from nothing into one of the most successful way of feeding that the farm has. Silo feed serves as a laxative and keeps the stock in prime condition at all times. Cattle when fed on silo feed, will shrink when turned on pasture of the very best kind, making a strong proof of its feeding value to the farmer who has beef cattle. An acre of corn will furnish from 6 to 12 tons of excellent silage and there is nothing better for all the stock of the farm. Fully 40% of the feeding value of corn is in the stalks and in this way everything is saved. In feeding fodder the cattle will loose about 50% of the food value. Soy beans are being sown with corn for silage considerable over our state and it has proven a great feed, besides, it brings on a better yield of corn and increases the food value of the feeding stuffs, which is the object of the farmer. Mr. Henry showed a great many different pictures of silos, taken over Allen County when at his work, and he has no particular make to recommend, only that they be constructed so as to keep the air out, in order to produce the proper feed and keep it from spoiling. Mr. Henry is a live County Agent and is helping his farmers wonderfully in producing better crops and pointing out to them where they are loosing money.

Otis Crane, County Agent of Grant County, the best authority on poultry in the state, occupied a place on the program Friday morning. He gave an excellent talk on the "Management of the Laying Hen". He began with a test of his audience to see what success they were having, in the way of egg producing hens, and it was found that 25 eggs for 100 hens was all that was shown. This was alarming to Mr. Crane and he wondered who was paying for the feed that the other 75 chickens were eating and not producing eggs. He began at once to give his audience some rules by which they might sort out the hens that were of no account. His first hen was one that was carrying a large, flabby, fat bag—she is of no account. The hen with rough feathers, small comb, sharp breast bone, and the three year olds are an expense and the quicker sold the more money you will have in your pocket.

The housing of the hen is a very important thing and so few of the farmers even give it a thought. A dry, well ventilated, free from draft, house. Not too expensive of a house—just good enough to meet your demands. Crane remarked that many knew that there was money in the chicken business because they put it in, and such is the case here in our own immediate vicinity.

Feeding the laying hen is another important part to insure success. The best grain is wheat and you should feed about 4 ounces a day to a hen, this furnishes the protein. Crane recommended his 4 G. ration for winter feeding, as follows: Grains, Greens, Grubs and Grit. These can be supplied in different forms of foods prepared for the feeding of chickens. He also advises the use of self feeders in the hen houses in which meat scrap, grit and water are kept in abundance, because they are essential in producing eggs.

AFTERNOON SESSION

The Ladies' Quartette of St. Joe, sang a very appropriate song at this time entitled "Calling the Cows", after which Clarence Henry gave an illustrated talk on "Making the Farm Cow Pay". The illustrations used were taken by Mr. Henry in Allen County. He started with a genuine milk cow, and giving a thorough description of the essentials in order to produce milk. Too many farmers are using beef cattle for milk cows and as a result they are not getting their money out of the feed that it requires for an animal of this kind. In a beef cow the food goes to making up of the fat, while on a milk cow it goes to producing milk instead of fat. The cow is a machine and the grade of products derived from her depends largely upon what you feed her. The best type is the one that the farmers likes the best—consequently he will take better care of them. The illustrations will be remembered by all who attended this session, as being excellent. An interesting discussion followed this address but Henry was ready with his answers.

"Farm Management" was very ably discussed by Otis Crane, making his second appearance on the program for the day. He spoke very beautifully of the difference of opinions of people as to the time of day it was in the possibilities of farming, and some thought it to be noon and some evening, believing that about all the advancement had been made possible and he was inclined to believe that it was morning, that the farmers were just awakening to the fact that new problems and greater possibilities were theirs. Crane is a live County Agent and has proven his worth many times to his people by taking special interest in farm work. The matter of seed corn and its selection is one of vast importance and the value of testing before planting time was so forceably explained. The variety is important, be sure that the climatic conditions are right, don't import seed corn. The matter of testing the varieties that is grown in a community has made great changes in the yield. The plan is this:-About 15 or 20 farmers will select their seed corn and allow enough to be planted on some one of the farms to make a field of the different varieties all in one. Each row is marked and when the corn is harvested it will be weighed, and the results will determine which variety should be grown in this locality. This matter will be tried in Concord township as the farmers are busy now planning on a 3 acre test.

The matter of farm management is more of a job than many farmers are able to handle, and if business men did as some do they couldn't hold out. The farming of wet land is a waste of time, money and grain. This same land will raise enough more grain to pay for the tile, in one year. It is economy.

EVENING SESSION

This session was begun early as the chairman had the consent of Clarence Henry to give another illustrated lecture on feeding of hogs and in order to get home, he occupied the early part of the program. The music for the evening was furnished by the Ladies Quartette and C A. Woodcox. The motion pictures entitled "A Concrete Romance" was furnished free to the Writes Early History and Pioneer Story of Indiana.

The following story of our state in the early pioneer days, was written by this young girl of the 3th., grade of the Saylor's School, and shows considerable hard work. The essay was read at the Centenial Celebration by her on Feb. 18, but owing to the rush in The News Office we were unable to reproduce it until now. Nevertheless, the article is of such interest as to be of value to our readers at this time.

What is now known as Indiana, was first a part of what was called the Northwest territory which included a vast territory extending from the Great Lakes on the north, to the Ohio river on the south, and the Mississippi river on the west. This was divided in 1800. It then included what is now as Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin. It was all called Indiana. It was afterwards divided into the states named and Indiana, as you probably all know, was admitted to the Union as a state one hundred years ago today. General St. Clair was the first governor of Indiana, and William Henry Harrison was the second.

Indiana is 276 miles long and averages 145 miles in width. It is comparatively level and among the richest states. It produces vast crops of general farm produce. It has extensive coal fields in the southwestern part, and oil in the middle-eastern part.

The first settlement was made at Vincennes in the latter part of the seventeenth century. The Indians having been defeated by General Wayne a little ways east of Fort Wayne, and by General Harrison near Lafayette, the country began to fill up very fast, until now we see it the great state that it is, with its cities, railroads, and all other modern improvements; and a popu-

THE CHIEF LEGATEE

by ANNA KATHERINE GREEN.

AUTHOR OF "THE LEAVENWORTH CASE," "BEHIND CLOSED DOORS," ETC.

SYNOPSIS

Chapters I to III—A few hours after marriage the wife of Roger J. Ransom is missing from the hotel where they have just registered. A detective, Mr. Gerrage, is called into the case. The bride, formerly Miss Georgian Hazen, becomes alarmed over something which happened while passing down the aisle from the altar.

While standing at the hotel desk with the groom the woman disappears. A man with a twisted face was seen whispering to the bride at the reception. Evidently flight was meditated after that meeting.

The bell boy noted peculiarities about the woman and was the only one who noticed her slip away. The detective claims the maid was a substitute for the wife, and rode from the house to the hotel while the wife left by the basement door in the maid's clothes.

Chapters IV to V.—The woman who left by the basement door was traced to a meeting with the man with a broken jaw. Ransom receives a note from his wife who claims to have found a long lost twin sister, supposed to have been dead. The twin is of unbalanced mind and stone deaf. Ransom meets the man with the broken jaw and who declares himself to be Mrs. Ransom's brother who was in need of money.

Chapters VI to VII.—Ransom interviews his wife's lawyer, who insists that she has a twin sister. When leaving the office the office boy gives him his wife's address.

Ransom goes to Stitford, Conn., and finds the hotel where his wife has secured rooms. He visits the cemetery and finds a man about to efface from the tombstone the record of the death of the twin sister, which was supposed to have occurred years previously. He also finds the announcement of the death of the man with whom he had recently talked, who claimed to be his wife's brother.

Chapters IX and X.—Ransom learns that his wife, her sister, and the lawyer, are coming to the inn. The sister who had left the coach for a walk appears later and he is surprised at the resemblance to his wife. He learns that his wife has had the lawyer draw her will.

Chapters XI to XIII—The inmates of the hotel were aroused by a piercing cry in the night. The sister declared that Ransom's wife had gone to the waterfall to destroy her life.

The mill stream never gave up its dead. A letter was found from Mrs. Ransom confirming the fact that she had tired of life. Some doubt was expressed by the detective.

Chapters XIV and XV—After a full investigation of the house and grounds by both Ransom and the lawyer come to the conclusion that the woman remaining in the hotel and known as Anitra was Ransom's wife.

Chapter XV to XVIII—Ransom is convinced, after following several clues, that he was mistaken and that his wife had perished.

The sister endeavors to win Ransom's love, but is repulsed.

Chapters XIX to XXI.—The sister tells her story to Ransom, but fails to win him from the memory of his wife. His wife's brother appears who believes that Ransom's wife is masquerading as her twin sister, but is baffled by her actions.

She was babbling in a low tone to herself, an open sesame to her mind, which Ransom hailed with a sense of awe. If only he might distinguish the words! But this was difficult not only was her head turned partly away, but she spoke in a murmur which was far from distinct. Yet—yes, that one sentence was plain enough. She had muttered musingly, anxiously, and with a searching look among the graves:

"It was on this side. I know it was on this side."

Watching her closely lest some chance glance of hers should stray his way, he listened still more intently and was presently rewarded by catching another sentence.

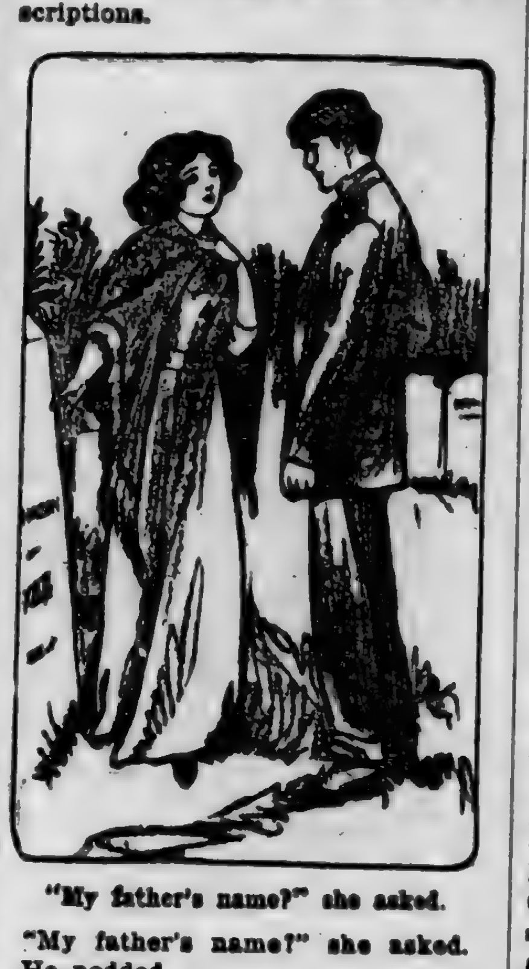
"A single grave all by itself. I fell over it and my mother scolded me, saying it was my father's. There was a bush near it. A bush with white flowers on it. I tried to pick some."

Ransom's heart was growing lighter and lighter. She did not even know that there had been placed over that grave a monument with her name on it and that of the mother who had scolded her for tripping over her father's sod. Only Anitra could be so ignorant or expect to find a grave by means of a bush blooming with flowers fifteen years ago. As she went wandering on, peering to right and left, he thought of Hazen and his doubts, and wished that he were here beside him to mark her perplexity.

When quite satisfied that she would never find what she sought without help, Ransom stepped from his hiding-place and joined her among the grassy hillocks. The start of pleasure she gave and her almost childish look of relief warmed his heart, and it was with a smile he waited for her to speak.

"My father's grave!" she explained. "I was looking for my father's grave. I remember my mother taking me to it when I was little. There was a bush close by it—ah! I see what you think. The bush would be big now—I forgot that. And something else! You are thinking of something else. Oh, I know, I know. He wouldn't be lying alone any more. My mother must have died, or sister would have taken me to her. There ought to be two graves."

He nodded, and taking her by the hand led her to the family monument. She gazed at it for a moment, amazed, then laid her finger on one of the inscriptions.



"My father's name?" she asked.

"My father's name?" she asked.

He nodded.

She hung her head thoughtfully for a moment then slipping to the other side of the stone laid her hand on another.

"My mother's?"

Again he signified yes.

"And this? Is this sister's name? No, she's not buried yet. I had a brother. Is it his?"

Ransom bowed. How tell her that it was a false inscription and that the man whose death it commemorated was not only alive but had only a little while before spoken to her.

"I didn't like my brother. He was cruel and liked to hurt people. I'm glad he's dead."

Ransom drew her away. Her frankness was that of a child, but it produced an uncomfortable feeling. He didn't like this brother either, and in this thoughtless estimate of hers he seemed to read a warning to which his own nature intuitively responded.

"Come!" he motioned, leading the way out.

She followed with a smile, and together they entered the highway. As they did so, Ransom caught sight of a man speeding down the hill before them on a bicycle. He had not come from the upper road, or they would have seen him as he flew past the gateway. Where had he come from, then? From the peep-hole where Ransom himself had stood a few minutes before. No other conclusion was possible, and Ransom felt both angry and anxious till he could find out who the man was. This he did not succeed in doing till he reached the hotel. There a bicycle leaning against a tree gave point to his questions, and he learned that it belonged to a clerk in one of the small stores near by, but that the man who had just ridden it up and down the road on a trial of speed was the stranger who had just come to town with Mr. Hasen.

CHAPTER XXI.

On the Cars.

THIS episode, which to Ransom's mind would bear but one interpretation, gave him ample food for thought. He decided to be more circumspect in the future, and to keep an eye out for inquisitive strangers. That Hasen was antagonistic to him he had always known but that he was regarded by him with suspicion he had not realized till now.

It was now five o'clock and he was sitting in his room awaiting the usual report from the river, when a quick tap at his door was followed by the entrance of the very man he was thinking about. He rose eagerly to receive him, determined, however, to allow no inconsiderate impulse to drive him into unnecessary speech.

Taking the seat proffered him Hasen opened the conversation as follows:

"Mr. Ransom, I have been doing you an injustice. I do not consider it necessary to tell you just how I have found this out, but I am now convinced that you are as much in the dark as myself in regard to this unfortunate affair, and are as willing as I am to take all justifiable means to enlighten yourself. I own that at first I thought it more than probable you were in collusion with the girl here to deceive me. That I wouldn't stand. I'm glad to find you as truly a victim of this mystery as myself."

Ransom straightened himself.

"If this is an apology," he returned, "I am willing to accept it in the spirit in which it is proffered. But I should like something more than an apology from you. Candor for candor;—your whole story in return for mine."

"I'm afraid it would be a trifle tedious,—my whole story," smiled Hazen. "If you mean such part of it as concerns Georgian's peculiar actions and the complications with which we are at this moment struggling, I can only repeat what I have already told you, both at the St. Denis in New York and here. I am Georgian's returned brother, saved from the jaws of hell to see my own country again. I arrived in New York on the tenth. Naturally, after securing a room at the hotel, I took up the papers. They were full of the approaching marriage of Miss Hazen. I recognized my sister's name, though not her splendor, for we were the sole survivors of a poor country family and I knew nothing of the legacy I am now told she received. Anxious to see her, I attended the ceremony. She recognized me. I had not expected this, and feeling old affections revive, I followed her friends to the house and was presented to them and to you. What I whispered to her on this occasion were my assumed name and the place where I was to be found. My changed countenance called for explanations for which a bridal reception offered no opportunity. Besides, as I have already said, I stood in sore need of a definite amount of money. I meant her to come and see me, but I did not expect her to play a trick on you in order to do so. This had its birth in the to me unaccountable mystery embodied in the girl you call Anitra, but whom I'm not ready yet to name. For when I do, action must follow conviction and that without mercy or delay."

"Action?" repeated Ransom, with quick suspicion and a confused rush of contradictory visions in his mind. "What do you mean by that?"

Hazen covered his chin with his hand.

"I will try and explain," he replied. "If I am abrupt in my language, it is owing to the exigencies of the case. I have no time to waste and no disposition to whitewash a rough piece of work. To speak to the point, I have an intense interest in my sister Georgian. I have little or none in my sister Anitra. Georgian's intelligence, good-will, and command of money would be of inestimable benefit to me. Anitra, on the contrary, could be nothing but a burden, unless—" here he cast a very sharp glance at Ransom—"unless Georgian should have been sufficiently considerate to leave her a good share of her fortune in the will you say she made just before her disappearance and supposed death."

"That I can say nothing about," rejoined Ransom in answer to this feeler. "The will is in the hands of her lawyer, but if it will help your argument any we will suppose that she left her sister to the care of her friends without any especial provision for her in the way of money."

The steady fingers clutching the scarred neck loosed their grip to wave this supposition aside.

"A hardly supposable case," was the cold comment with which he supplemented this disclaimer; "but one which would make the girl a burden indeed; a burden which for many reasons I could not assume." Here he struck himself sharply on the neck, with the first display of passion he had shown. "My advantages are not such as to make it easy for me to support myself. It would be simply impossible for me to undertake the care of any girl, least of all of one with a manifest infirmity."

"Anitra will prosper without your care," replied Ransom, overlooking the heartlessness of the man in the mad, unaccountable sense of relief with which he listened to his withdrawal from concerns for which he showed so little sympathy. "There are others who will be glad to do all that can be done for Georgian's forsaken sister."

"Yes. That is all right, but—" Here Hazen squared himself across the top of the table before which he had been sitting; "I must be made sure that the facts have been rightly represented to me and that the girl now in this house is Georgian's deserted sister. I'm not yet satisfied that she is, and I must be convinced not only on this point but on many others, before this day is over. Business of great importance calls me back to the city and, it may be, out of the country. I may never be able to spend another day on purely personal affairs, so this one must tell. I have a scheme (it is a very simple one) which, if carried out as I have planned, will satisfy me as nothing else will as to the identity of the girl we will call, from lack of positive knowledge, Anitra. Will you help me in its furtherance? It lies with you to do so."

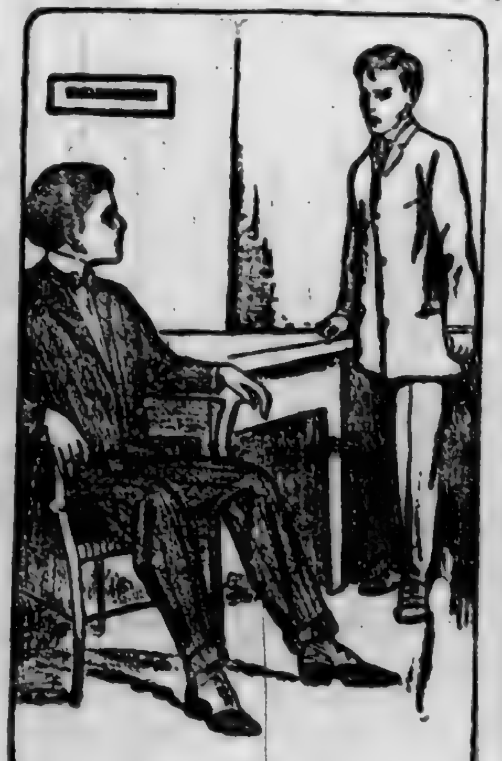
"First, your reasons for doubting the girl," retorted Ransom. "They must be excellent ones for you to resist the evidence of such conclusive proofs as you have yourself been witness to since entering this house. I am Georgian's husband. I have the strongest wish in the world to see her again at my side yet with the exception of her wonderful likeness to my wife, I find nothing in this raw if beautiful girl, of the polished, highly trained woman I married. I have not even succeeded in startling her ear—something which I should have been able to do if she were not the totally deaf woman she appears. Confide to me then your reasons for demanding additional proofs of her identity. If they carry conviction with them, I will aid you in any scheme you can propose which will neither frighten nor afflict her."

Hazen rose to his feet. Narrow as the room was, he yielded to his restless desire to move about and began pacing up and down the restricted quarters bounded by the edge of the table and the door. Not until he had made the second turning did he speak; then it was with seeming openness.

"It's like putting the torch to my last ship," said he; "but this is no time to hesitate. Mr. Ransom, I do not trust my eyes, I do not trust my ears, nor your eyes, nor your ears, nor those of any one here, because I have talked with a man who was on the same train with my sisters. He noticed them because of their similar appearance and close intimacy. They were not dressed alike, but they were veiled alike and one did not move without the other. More than that, they not only walked about the various stations where they waited, arm in arm, but they sat thus closely joined in the cars all the way from New York. This interested him especially as he noted great anxiety and incessant movement in the one, and complete passiveness in the other. She who sat in the outer seat was watchful, busy, and ready to press the other's arm at the least provocation, but if either spoke it was always the other. It was not till the quick rush and shrill whistle of a passing train made one start and not the other, that he got the idea that one of them was deaf. As this was the one by the window, he felt that their peculiar actions were now accounted for, and indeed thus far it all tallied with what we might expect from Georgian traveling with the hapless Anitra. But there remained a fact to be told, which rouses doubt. When they reached G—— and he saw from their quick rising that they were about to leave the train, he naturally glanced their way again, and this time he caught a glimpse of the inner one's neck. Her veil had become slightly disarranged, exposing the whole nape. It was unexpectedly dark, almost dark, almost brunette in color, and quite devoid of delicacy; such a skin as one might look for in the gipsy Anitra after years of outdoor living and a long lack of nice personal attention, but not such as I saw and admired a few hours ago on the neck of the woman bending over her work in the landlady's room. Oh, I recognized the difference; I have an eye for necks."

He paused, coming to a standstill in the middle of the room, to see what effect his words had had on Ransom.

"I have that man's name," he continued, "and can produce him if I have time and it seems to be necessary. But I had rather come to my own decision without any outside interference. This is not an affair for public gossip or newspaper notoriety. It is a question of justice to myself. If this girl is Georgian—" His whole face changed. For a moment Ransom hardly knew him. The quiet, self-contained man seemed to have given way to one of such unexpected power and threat that Ransom rose instinctively to his feet in recognition of a superiority he could no longer deny.



"You will!"

The action seemed to recall Hazen to himself. He wheeled about and recommenced his quiet pacing to and fro.

"I beg pardon," he quietly finished. "If it is Georgian, she must stand my friend. That is all I was going to say. If it is, against all reason and probability, her strangely restored twin, I shall leave this house by midnight, never probably to see any of you again. So you perceive that it is incumbent upon us to work promptly. Are you ready to hear what I have to propose?"

"Yes."

Hazen paused again, this time in front of the door. Laying his hand lightly on one of the panels, he glanced back at Ransom.

"You are nicely placed here for observation. Your door directly faces the hall she must traverse in returning to her room."

"That's quite true."

"She's in her room now. Ah, you know that?"

"Yes." Ransom seemed to have no other word at his command.

"Will she come out again before night to eat or to visit?"

"There's no telling. She's very fitful. No one can prophesy what she will do. Sometimes she eats in the landlady's room, sometimes in her own, sometimes not at all. If you have frightened her, or she has been disturbed in any way by your companion who shows such interest in her and in me, she probably will not come out at all."

"But she must. I expect you to see that she does. Use any messenger, any artifice, but get her away from this hall for ten minutes, even if it is only into Mrs. Deo's room. When she returns I shall be on my knees before this keyhole to watch her and observe. To see what I do not mean to tell you, but it will be something which will definitely settle for me this matter of identity. Does this plan look sufficiently harmless to meet with your approval?"

"Yes, but looks cannot always be trusted. I must know just what you mean to do. I will leave nothing to a mind and hand I do not trust any more fully than I do yours. You are too eager for Georgian's money; too little interested in herself; and you are too sly in your ways."

"You will!"

The words rang out involuntarily. It almost seemed as if the man would spring with them straight at the other's throat. But he controlled himself, and smiling bitterly, added:

"I know the marks of human struggle. I have read countenances from my birth. I've had to, and only one has baffled me—hers. But we are going to read that too and very soon. We are going to learn, you and I, what lies behind that innocent manner and her rude, uncultured ways. We are going to sound that deafness. I say we," he impressively concluded, "because I have reconsidered my first impulse and now propose to allow you to participate openly, and without the secrecy you object to, in all that remains to be done to make our contemplated test a success. Will that please you? May I count on you now?"

"Yes," replied Ransom, returning to his old monosyllable.

"Very well, then, see if you can make a scrawl like this."

Pulling a piece of red chalk from his pocket, he drew a figure of a somewhat unusual character on the bare top of the table between them; then he handed the chalk over to Ransom, who received it with a stare of wonder not unmixed with suspicion.

"I'm not an adept at drawing," said he, but made his attempt, notwithstanding, and evidently to Hazen's satisfaction.

"You'll do," said he. "That's a mystic symbol once used by Georgian and myself in place of our names in all mutual correspondence, and on the leaves of our school-books and at the end of our exercises. It meant nothing, but the boys and girls we associated with thought it did and envied us the free-masonry it was supposed to cover. A ridiculous make-believe which I rate at its full folly now, but one which cannot fail to arouse a hundred memories in Georgian. We will scrawl it on her door, or rather you shall, and according to the way she conducts herself on seeing it, we shall know in one instant what you with your patience and trust in time may not be able to arrive at in weeks."

Ransom was about to proceed to take the first required step, when they heard a disturbance in front, and the coach came driving up with a great clatter and bang and from it stepped the lean, well-groomed figure of Mr. Harper.

"Bah!" exclaimed Hazen with a violent gesture of disappointment. "There comes your familiar. Now I suppose you will cry off."

"Not necessarily," returned Ransom. "But this much is certain. I shall certainly consult him before hazarding this experiment. I am not so sure of myself or—pardon me—of yourself as to take any steps in the dark while I have at hand so responsible a guide as the man whom you choose to call my familiar."

CHAPTER XXII.

A Suspicious Test.

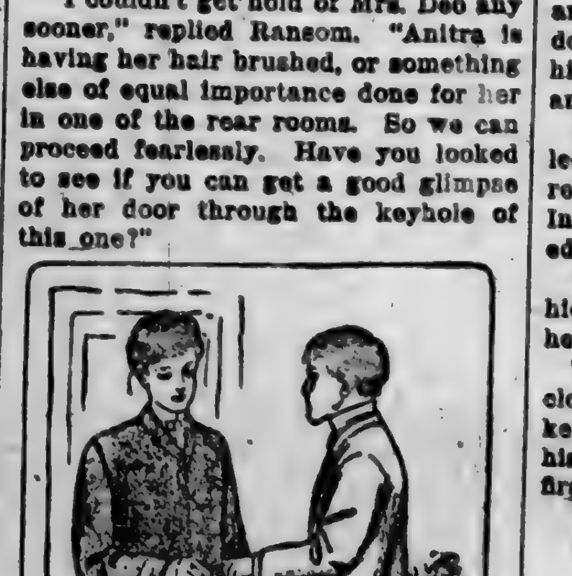
LET him make his experiment. It will do no harm, and if it rids us of him, well and good."

Such was Mr. Harper's decision after hearing all that Mr. Ransom had to tell him of the present situation. Ransom expressed his satisfaction, and left the room with a lighter heart than he had felt since Hazen came upon the scene. He did not know that all he had been through was as nothing to what lay before him.

It was an hour before he returned. When he did, it was to find Hazen and the lawyer awaiting him in ill-concealed impatience.

"Have you done it?" exclaimed Hazen, leaping eagerly to his feet as the door closed softly behind Ransom.

"I couldn't get hold of Mrs. Deo any sooner," replied Ransom. "Anitra is having her hair brushed, or something else of equal importance done for her in one of the rear rooms. So we can proceed fearlessly. Have you looked to see if you can get a good glimpse of her door through the keyhole of this one?"



"Very well. Here is the chalk."

"Haven't you already made a trial of that? Then do so now," suggested Hazen, drawing out the key and laying it on the table.

But this was too uncongenial a task for Ransom.

"I shall be satisfied," said he, "if Mr. Harper tells me that it can."

"It can," asserted that gentleman, falling on his knees and adjusting his eye to the keyhole. "Or rather, you can see plainly the face of any one approaching it. I don't suppose any of us expected to see the door itself."

"No, it is not the door, but the woman entering the door, we want to see. Did you ask for an extra lamp?"

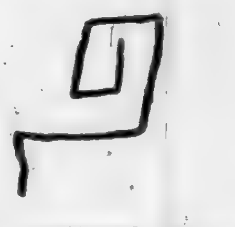
"Yes, and saw it placed. It is on a small table almost opposite her room."

"Then everything is ready."

"All but the mark which I am to put on the panel."

"Very well. Here is the chalk. Let us see what you mean to do with it before you risk an attempt on the door itself."

Ransom thought a minute, then with one quick twist produced the following:



"Correct," muttered Hazen, with what Harper thought to be a slight but unmistakable shudder. "One would think you had been making use of this very cabalistic sign all your life."

"Then one would be mistaken. I have simply a true eye and a ready hand."

"And a very remarkable memory. You have recalled every little line and quirk."

"That's possible. What I have made once I can make the second time. It's a pecularity of mine."

There was no mistaking the continued intensity of Hazen's gaze. Ransom felt his color rise, but succeeded in preserving his quiet tone, as he added:

"Besides, this character is not a wholly new one to me. My attention was called to it months ago. It was when I was courting Georgian. She was writing a note one day when she suddenly stopped to think and I saw her pen making some marks which I considered curious. But I should not have remembered them five minutes, if she had not impulsively laid her hand over them when she saw me looking. That fixed the memory of them in my mind, and when I saw this combination of lines again, I remembered it. That is why I lent myself so readily to this experiment. I lent that what you said about her acquaintance with this odd arrangement of lines was true."

Hazen's hand stole up to his neck, a token of agitation which Ransom should have recognized by this time.

"And her account of the use we made of it tallied with mine?"

"She gave me no account of any use she had ever made of it."

"That was because you didn't ask her."

"Just so. Why should I ask her? It was a small matter to trouble her about."

"You are right," acquiesced Hazen, wheeling himself away towards the window. Then after a momentary silence, "It was so then, but it is likely to prove of some importance now. Let me see if the hall is empty."

As he bent to open the door, the lawyer, who had not moved nor spoken till now, turned a quick glance on Ransom and impulsively stretched out his hand. But he dropped it very quickly and subsided into his old attitude of simple watchfulness, as Hazen glanced back with the remark:

"There's nobody stirring; now's your time, Ransom."

The moment for action had arrived.

Ransom stepped into the hall. As he passed Hazen, the latter whispered:

"Don't forget that last downward quirk. That was the line she always emphasized."

Ransom gave him an annoyed look. His nerves as well as his feelings were on a keen stretch, and this persistence of Hazen's was more than he could bear.

"I'll not forget the least detail," he answered shortly, and passed quickly down the hall, while Hazen watched him through the crack of the door, and the lawyer watched Hazen.

Suddenly Mr. Harper's brow wrinkled. Hazen had uttered such a sigh of relief that the lawyer was startled. In another moment Ransom re-entered the room.

"She's coming," said he, striving to hide his extreme emotion. "I heard her voice in the hall beyond."

The door Ransom had carefully closed. Harper watched through the keyhole. The remaining two stood at his side breathless, waiting for his first word. It came in a whisper:

STABLE NOTES.

Finishing the draft horse for market requires from 80 to 100 days, depending upon the condition of the animal at the beginning of the feeding period.

Gains will depend upon the feeds fed as well as the individuality of the animal. A gain of from 2 to 5 pounds a day can be made.

Mature horses, 6 to 7 years of age, make more rapid and economical gains than horses 3 to 5 years of age.

Compact, deep bodied horses with roomy middle and good sound feet and legs, will prove the best feeders.

MOUNTAIN ROADS BUILT BY CONVICTS

PRACTICALLY ENTIRE BED OF CANYON CITY ROUTE CUT OFF SIDE OF HILL

COST TO THE STATE IS SMALL

Warden Estimates that Within Ten Years 5,000 Miles Will Be Completed for $500,000.

Colorado Springs, Col.—The Colorado Springs and Canyon City Highway and the Ute Pass section of the Pike's Peak ocean to ocean road, recently completed by Colorado's system of convict labor, are two of the most perfect mountain roads in the United States.

For 20 miles south of Colorado Springs the road winds around the foothills and mountains, practically the entire roadbed having been cut out of the hillside and in many places blasted out of solid rock. For the remaining 25 miles the way is over foothills and through undulating country. Besides being a marvel in engineering the road is one of the most scenic and picturesque in the west, passing as it does through Red Rock Canyon, Dead Man's Canyon and many other mountain beauty spots.

The road averages 18 feet in width, and is perfectly crowned and drained. although it offers a succession of climbs, so skillfully was the engineering work done that heavy grades have been eliminated and the motorist is confronted with only one grade as high as 3 per cent.

The Ute Pass road follows the ancient trail of the indians across the Rocky Mountains. In the last few years that part of it between Colorado Springs and Cascade has been entirely reconstructed by convicts.

Under the Colorado system the convict is allowed 10 days off his sentence for each month of labor on the roads. This is an addition to the usual reduction for good behavior.

Thomas J. Tynan, warden of the state penitentiary, under whose supervision the work of the last three years has been done, estimates that in the next ten years 5,000 miles of the best road will be constructed at a cost of less than $500,000.

He says 1000 men have been used in road work in the last three years at a cost to the state of 25 cents a day for each man. The men go about their work unguarded, and less than one per cent have violated their pledges and made successful escapes.

COPS RAID "DIVINE DANCERS."

Put Ban Upon Home of Alleged Religious Sect.

San Bernardino, Cal.—In a raid on a secluded cottage known as the home of a religious sect bearing the name of "Divine Dancers," police arrested Ben Clark and Miss Betty McGrath, 24. With the arrest, the police declared, will come the disclosure of a peculiar form of worship in which the devotees danced without attire.

The bungalow raided was known as "Palm Cottage," and was hidden in a grove of palm trees. Clark and Miss McGrath were arrested on charges of vagrancy.

HEN THAT'S A MARVEL

Has Produced 144 Eggs a Year Since 1888, and Has Hatched a Thousand Chicks.

Killingly, Conn.—"Eusapia Palladino," the oldest hen in the town of Killingly and perhaps in the entire world, is to have a birthday party on the occasion of her 27th birthday, which will come in a few days. All the old hens in Killingly are looking forward to the event, and it is probable that a few young chickens will be asked, just to give the party a metropolitan flavor.

"Eusapia," though of Spanish origin, lays her eggs in English and began the work when but five months old. Her first egg, which her owner, Mr. James Blanchard still has, was laid in November, 1888, and since then she has laid an average of 144 a year. She has just laid another egg as this story is being written and only the greatest haste can prevent her laying another before it is completed. She just lays around all day, as might be expected at her great age. Unlike the Madagascar Bingle Hen, which lays square eggs with a monogram, Eusapia lays but one egg at a time.

Eusapia, it will be readily reckoned, was hatched from a black Spanish egg ten years before the Spanish-American War, when shells burst less frequently. She has seen a very active life and greatly deplores the dissapation, irregular hours and loss of sleep incident to the poultry shows which have become popular of late years. She does not smoke, has never on any occasion partaken of alcoholic liquors and can now read without glasses if she cared to.

Mr. Blanchard has had several disputes lately with persons who, having dined at the Killingly Commercial Inn questioned that Eusapia was the oldest chicken in the world.

Of late years Eusapia has been given to fits of depression, and the admittance of eggs as parcel post mail left her on the voyage of a nervous breakdown for days.

A thousand chicks have been hatched by Eusapia in her long and useful life. She has always shown a great interest in them, has personally supervised their early education and has invariably responded, even in late years, to their slightest cluck.

RATS TESTING VALUE OF FOODS

KANSAS EXPERIMENTING TO REDUCE COST OF LIVING FOR WORKINGMEN

TWENTY-FOUR ANIMALS ARE USED

Each is Put on Special Diet and Weighed With Care Daily.

Topeka, Kan.—The state of Kansas has undertaken the job of finding out what meats and other foods are to be used by the housewife in her efforts to reduce the cost of living. It is intended that the same amount of nutriment must be obtained from the foods. The State Board of Health, the State University, and the labor unions of the state are co-operating in the tests, which will take a year to complete.

The experiments are a part of the plans made some months ago by the university, labor unions and Board of Health for reducing the cost of living, particularly to the laboring men, who have definite amounts of money to spend each month for food and clothing, rents and for savings.

Prof. H. W. Emerson of the chemical department of the university is conducting the preliminary experiments with 24 white rats. Just now the experiment is being carried on with cured and fresh meats. When this is completed wheat flour and various kinds of corn meal and other flours will be tested and the rats fed on bread and biscuits from different flours and baked in different ways. Then fruits will be taken up and tested, as far as possible, in the same manner.

It has long been determined that a man of average weight and in good health and doing ordinary manual labor requires so much food a day and that certain foods have certain calorics of energy. A man who ate two pounds of meat a day, with bread and vegetables, was capable of doing a certain amount of work. Kansas is going to try to find out what foodstuffs the housewife should purchase to get the most energy for her husband and sons and what she can purchase for the least money to get the best results.

The 24 white rats purchased by the state will find out these things for her. The rats were carefully weighed, even to the hundredth part of an ounce, and divided into twelve groups. One set is being fed meats artificially smoked; that is, smoked with liquid preparations used as substitute for real, old fashioned hickory wood smoke. To another set is being fed meat smoked in the old fashioned way. To another set of rats fresh meat is given. The other cages get the same sort of diet, but the meat is prepared in a different manner. One group has its fresh meat fried, another boiled and another roasted.

In addition to the meat the rats are all given exactly the same amount of bread and vegetables, potatoes, beets, celery and other vegetables. The amount of meat given each cage of rats is carefully weighed, and after each meal whatever is left is removed from the cages and weighed again This will determine the exact amount of food consumed by the rats.

Each morning at 9 o'clock the rats are weighed to determine the loss or gain from the day before and also during the entire period. The meat experiment will be carried on for about three months, so that it will be possible to determine just the effect a steady diet of the same meat but with a variety of vegetables will have on the weight and activity of the animals.

When the experiment is completed it will be definitely determined whether fresh or cured meats, smoked, canned or corned, pork, beef or mutton is the best meat food, and by comparing the costs a pound of the different kinds of meat it will be easy to determine which gives the best results at the least expense. The experiment is expected to show whether curing meats, smoking, canning or corning renders the meats more or less digestible than when fresh, more or less valuable as food and which is the most tasteful.

CONNECTICUT SNAKE SWALLOWS CHINA EGG

Winsted, Conn.—Black snakes down Gales Ferry way cannot tell china eggs from hen's eggs, according to a story related by Mr. and Mrs. R. B. De Bussy of Mount Vernon, N. Y. who are guests of Colonel and Mrs. F. M. Chapin, in Pine Meadow. Recently Mr. and Mrs. De Bussy stopped with Miss Caroline Freeman at the Bouwerie, Gales Ferry. Miss Freeman's guests at that time included Prof. Heuser, instructor in German in Columbia University, and his family.

Prof. Heuser's daughter, 6 years old, returning from the poultry house at the Bouwerie, reported no eggs, but said a big snake was in a hen's nest. Grownups, using an ax, killed the 5-foot snake.

Miss Freeman then discovered that the china nest egg was missing from the nest. The search led to the interior of the snake, where the missing china egg was recovered.

Where ignorance is bliss it is folly to be wise.

EASY TO SWINDLE WOMEN

Confessed Forger Tells How She Found Out Peculiarities of Signatures.

Los Angeles, Cal.—How she had originated an elaborate system to swindle other women and how about thirty of the most prominent society women in Los Angeles had easily become her victims, was told by Miss Sarah Elaine Barr, behind the bars of a cell in the City Jail.

Miss Barr, declared to be the most diminutive and dainty prisoner ever held in custody in this city, was arrested on a charge of passing forged checks. Weepingly she admitted the charge and explained how it had been easy for one small girl to swindle countless other women in the matter of their bank accounts.

"It was so easy," Miss Barr explained in her cell. "Of course to work a deliberate system one has to go about it cleverly, so I thought out my plan all myself. I was unable to get a position because of my small physique. I was a trained nurse but not strong.

"One day I had to have a small sum of money. I knew a girl who had a bank account, but I did not know how she signed her name.

"That's how it all began and where I got my idea for my scheme. I called up her bank and learned her address. Then I called her on the telephone and told her I was a cashier and that some one had attempted to pass a check forged with her name. By questioning her I learned how she signed checks and, employing this knowledge I passed a check on her account for $16.50.

"I decided if it was an easy proposition on one woman it would be equally easy on many. So I built up my system and tried the same trick on about forty women more or less prominent here. I always used that system and it always worked. Now I'm sorry."

According to detective Nick Harris, who made the arrest, Miss Barr secured more than $400 by her" system" in three months.

One detail alone she overlooked in this system, Harris declares. That was her habit of drawing a long line after each signature. Yesterday the girl passed two genuine checks, drawing the tell tale long line as usual. The Sleuth found her by this mark and, after being arrested, she broke down and confessed.

SAYS HE PREFERS HELL TO FUTURE IN HEAVEN

Infidel Writes Own Funeral Oration —Wants His Ashes Cast on Graves of Friends

Shenandoah, Iowa.—Cremated and half his ashes cast on the waters of the Mississippi in honor of those who have gone down to their death in the deep, and the other half scattered on the graves of ten of his friends is what Jerry Brown, a famous Shenandoah character who professes to be an infidel, states in his funeral oration, which he has already written, he wishes done with his body.

"But should the Christian story of Heaven and hell be true, and such men as Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David and Solomen be in heaven, I wish my friends to check my baggage to the other station," says Brown in his funeral document. "Heaven may have a little advantage in climate, but hell certainly has the best society."

The ten friends who this second oldest Shanandoah citizen wishes to honor with his ashes are, Joe Van Buskirk, A. B. West, D. C. Wills, H. S. Holcome, D. S. Campbell, Charles Keenan, Dr. Cheschier, Henry Nesmith, Mrs. David Wingert and D. B. Brubaker.

LIGHTNING RINGS FIRE BELL

Thunder Clap Shakes Juneau Like an Earthquake.

Juneau, Alaska.—A flash of lightning rang the fire bell in the city hall at 5:30 o'clock during a recent electrical storm. There was a crash of thunder and building were shaken as the by an earthquake. People came running out of homes and buildings to the city hall in the belief that there was a fire.

FEW HUSKY WIVES EVER DESERTED

HUSBANDS USUALLY CLING TO HELPMATES WHO BELIEVE IN BABIES, REPORT SHOWS.

ILL FARES THE TANGO FIEND

Whiners are Most Likely to Lose Liege Lords, Chicago Investigators Find.

Chicago, Ill.—When you see a lrage woman industriously engaged at a daily occupation you can feel assured she has a husband who sticks by the fireside and never dreams of desertion.

Furthermore, if you see another woman hurrying along with two babies in her arms and anywhere from six to a dozen tugging at her skirts, you can wager all you have that she, too, has a husband who will never desert.

The prevailing idea that physically heroic women, because of their muscular superiority, often lead men to abandon the fireside, and that the wails and cries and tears of a house full of children have the same effect, has been exploded by the investigators of the Chicago Bureau of Public Welfare.

So hearken ye all to the wisdom of the investigators:

"No. 1—A physically large woman who is a willing worker is very seldom if ever deserted.

"No. 2—Women of this type have the knack of retaining the affection and attention of their husbands and keeping the home happy.

"No. 3—Wives who bless their homes with plenty of children are almost as successful in retaining the affections of their husbands. Large families, contrary to the general belief, is a guarantee of marital happiness and permanence.

"No. 4—Wives who devote much time to preparing little delicacies for their husbands, who master the science of cooking, who greet him with smiles and kisses when he comes home, are never deserted.

"No. 5—Wives who greet husbands with the complaint that the children were cross all day, that little Charley engaged in a fistic encounter with little Hal the next door and cite other troubles are apt to be deserted any time.

"No. 6—Wives of the clinging variety who want to tango, to do the hesitation whether the husband is tired out from his labors or not, often find themselves searching for their missing spouse."

The percentage of desertions it was found, is highest among American born. The Italians, it was discovered, seldom desert their wives. Seventy per cent of the desertions are due to the heads of the family being out of employment and worried over bills.

SELLING RATTLERS

Stranger is His Own Show Window and Comes Well Fortified With Snakebite "Cure".

Walla Walla, Wash.—Alfred Boock of Wallula created excitement here when he marched down main street with one big, live rattlesnake wrapped around his neck, another entwined about an arm and three smaller ones in a tin can, searching for a druggist who would buy them for their oil, which he said was valuable.

The man collected a crowd and a citizen insisted that a rattler had bitten Boock in the hand. Two policemen took him to jail in an express wagon and searched him, but no signs of snakebite were found.

However, a policeman stated that Boock appeared to have swallowed a quite sufficient amount of the "cure." Officers searched him gingerly, as it was reported he had his pockets full of snakes. The can of serpents was left in the street. Patrolman Gates killed them with a stick.

ROOSTER EATS 425 KERNELS

Novel Guessing Contest at Masonic Picnic in Iowa.

Sioux City, Iowa.—More than 1,500 Masons and Eastern Stars attended the picnic given at the Shore Acre Boat Club under the auspices of Isis chapter, No. 173, O. E. S. One of the entertaining features was a novel guessing contest.

A large rooster was allowed to go all day without any food. Contestants then guessed how many grains of corn the rooster would eat when fed. At 5 o'clock 2,000 kernels of corn were placed in the coop, and the bird was allowed to satisfy its hunger. After it had stopped eating a count of the remaining grains was made. It was found that the rooster had eaten 425 kernels. Miss Helen M. Miller, who guessed 425, won the rooster.

PRAISES PASTOR; ROBS HIM.

Young Woman Steals His Wallet as She Lauds "Splendid Sermon."

Denver, Colo.—The police are seeking the smoothest woman crook this city has heard of for quite some time.

She met Rev. R. S. Rex, a clergyman of St. Paul, Minn., on a downtown street.

"I want to congratulate you," she said smiling, as she drew close to the minister, "upon your splendid sermon at St. Mary's church last Sunday."

Later, Rev. Mr. Rex found he was minus a wallet containing $80 and round trip tickets to the California expositions.

Kneading boards and such things should be kept in a cupboard or some place entirely free from dust.

St. Joe Wins.

The St. Joe Independents took the Spencerville City Team across the coals again last Thursday eve, score 33-29, making it two games each. It was a fierce contest from the first blast of the whistle and outside of a little roughness it was the best game witnessed this season. Spencerville came up loaded for "Bear" and nearly done the trick too. The score at the end of the first half was 14-8 in favor of Spencerville, but our team went in the last half with the inten ions of overcoming Spencerville's lead, and they did.

However, St Joe lacks or has lacked proper confidence in most of their games. No player can go in a game without the best encouragement from the rest of the team. So let's see the team get together and give the proper encouragement to each other and place your confidence to win. It will win you more games than ever before. Keep plugging, we're for you.

BACK HURTS USE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

at less meat if Kidneys feel like lead or Bladder bothers you—Meat forms uric acid.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Arline Koch with Mrs. Anna Baker as hostess, occurred one of the best W. C. T. U., meetings held this winter. The president, Mrs. Lillian Buckingham, called the meeting to order at 2:00 o'clock. Opening song, "Some Glad Day". The topic was "Physical Education". After a few moments of silent prayer, Mrs. Jennie Sechler offered prayer. Mrs. Sylvia Ginther led the devotional by reading a part of the Twelfth Chapter of Romans. Prayer by Mrs. Mary Buchanan. After the reading of the minutes, roll call and business, a very interesting program was given as follows: "Physical Education a Temperance Measure" a very interesting paper by Mrs. Rose Widney. Mrs. Retta Hathaway read a very good leaflet "Sinning Against the Unborn". Mrs Mary Buchanan gave an original paper on "The Care of Nervous Children" which all enjoyed and a very good and interesting discussion followed. "Do Farmer's Children Need Physical Education" was read by Mrs. Malvina Nelson. Mrs. Lora Leighty then sang a solo entitled "A Dream of the Judgement Day". Miss Shorden gave the ladies a drill in Physical Culture, which was very much enjoyed. Twenty-five ladies were present, all members but three, two of whom gave their names to the Secretary as new members; they were Mrs. Emma Bearss and Mrs. Daisy Woodcox. The session was dismissed, by all repeating the Lord's Prayer. At the social hour which followed, Mrs. Baker and Mrs. Koch served delightful refreshments.

OLD-TIME COLD CURE—DRINK HOT TEA!

It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieving congestion. Also loosens the bowels, thus breaking up a cold.

Try it the next time you suffer from a cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

Hello 31
This is JONES
the new man
In Town.

We enjoy the cackel of the hen, bring us all the eggs you can. You can depend on us to pay the highest going price at all times.

We have just passed our second week in St. Joe and have had the pleasure of meeting and making many new acquaintances and our sales have far exceeded our most sanguine expectations.

We sincerely hope by honest, fair and courteous treatment to increase our business from week to week, to a point where we ourselves as well as the public will be proud of the kind of a store it will be our aim to establish and operate.

We are making many changes to facilitate the handling of merchandise and have received many compliments from patrons as to arrangements. We are increasing the grocery department and expect to give this part of our business special attention. We are already doing a nice business in our dry goods department. We have Shoes and Hosiery for the entire family--everything in rubber footwear. We have moved our Shoe department to the balcony second floor and it is some shoe store by itself, our aim will be to make the Shoe business interesting to the buying public. HINTS TO HOUSEWIVES.

Do not open a wet umbrella to dry it. Wipe it down with an old soft silk handkerchief and leave it to drain in a bath or basin, shut up.

Dried orange-peel revives a neglected fire more thoroughly and quicker than anything else, but is a very noisy and spluttery remedy.

To prevent hot water bottles "singing," screw stoppers down tightly as soon as they are filled and after they are taken into the bedrooms unscrew them for a moment to let the steam escape, then screw them tightly up again.

To prevent your hands chapping always wash them in cold water; but, if this is too Spartan for you, dusting them over with a little toilet oatmeal after each washing will sometimes prevent it.

To wash hairbrushes, mix together a tablespoonful of liquid ammonia and about a quart of water. Do not wet the back of the brush. Rinse in clear cold water.

Milk will burn quite easily, but this can be rectified in the following way: Pour the boiling milk into a clean pitcher and stand in a basin of cold water until quite cool.

To keep the leaves of India rubber plants firm and glossy, sponge them once a week with tepid milk and water, first washing them—if dusty—with slightly soapy water.

In ironing a garment on which hooks are sewn, care should be taken not to close the hooks. You can prevent this by placing flannel or anything soft beneath the hooks.

If there is no maid to serve the dinner, put a tray cloth on the wheeled tray and stand it beside you at the table. Dessert and side dishes can be easily served from this tray.

CONCERNING WOMEN.

California has a court composed of women.

Hawaii has a curfew law for girls under 16 years of age.

Nearly 3,000 single women in Pennsylvania pay an income tax.

One munition factory in Scotland is employing over 6,000 women.

Paris is to have a bronze bas-relief of Miss Cavell's execution.

Over 11,000 women are employed in the bakeries of the United States.

According to Dr. Carolene M. Parnell, a woman can remain an efficient worker until she is 80 years old.

The eight-hour law for women in the District of Columbia has been upheld by the Court of Appeals.

The Women's Trade Union League of New York has asked for volunteers to investigate factory conditions.

Five Frenchwomen employed as colporteurs in France have sold in a single year 16,632 copies of the scriptures.

Kansas has established an industrial commission to regulate hours, wages and conditions of work for women.

Making the Home Comfy

Needlework.

One woman has laid in a supply of the simple Irish picot edging as a finish for some guest towels. The lace is sufficiently heavy not to look out of place on the huck.

If annoyed by breaking silk when sewing, particularly in overcasting where there is a hard pull on the thread, try drawing the fingers along the silk from the point where broken off to the end. Sometimes waxing gives further strength.

You may avoid bad spots in garments being remodeled by examining the goods carefully and outlining the holes or defective spots with thread of a contrasting color. These spots which might otherwise be overlooked, can thus be avoided in the cutting or can be put in an unimportant place.

Telephone tablets or pads may be bought ready to cover at any stationery store. The covers may be made of cardboard, covered with cretonne, or just a flap of some pretty colored mounting board. A silk cord is used to hang the tablet by the telephone, and should, of course, have a pencil attached.

Baby caps made in one piece are most attractive and also convenient, as they can be ironed flat and thus kept fresh and dainty. They are cut with a straight edge and a semi-circular edge, very much the shape of one side of a tea cozy. The straight edge is fitted to the face and the semi-circular edge drawn into shape by means of eyelets worked along the edge, thru which ribbon is run. Rosettes at each side are also formed of the ribbon. White ribbon with blue scallops and forgetmenots embroidered over it, would certainly make a lovely cap for the baby. A cap of this kind for winter wear should have a lining of thin wadding and silk.

To prevent the lace yoke of an evening dress from beig soiled by contact with the skin, line the yoke by hand with a piece of chiffon. When soiled by perspiration this is easily ripped out and a clean piece substituted.

Keep needles dry and shiny and the thread clean. Have an emery in every workbag or in its absence one's hair can be utilized. Thread or silk kept on spool cases grows dusty and the outer layer, if soiled, should be discarded.

Sheets which are wearing in the middle should be cut right through the center, the weakest parts should be cut away, and the sheet rejoined, with the sides now forming the center. If a sheet is too much worn to be remade it will cut up into towels for glass and china.

An experienced needlewoman suggests a list (which gives the various numbers of needles and cotton) to follow when sewing by hand. She advises a No. 9 needle for 70 and 80 cotton, when hemming and tucking; a No. 8 needle for 50 and 60 cotton for plain sewing, overhauling and overcasting; a No. 7 needle for 40 and 60 thread for gathering. When gathering or working buttonholes rub the thread over with a piece of beeswax. This will keep it from knotting and also help it to resist strain.

Always thread silk into a needle by putting the end of the silk that exists before it is unwound from the spool in the eye first. If the silk is put in from the end you break or cut, it untwists more easily than if it is threaded from the other end. Clip all bastings to be removed at five or six inch intervals. They can then be pulled out without wrinkling the fabric.

When you are sewing a great deal of work may be saved by the following arrangement: Place the sewing table on the left and at the right angle to the sewing machine; you can then turn from the sewing machine to the table without leaving your chair. If the scrap basket is placed at your right hand, all small bits can be dropped into the basket with ease, and save the after effort of picking them off the floor.

A convenient money bag is made by cutting two pieces of chamois, each piece 3 by 9 inches. Lay the two pieces together and stitch the sides and on a line one inch from the bottom edge. Snip the unseamed part and the top to make the fringe. Fold the top back upon the right side and cut four slits in each half one inch below the fold. Run narrow chamois thongs through the slits and finish with knots or small tassels, or fasten with small snappers.

Recipes.

Omelet, Percival.—Eggplant cut in squares and fried in butter, grated parmesan cheese beaten in the eggs—the omelet made in butter in which the eggplant was fried. The eggplant folded into it, seasoned with salt and black pepper.

Fruit Turnovers.—Two cups flour, two teaspoonfuls baking powder, one-half teaspoonful salt, two teaspoonfuls shortening, one-half cup milk, four teaspoonfuls seeded and chopped raisins. Sift flour, salt, baking powder into bowl; and shortening and rub in very lightly. Add enough milk to hold together; put on floured board; roll out one-half inch thick: cut into three inch squares. Put a teaspoonful of the chopped raisins in center, wet edges with milk and turn over, making it three cornered. Press together, brush top with milk and bake twenty-five to thirty minutes in hot oven.

DOG PATRON OF MOVIES

Shows Interest When Scenes are Exciting, but Sleeps if They Bore

Baltimore, Md.—Patrons of the moving picture parlor near the corner of North avenue and Charles street are accustomed on many night to have rather an interesting companion who is just as ardent a movie fan as any one present. The visitor is a fox terrier, which regularly takes its place in the audience and behaves itself with full decorum.

Jack, for that is the animal's name, accompanies its mistress, Mrs. John S. Constable, of 328 East Twentieth street. Once in the movie-parlor Jack must have a seat to himself. He sits up and keeps a close watch on the movements of the figures on the screen. Jack has little or no appreciation for parlors where there is not music, and, like the people, he likes the pictures of action best. If a picture is dead or monotonous the dog will often jump off its seat, and, lying on the floor, will quietly drop off to sleep.

But first of all Jack is a lover of music. Let him hear musical sounds coming from any building and he will insist on being taken in to listen to it. One of his favorite weekly jaunts is down to the band concert on the Fallsway. While the concert lasts there is little hope of getting the dog to go home. With his ears pricked up he will listen to the strains with delight and seems to take great pleasure in martial pieces.

It is hard to judge how far a dog can follow the action on the screen. Scientists claim that it is hard for them to keep their eyes focused on the screen for any length of time. Mrs. Constable says, however that Jack keeps his eyes on the pictures and the occasional pricking of his ears and other actions show that he follows the action with a certain amount of appreciation. It is too bad that on a recent night when Jack was not there a picture in which a cat ran across the scene was flashed. However, some other dog had crept in and it created some excitement by dashing for the stage and making such an uproar that it plainly showed its disapproval of the cat's presence.

Jack has many other accomplishments. One of his favorite stunts is to go out each evening to meet Mr. Constable coming home from work. As soon as he meets his master, the dog takes the evening paper from him and brings it home in its mouth. He insists on going shopping, too, and must always be permitted to bring some of the articles home himself. One thing he positively refuses to do and that is, stay home alone. In fact, he has a decided dislike for being alone at any time. When in the house he will always keep near somebody and if only one is in the house he will follow that one from place to place.

NOTED CHICAGO SURGEON IS AID TO BLIND GIRL

Takes Her Home With Him and Declares "She Will See"—Touched by Her Story.

Los Angeles, Cal.—This tells how a Chicago surgeon, spending his vacation on the great desert is San Bernardino County, found in a small desert mining town a pretty 14-year-old orphan girl, who had been blind from birth and suffering from severe burns sustained a few days ago. And when the Good Samaritan laid hands upon the sufferer, he discovered, he said, that the girl's sight could be restored

Later the Santa Fe limited train took the physician, his wife and the little orphan girl on their way to Chicago to recover from her burns, and to be led into the light of vision.

The girl is Lottie Smith. The physician is Dr. W. E. Klutts. The girl was living with distant relatives named Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Harnath, in the mining town of Ivanpaw, thirty miles north of Barnwell.

Some days ago the girl's clothes caught fire from the kitchen stove in the Harnath home. She was severely burned before Mrs. Harnath could beat out the flames.

There are no physicians in Ivanpaw, and the girl, it is said, lay for hours ill and without medical attention.

Then came the Good Samaritan. Dr. Klutts and his wife in a party of easterners motored through the desert. They stopped at the mining town. They heard of the suffering blind girl.

Touched by the story of the sufferer, Dr. Klutts visited her. He gave first aid to the burned area of the girl's body. Then he examined her eyes.

"She shall see!" exclaimed the physician. Then he begged permission to take the girl back to Chicago with him for treatment. The Harnaths consented, and full of hope that helped kill her pain, the little girl flitted eastward with her benefactors.

MANY SIGHTS HAS HE SEEN

Oklahoma Farmer Is a Native of the Holy Land.

Depew, Okla.—There is a farmer living near here, Ibrim Shaffen, who was born under a venerable cedar in the classic Lebanon mountains, lived for some time in Jericho, attended school in Damascus, herded sheep near Mount Carmel, fished in the river Jordan and repeatedly bathed in the Red Sea.

Ibrim was crippled in his right foot while climbing down off the great pyramid in Egypt. He now raises cantaloupes and peanuts on a little farm in Creek County, Oklahoma.

Cut Down▯Infant Mortality to Low Ebb

Mothercraft means in simple language the art of raising children. The foundation of this art is education. Mothers are taught simple rules and principles, which they can follow out in the home even though under unfavorable social economic and hygienic conditions. This knowledge must be practical and simple enough for moderately intelligent women to comprehend easily and to use it. Its efficiency depends upon its wide dissemination and the ease with which it can be learned.

According to the evidence collected from a large number of mothercraft schools in France, Belgium and England the few principles on which the successful management of infants depends are as follows:

1. Either breast fed or artificially fed infants should be fed at absolutely regular intervals and at not too short intervals.

2. Infants must not be fed more than once at night, preferably not at all.

3. Babies must not sleep in the same beds as their mothers.

4. Neither should infants be wrapped up in too heavy clothes nor have stiff binders which interfere with movement.

5. They must be regularly aired and regularly exercised.

How easily these few principles can be learned even by the least educated mothers is plainly shown by the remarkable decrease in the infant death rate in the European countries, where an effort has been made to distribute this knowledge by the various child welfare societies which have been in existence for the last few years. In some places it has been reduced as much as 50 per cent. Infants will live and thrive in spite of poverty and poor sanitation, but they will not live under conditions of bad mothercraft; and this is the lesson of schools for mothers.

During the last ten years 2,000,000 children (babies) have died in the United States. The large majority succumbed to bad mothercraft and were sacrificed at the shrine of ignorance.

Until recently only the diseased conditions of the body were studied and treated by the physicians, but today the healthy baby is receiving its share of attention—a new branch of medicine has been created, which deals with the study of the child in health as distinct from the child in disease.

The great principle in vogue today is to prevent disease and direct slight ailment early so they can be cured before a serious disease results. By following these rational lines the infant mortality is bound to keep decreasing in proportion to the extent that these principles are followed out.

Taking advantage of your proffered advice, may I ask: Should a 2-month old baby be fed during the night? Should the bands be loosened during the night? Should cold or warm water be given, and how much and how often?

U. L. McA.

Reply: A 2-month-old baby should be fed once during the night. The band should never be put on tightly. It may be made looser at night, but there is danger of its slipping up. Two ounces of warm water may be given between each feeding. Water must be boiled and given in a sterile bottle or cup.

VALUE OF NUTS.

By Mary Lee.

"We do not appreciate the food value of nuts in this country." Mrs. Happy Homemaker was carefully peeling the thin husks from a panful of fat brown chestnuts. "We eat them between meals or after a hearty meal and then complain that they are indigestible, and, of course, they are; if a fairly thick slice of roast beef were taken after the dessert, to top off a meal, don't you suppose that any overburdened stomach would object? And practically the same thing happens when we finish with nuts.

"Nuts have a high protein content, and a high fat content as well, and should take the place of meat in a meal; or, if served as a desert, should make the whole course. I have been reading up on nuts. I am going to give a paper on them for the club and I have learned a lot of things.

"Almonds are always available in the markets and are so rich in protein and fats that a pound of shelled almonds is equivalent in food value to about three pounds of steak. At usual prices a good grade of almonds is more economical than the ordinary cuts of meat.

"Chestnuts are a staple food in parts of Italy and have a delicious flavor in soups, stuffings and sauces. Our own native chestnuts, boiled or served whole or roasted, make an excellent simple desert.

"Hickory nuts, English walnuts, pecan nuts and filberts are not only palatable in muffins, cake and yeast bread but adds to the food vaue in a rational way. Peanuts are rich in oil and protein. They are nearly equal to almonds in food value and are even more economical. Peanuts are too concentrated a food for eating between meals or to be taken after a meal already sufficient; but they may take the place of meat in the meal, and peanut butter may be used on bread and sandwiches without butter. They, too, may be used with cake and cookies. Chopped nuts may be served with a variety of desserts.

"What I am doing tody is according to the recipe of an Italian housewife I am preserving the chestnuts for later winter use. She says:

"'Roast or boil the nuts until tender, shell and remove the inner skin. Make a sirup with one pint of water and one pound of sugar, the juice of two lemons and the grated rind of one. When the sirup has boiled well add one pint of the blanched chestnuts, let simmer gently for half an hour or more, then seal up boiling hot in small jars.

"'These may be served in many ways, either plain, with wafers, or with with whipped cream over them. Or place a spoonful in a sherbet glass, fill up with frappe or ice cream; or pour a spoonful over the ice cream or ice of any sort. They may also be mixed through a mold of lemon or orange gelatine and served with cream."

The very latest gossips and features of interest to movie fans will be given here every week. We are sure the movie fans among our subscribers will appreciate this department.

NEW "SIS HOPKINS" COMEDIES READY.

Fans Will Have Opportunity to See Famous Stage Character On Screen.

Film men are showing unusual interest in the forthcoming comedies which will feature Rose Melville, creator of Sis Hopkins, the famouse stage character. Reports from insiders indicate that they believe that there is another fad on the way equal to the Chaplin craze and the fate of the comedies will decide whether wise film men really can say whether a player is to cause a sensation. The public is a fickle creature, and attempts to forecast its decisions meets with varying success.

But local fans will be able to state their own opinions very soon. The first of the Sis Hopkins comedies will be shown at local theatres the first week in March. It is called "A Flock of Skeletons," and after that a new Sis Hopkins comedy will be released each week. Kalem, which is producing the pictures, has promised what so many fans have been clamoring for—something new in comedy. Slapstick has been done to death and it is certain that if the Sis Hopkins comedies bear out the promise of being an original type of comedy they will be heartily welcomed.

The Sis Hopkins comedies are being produced with the sunny atmosphere of Jacksonville, Florida, as a background. The company at work on the pictures numbers in its ranks many well known favorites of the screen and stage. Arthur Albertson, who has been seen as a leading man in Kalem pictures for some time. Richard Purdon and Mary Kennedy are among the players of the screen. Frank Minzey, long associated with the stage production of Sis Hopkins, is among the players. Olive West, who will be remembered from her work in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," and a score of successes, makes her screen debut in the new comedies. Another favorite who will make his initial screen bow is Henry Murdock, ranked among the best of the acrobatic comedians of the stage.

HOPE SPRINGS ETERNAL IN THE THE HUMAN BREAST.

Present-Day Amateurs To Be Future Stars of the Screen Plays.

"Some of the stars who have been the greatest favorites on the stage may fail entirely when put into film," said Mr. Oliver Morosco when interviewed recently. "No matter how popular a star may have been on the stage, nor how great her success, she may be a flat failure in motion pictures. We may put her into one picture, believing that her stage popularity will remain with her to the end; but as soon as the picture is reelased, we may learn, to our sorrow and heavy financial loss, through the efficiency of the criticism that this star will not do for motion pictures.

"On the other hand, some girl may come along who never has had any stage or screen experience whatever, but who has a pleasing personality and a natural aptitude for acting. She may score in a picture from the very first and spring into national popularity within a year. Such a girl we call a decided find."

ALICE BRADY IS REAL NEW YORKER.

The World Film star whose rise to nation-wide popularity is due to dramatic ability and brilliance as well as to charm of person and personality is Miss Alice Brady.

Miss Brady is a New York girl who turned to the stage simply because it was impossible to resist the call of her natural talent in that direction. She was educated at the College of St. Elizabeth, in Madison, N. J., and soon after graduation made her first appearance in the metropolitan revivals of Gilbert & Sullivan operettas. She showed such great promise that she was quickly in demand and appeared in the leading roles in the productions of "Little Women," "The Family Cupboard," "The Things That Count," and "Sinners," both in New York and throughout the country. Between times she played leads in stock at Dayton, Ohio.

Her first venture in the film drama was under the World banner, in the picture "As Ye Sow." Then followed her hit in "The Boss." Since then she has been starred in a number of big pictures, including "The Lure of Women" and "The Rack."

WIGS AND WHISKERS ARE ON THE WANE.

Wigmakers reaped a harvest when the movies first became a popular form of entertainment, and they believed that this new amusement augured continued prosperity.

This prediction was warranted perhaps when moving pictures were first introduced. In the early days the slapstick comedy which introduced hideous and impossible characters met with popular approval. It was in such productions that the man with the funny hair and the impossible whiskers cornered all the laughs. There was no opportunity for the people to see anything more elevating.

But with strides which were swift and sure the moving picture show developed. The producers found that the public wanted reality more than burlesque. Then came the photoplay with its consistent story and real flesh and blood characters. The public showed its appreciation by sincere attention and support. Even the slightest touch of the unnatural in these true-to-life stories proved to be a jarring note. This brought the demand for types.

Conscientious producers now demand that the characters step from real life into the screen without artificial adornment. This demand for character accuracy is well illustrated in "The Gods of Fate," the new five-reel production. Every member of the cast is naturally fitted for his respective role. This adds greatly to the realism throughout this gripping photoplay. The thrilling scenes, the action and the characters from life, harmonize to bring a most artistic result.

"The Gods of Fate," is life itself and it is doubtful if there is a more complete production now before the public.

STAR'S MOTHER IN PICTURES.

In "Dimples," a forthcoming production in which Mary Miles Minter has the stellar role, the character of Mrs. Riley, her aunt, is played by Charlotte Shelby. It has been noted that there is truly a remarkable resemblance between "Dimples" and Mrs. Riley.

There should be. Charlotte Shelby, in real life is none other than Miss Minter's mother. Mrs. Shelby was formerly a well-known actress, but has not appeared professionally for several years. However, she is always found with her charming little daughter around the studio, and when the company went South to make the exteriors, Mrs. Shelby went along. Director Edgar Jones induced her to take a part in the production.

Mary Miles Minter's name was Juliet Shelby until after she made her biggest stage success in "The Littlest Rebel." She changed her name then on the theory that it sounded "too stagey."

VALUABLE HEIRLOOM USED IN FILM.

Those who are interested in valuable relics and antiques will be given a rare treat when they view the shawl, which is worn by Miss Charlotte Burton in her portrayal of "Queen of the Dance Hall" in "The Craving," a five-part de luxe edition American Mutual masterpiece, in which William Russell has the leading role.

The shawl is one which has been in the Burton family for four generations, and is a magnificent example of the old Castillian work that was done in the early days of California. The heirloom has been on exhibition many times in various American cities.

MOVIE NOTES.

Life at one of the trading posts of the Northern Country furnished the theme for the story by James Oliver Curwood, which will be put into production by Directer William Humphrey. Mr. Humphrey will take a company of players to the section of the country described by Curwood in his book. The story is now being picturized by Edward Montague, who has adapted a number of books and stage productions for the screen.

Elizabeth Burbridge, who plays the leading feminine role in "Golden Lies," an Essanay three-act drama, is the grand-daughter of the late General Stephen B. Burbridge, commander of the first brigade, Thirteenth army corps, and military governor of Kentucky under President Lincoln.

Edward J. Peil has had a wide and varied theatrical experience. He is a retiring, modest young man, whose reticence has earned him the sobriquet of "Edward the Silent."

It is wonderful to hear Frederick Pusey discuss the careers of movie actors. Frederick, unfortunately, is falling behind in his school studies.

Darwin Karr, who plays the lead in the three-act drama, "The Prisoner at the Bar," was a traveling salesman for a knitting factory before he became an actor.

Harry Dunkinson, has received hundreds of letters complimenting him on his splendid interpretation of the part of "Boney," the half-wit, in "The Misleading Lady." He says he doesn't know whether to take it as a slam or a compliment.

The most realistic fight scene ever staged on the studio floor was filmed for "The Primitive Strain," a three-act drama, the action of which takes place in the frozen north. Edward Arnold and Hugh Thompson were the principals in the conflict and before the scene ended they were fighting in earnest. The struggle was supposed to take place in a crowded gambling den in the far north, and when the camera stopped grinding, four persons, who had been struck by chairs and bottles, were found seriously hurt. It was necessary to summon a physician immediately to care for their wounds. One of the extra men received the most serious injury. An X-ray examination revealed four fractured ribs on his right side.

The spinster who celebrates her birthday anniversaries usually does so in silence.

It's impossible for a man to say anything complimentary to a woman that will surprise her.

Many a girl imagines her surroundings are not in keeping with her air of refinement and culture.

Notes and Comment

Of Interest to Women Readers

Restless Baby.

If the baby sleeps lightly, wakes often and seems uncomfortable, it may be that something is disturbing him which can be remedied.

He may be nervous from having been tickled, played with or tossed about in the latter part of the day. Overstimulation is to be avoided, no matter what its source or what the age of the baby.

He may be too warm, too cold, or wet; there may be something scratching him, or there may be wrinkles in the bedclothing; he may be lying in a cramped position, or his clothing may be too tight. Perhaps he has been overfed, or has had something unsuitable to eat, or is hungry or thirsty.

The room may be too hot, too cold, too light, too noisy, or not sufficiently aired. The conditions which make sleep a delight to older persons affect the baby in the same way, namely, plenty of fresh air passing in a constant current through the room, quiet, a clean body and clean, comfortable clothing, a good bed and suitable coverings.

A cold bath or a warm one, according to the temperature will help to induce quiet sleep. In the summer, when the baby is fretful and sleeps restlessly, a tub, bath at bedtime will help to relieve him. A little baby should be turned over once or twice in the course of a long nap.

For the Housewife.

Hot water marks can be removed from japanned trays by rubbing with sweet oil. When the marks have disappeared rub with dry flour and a soft cloth.

When a filling of cocoanut is to be used between the layers of a cake, ice both the upper and under side of the layers, and they will not separate when the cake is cut.

The latest idea in bedroom furnishing is to have the comforters match the window hangings. It is rather expensive, if the comforters must be made to order. If you yourself make the comforters and the curtains, you can carry out the idea without extravagance.

A trunk may be made into comfortable window seat by padding the top and covering it with cretonne. Use one piece to cover the top and front, and a plaited flounce for the ends. If the seat occupies a corner a pillow covered with the cretonne will be decidedly effective.

How to do up lace or net curtains and have them the same color as when new is something of a problem. When the starch has boiled and it still hot or boiling, put yellow ochre in and stir it all through until you have the shade you want your curtains. Five cents' worth of ochre in the powder will be sufficient for a large number of curtains.

Health Notes.

It is claimed that tea boiled with water and strained is a mild astringent lotion for lessening hair falling.

Were good, vigorous walking more generally and regularly engaged in by both sexes the necessity for gymnastics and other artificial substitutes would not be so apparent.

In view of the alarming increase in heart and arterial diseases, nervous troubles and insanity, as well as cancer, it is at least comforting to find from recent statistics that the mortality from diphtheria and cerebrospinal meningitis has been reduced nearly 60 per cent in New York alone since antitoxin was first understood. True cholera infantum, too, is rarely seen now that baby feeding has become a science, while the great epidemics of typhus and smallpox which used to sweep the country are practically unknown.

To cure hysteria, wrap mustard plasters about hands, wrists, soles and palms, and allow patient to rest.

Glycerin and lemon juice in equal parts on a bit of absorbent cotton is the best thing to moisten the lips of a fever patient.

For toothache, soak a bit of medicated cotton in oil of cloves or oil of wintergreen, and gently press into the cavity, and where this is absent bathe the gum and try the hot water bag.

Cooking Bacon.

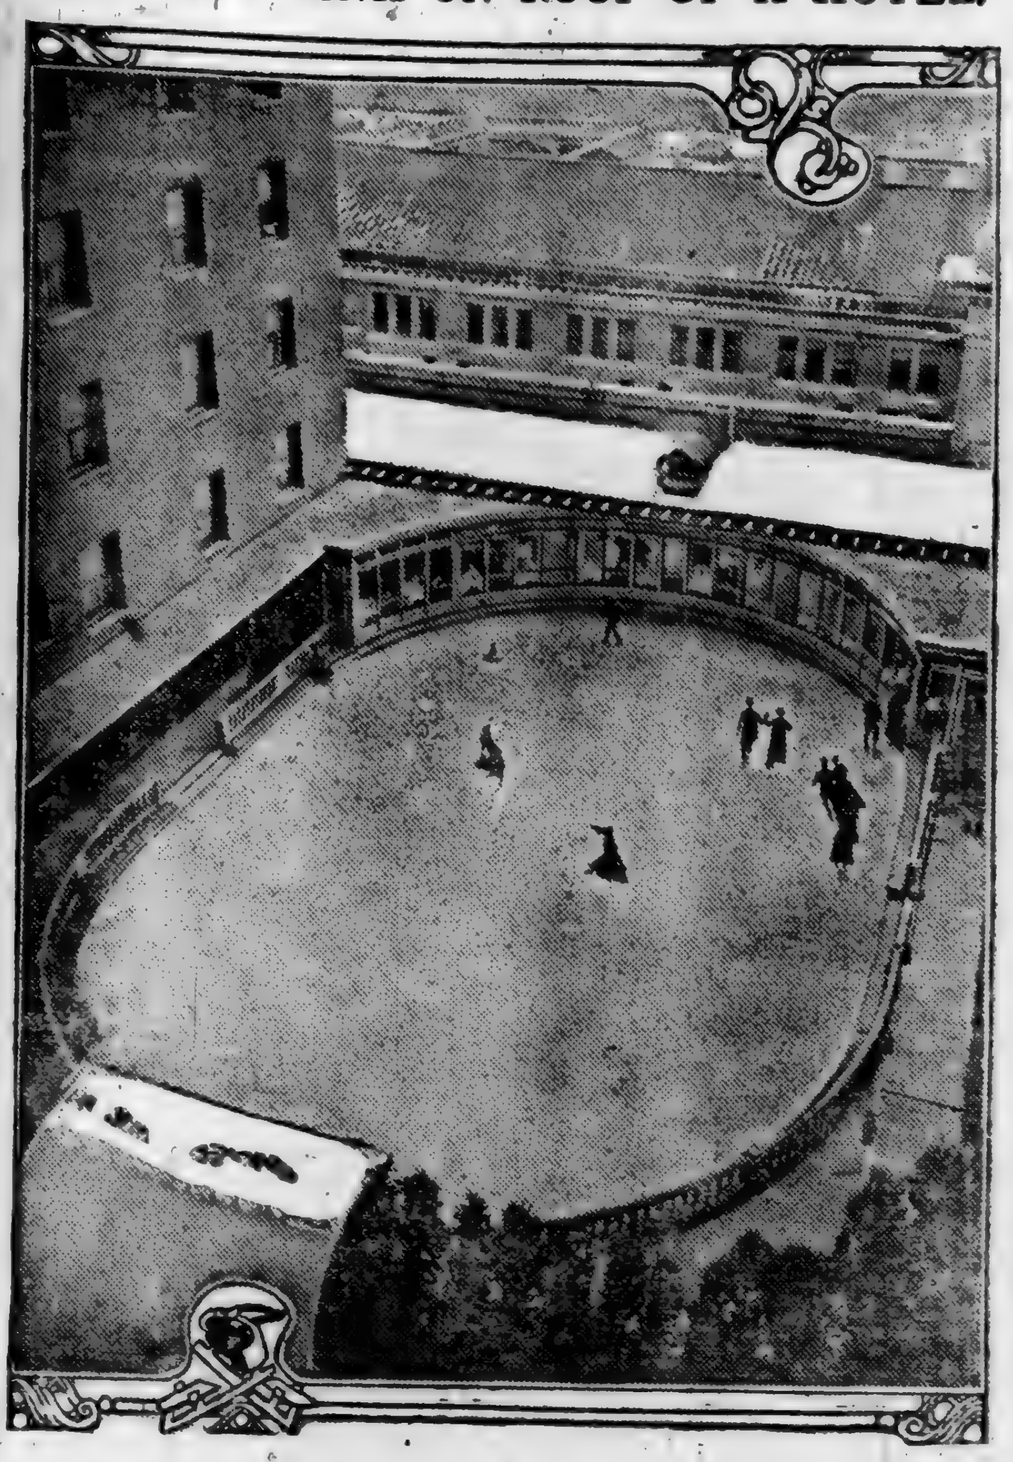
Bacon when cut too thin is wasted in the cooking, as much goes out in the grease. If cut too thick the lean part is toughened in the cooking, as it has to cook too long to be done through. Although the usual method is to fry bacon, it is considered better if it is broiled under the gas blaze or baked in the oven. Much care is required in broiling to have the blaze low enough so that the grease from the meat will not catch fire. In both baking and broiling bacon much of the smoke is avoided that cooks object to when it is fried.

Inserting Wicks.

After many unsuccessful attempts to insert new wicks into lamps and oil heaters I devised the plan of dipping one end of the wick for about an inch into starch, either cold or boiled, and ironing until dry, writes a contributor to the Country Gentleman.

Soaking in cold water makes the washing of all garments much easier.

SKATING RINK ON ROOF OF A HOTEL.



An enterprising New York hotel has laid out an ice skating rink on its roof. Inclosed tea rooms circle the rink.

Dictates of Fashion

Still the saucy little turbans and toques are seen. They are among the spring models.

White flannel is novel and delightful for a morning dress intended to wear in the south.

A pretty white sport suit has a deep border, cuffs and shawl collar of rose colored corduroy.

Effective corsage bouquets are made of velvet ropes with black net leaves, edged with chenille.

Changeable silk coats are promised for the spring. They are prettiest trimmed with silk ruchings.

NEEDLEWORK NOTES.

A pair of baby pins to hold the little sleeves the right length or to pin the small yoke or bib, can be fashioned from two of the tiny gilt safety pins, by sewing a small chiffon rose and a few green leaves in the center of each pin. The rose is formed by wrapping a double fold of chiffon around and around until the desired size is attained, while the leaves are formed by cutting bits of satin into the correct shape. Roses made of ribbon, or forget-me-nots of chiffon or ribbon would look as well.

Attractive skirt hangers can be made of crochet. Left over crochet cotton can be utilized in this way, as only about nineteen rows of double crochet, a little over an inch in width, are needed for the hangers. The first row is crocheted in an ivory ring, taking single stitches over the ring. Double crochet stitches are the taken back and forth until the desired length, which should be about nineteen rows, is completed; the last row being crocheted over the bar on a large gilt safety pin. These hangers are more unusual than those made of ribbon and also more practical, as they have a certain elasticity. Mercerized crochet cotton or fiber crochet silk may be used.

HINTS FOR POULTRY FANCIERS.

Now is the time to think about your incubator. If you want early fall layers start the machine going, especially is this good advice to those keeping the heavier breeds.

Don't fail to visit the poultry house at night. It is the only way you can determine whether or not the air is pure. If you find it stifling lose no time in providing more ventilation. This is very important at all times.

Plenty of green food during the breeding season will assist fertility of the eggs.

Don't sell hatching eggs until you have tested them for fertility. If the fertility runs too low, better not sell any until later, or until your fowls are in better breeding condition. Possibly they are overfat.

Too close inbreeding is bound to result in a weaker future flock. When breeding for show purposes it is almost necessary to inbreed to a certain extent, but such breeding must be understood.

Should any of the birds in the breeding pens show signs of scaly legs, start treating them at once. There are several very good scaly leg ointments on the market which will eradicate this condition rapidly.

It costs all it is worth to be popular—but it is seldom worth what it costs.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

The commonest of all causes of nervous disturbance is worry. Worry, as is known, interferes with all the bodily functions. It is especially damaging in its influence on the digestion.

When the allover bath is not taken a hot footbath in mustard water lasting from ten to fifteen minutes, gradually increasing the temperature of the water, gives excellent results in checking a cold.

It is well to avoid persons suffering from cold or sore throat when this is possible, especially where the health is not robust. Remaining in the same room with those thus affected and where the ventilation is poor serves to encourage these troubles.

The easiest and most efficient way to checkmate congestion is by added fuel to the body, inside and out, to stimulate the functions which eliminate the poisons from the system. Hot baths promote and invigorate the general circulation, the pores are assisted in their work by throwing off the impurities. Hot lemonade, quinine and whiskey further increase the circulation and encourage excessive perspiration, relieving the congestion.

A cough frequently accompanies colds and sore throats. An old fashioned remedy advised for a stubborn, painful one contains one-half ounce of boneset, one-fourth ounce of horehound, one-half ounce slippery elm, and one-half ounce best stick licorice. Cover with two quarts of water and boil slowly down to half the quantity, then add one-half pound of brown sugar and one pint of best molasses. Strain carefully, while still hot, add a pint of Jamaica rum or good rye whiskey. Use when cold.

PICTURE HANGING AN ART.

The matter of picture hanging present many problems to those who have not time to give to a careful study of arrangements, and our walls, instead of being restful and well balanced, are too often a hodge-podge of all sorts and conditions of art.

In going over one's pictures eliminate all but the choicest and best beloved and try to group together the pictures whose subjects are somewhat related or which have a similarity in frames. Indeed, even when subjects are closely related, it is not possible always to hang pictures together, owing to a too great difference in the kind of frames. As a rule, any room looks better, especially small rooms, where only one color frame is used on all the pictures.

KILLING AN ODOR.

How often an ill person is made uncomfortable by odors from other parts of the house getting into the sick room. Sometimes when the room is near the kitchen the smells are unbearable. By pouring a few drops of oil of lavender into a glass of very hot water the air of the room can be cleared almost instantly.

TO CLEAN MARBLE.

To clean marble take two parts of common soda, one part of pumice stone and one part of finely powdered salt. Sift the mixture through a fine sieve and mix it with water, then rub it well all over, the marble and the stains will be removed. Rub the marble over with salt and water. Wash off and wipe dry.

One reason women talk so much is because they have so little to say.

The leap year girl who has a young widow for a rival has a poor show.

Stenographers in Boston are attempt for the third time to organise a union like those in Chicago and New York. Thus far they have failed for the lack of support.

In Kitchen and Pantry

For the Housewife.

To remove old putty from window frames pass a red-hot poker slowly over it and the putty will come off easily.

Dull brass may be treated with a paste made from powdered pumice stone moistened with vinegar when it needs to be renovated.

When using bottled bluing the common tendency to pour in too much can be overcome by removing cork and cutting a triangular slit the entire length of cork. Reinsert cork and the bluing will come out very slowly. This saves pulling the cork out each time you have occasion to use the bluing.

Mash your boiled potatoes in the usual way, then add milk or cream enough to make them creamy, and also a pinch of baking powder. Then beat with an egg beater, adding salt last. When ready to serve put a chunk of butter on top. You will say you never tasted lighter or flakier potatoes.

Comparatively few people realize that the gas bill may be very perceptibly reduced by exercising care to light the gas properly. Hold the lighted match to the burner, then slowly turn on the gas. Most people turn the gas on full force, and then apply the match. A slight explosion ensues which affects the meter and sends it rapidly forward.

It is often difficult when you are hanging a heavy picture to get the screw to fasten into the wall, especially when the wall is only plaster. Try this plan: Enlarge the hole, wet the edges all around, fill in with moistened plaster of paris, and screw the nail into the plaster while it is soft. You will find the screw quite firm as soon as plaster is dry.

If a joint of meat should be too underdone to eat and several slices have been carved out it can be cooked again and served as a fresh joint if the hole is filled up with mashed potatoes and it is cooked in a brisk oven for an hour. The browned potatoes will be much appreciated and the fact that it is the second time of sending it to table will not be noticed.

Recipes.

Coffee Cake.—Two-thirds cake yeast, one-quarter cup lukewarm water, one cup scalded milk, one-quarter cup shortening, one-quarter cup sugar, one-half teaspoon salt, one egg, about three cups flour. Melt shortening in the milk, add sugar and salt, when lukewarm add the yeast, mixed with lukewarm water and an egg and stir in the flour. The mixture should be almost stiff enough to knead. In the morning it should be double its bulk. Cut through and through it with a knife and turn it over and over. Spread it smoothly in a buttered pan (about 10x5 inches). Bake about half an hour. Make a cooked paste of one tablespoon cornstarch and one half cup boiling water. Spread top of cake with paste and one teaspoon of cinnamon. Return to oven a few minutes to melt sugar.

Ham Patties.—One pint of chopped ham mixed with two parts bread crumbs wet with milk. Put the batter in ramekins, or gem cups. Break an egg on top of each and sprinkle thickly with cracker crumbs, and bake until brown.

Caramel Custard.—Four cups scalded milk, five eggs, one half teaspoon salt, one teaspoon vanilla, and one half cup sugar. Put sugar in omelet pan, stir constantly over hot part of range until melted to a syrup of light brown color. Of course a frying pan may be used, as you may not have an omelet pan. Add gradually to milk, being careful that milk does not bubble up and go over, as is liable on account of high temperature of sugar. As soon as sugar is melted in milk add mixture gradually to eggs slightly beaten; add salt and flavoring, then strain in buttered mold. Bake as custard.

Chicken Salad.—Pick the meat from one boiled chicken, don't use skin, then cut up four bunches of celery, one onion finely chopped, four hard boiled eggs, one to be chopped into the salad, others sliced and put on top. Serve in a bed of lettuce leaves with mayonaise dressing. If you have cold veal or pork left over use in same way. Use only strips of nicely browned bacon on top.

For stopping your ears to gossip.

Glove Hint.

Do not draw gloves too tightly over the nails. There is a tendency for the hands to settle into the gloves, so that if the gloves fit loosely over the nails in the beginning the length of service is prolonged. Even then the nails persist in wearing thru the finger tips before the rest of the gloves wear out.

Kneading boards and such things should be kept in a cupboard or some place entirely free from dust.

Pioneer Days

lation of nearly three million people.

With its telephones, telegraph, electric wires, railroads, automobiles and Free Delivery of Mails, there is but little difference between country and city. In fact it seems more like one great city. But you are all acquainted with facts, so I will give you a pioneer story as told by my grandfather, Henry Milliman:

We came to this country in 1844. We were not the first settlers by any means, but plenty of room to see and feel the hardships of a pioneer life.

Father had entered a place in Coburn Settlement, some eight or ten years before. Coburn Settlement has the distinction of organizing the first church in DeKalb Co., and also the first boy born in DeKalb Co., who was Byron Hadsell.

I do not need to tell you that it was a wild country here. Nothing but log cabins and they were few and far between. Our living was mostly on corn-bread, pork fattened on shack which the hogs found in the woods, potatoes and what game we could kill.

The only gun we had for a number of years was the old army musket that wouldn't go off more than half of the time, but you always knew when it did go off, for it kicked worse than a mule, but game was plentiful, so we managed to get quite a lot either with gun, dog or traps, so it helped out on grub. We also caught quite a number of fur-bearing animals, that brought us a little money.

Our clothing was made mostly of flax and wool, which was spun, wove and made up at home. I was married in a pair of jeans, that my mother spun the yarn, wove the cloth, and cut and made them. I guess it was all right for my wife and I have been living happily for over fifty-four years.

Wages were low, about fifty cents a day and only now and then a few days at a time. Besides this we had lots of fever, ague, itch and rattlesnakes. I remember of our killing fifteen rattlesnakes on less than an acre of meadow, when we were cutting grass, and several got away We hadn't been drinking anything that would make us see snakes either.

For a time after we came, we had to go to Clarksville to mill, up the St. Joe river about ten miles. Only a short time before we came they had to go to Ft. Wayne for their grinding. They generally went down the river in a boat, and it would take at least four or five days to make the trip. Many times they would run out of meal and would have to put some corn in a coffee-mill and grind it, or put it in a stout sack and pound it until it would do for bread.

There were only nine children in our family and mother and father made eleven. We all lived in a log cabin about 18x24 feet, with a very low upper story. We had a large loom and the other fixtures that went with weaving. We done all of our cooking over a large fireplace. We youngsters, except the smallest, slept upstairs and it was no uncommon thing in the winter to wake up and find your bed covered with four or five inches of snow. I tell you it was fun to jump out into that snow with your bare feet. You may wonder that it didn't kill us, but we all lived to be men and women, and five of us are still living, between the ages of seventy-five and eighty-three.

What I have said of this section could be said of many others along the frontier, which extended from the Great Lakes on the north, to the Gulf of Mexico on the south, and westward until it reached the Pacific Ocean. Now we have not only the great state of Indiana, but the greatest and best nation of the world. So now let us all hope that Indiana may still become a greater state and do all we can for it.

institute by the Universal Portland Cement Co., and they were excellent, showing the modern and economical way of constructing farm buildings. The romance that run through the pictures afforded much amusement but it came out all right in the end.

John M. Life of Auburn, who was to have appeared at this time with an illustrated lecture on "The Other Wise Man" was unable to show his illustrations of this beautiful story written by Van Dyke, on account of the machine not being fitted for the slides, consequently he appeared on the Saturday evening program. He did however deliver a lecture on the boys and girls as being the farmers best crop, which was pleasing to his audience.

The Saturday sessions will be given space in our next issue.

Resolutions That Were Adopted:

First: Resolve, that the boys and girls are our greatest product and that the Farmers' Institute should not neglect the command of God to protect the future generations.

Second: Resolve, intemperance cuts down youth in its vigor, manhood in its strength, and age in its weakness. It breaks the father's heart, bereaves the doting mother, extinguishes natural affection, destroys confugal love, blots out filial attachment, blights parental hope, and brings premature age in sorrow and dishonor to the grave.

Third: Resolved, that we, the members of the Tri-Township Farmers' Institute, (300 strong) in session at St. Joe, recognizing the truth of the above resolution, demand of our Representative in Congress, Cyrus W. Cline, that he use his voting power to amend the Constitution of the United States, to prohibit the manufacture, sale or use of Alcholic Beverage.

Fourth: Resolve, that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to our Representative in Congress.

Fifth: Resolve that we tender our thanks to the Officials of this Institute for their earnest efforts for the success of this Tri-Township Institute.

Sixth: Resolve, that we commend the co-operation and work of the teachers of our schools in their assistance to the Farmers' Institute work.

Seventh: Resolve, that we encourage the boys and girls to farther effort in the splendid work of Display by offering greater inducements in the future Institutes.

Essay Writing Contest.

First Prize was won by Miss Audrey Coburn, daughter of B A. Coburn. The judge graded this production at 95.5 per. cent.

The night before I baked my bread, I cooked a few potatoes, and mashed one heaping cupful of them To these I added two-thirds cup of sugar, three tablespoonfuls of salt, and beat the mixture thoroughly I then put in four cups of hot potato water, pouring in the water slowly and stirring well. I let this mixture stand for about an hour, or until it became cool, and then added one-half quart of yeast. I allowed this to stand until morning.

At five o'clock in the morning, I stirred into the mixture just enough flour to make a thin batter, I placed a cover on this and set it in a warm place to rise. About nine thirty o'clock the dough was light enough to form into a hard loaf. In doing this I kneaded in just enough flour to make it stiff. Next I set it in a warm place until it was light enough to seperate into loaves. In shaping the loaves I had my hands well covered with lard, so that the dough did not adhere to my hands. I, then weighed the loaves and placed them in well buttered pans, and in a short time I placed the pans in the oven. About every fifteen minutes I looked into the oven to see if it was baking evenly, and if it was not, I turned the pans around. I took it out of the oven after it had been in one hour and five minutes. The ingredients that I used made five loaves.

VOL. XXX ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY MARCH 19 1916 NO. 11

Farmer's Institute

Largest and Best in the History of the Organization.

SATURDAY

The morning session opened at 9 o'clock with a fine attendance, and the first speaker was Lewis Taylor, on the subject of "Soil Improvement". Taylor was master of his subjects and knew just what it meant to the farmer as he is engaged in the business. He recommends barnyard manures first of all, and it should be hauled direct to the field and spread. A man must study the needs of his soil and know what the soil is lacking and thus he will be able to treat it intelligently. Don't give it what it already has abundance of. The use of ground limestone is proving very beneficial as a fertilizer. Owing to the writer being absent during the opening remarks, we are unable to reproduce much of this address.

"Important Points in House Furnishing" was discussed by Mrs. Elizabeth Stanley, instead of Mrs. Meredith, who was taken sick at her home. Mrs. Stanley recommended that the furniture be plain, to afford easily being cared for, and not to have more than is necessary. She suggests a small kitchen so as not to allow the family about when the food is being prepared. Always eat in dining room thus the wife is given a little recreation from her kitchen work. She stated that at her house the men were educated so as to remove their working clothes and shoes when the meal was ready, and thus the unpleasant smell of the barn is eliminated. Since being a farmer she had learned that manure was fine for the soil but not so good for the carpet.

Mrs John Coburn responded with a fine discussion on this subject, and gave plans by which the ladies of Coburntown were working to accomplish their desires along this line.

AFTERNOON

Chairman Widney called the session to order and made his announcements, after which the young ladies of the High School sang a chorus, meeting with a hearty applause. The young folks surely demonstrated to their audience that they were capable of putting up some good stuff. At this point the nominating committee reported as follows:

President—B. V. Widney
Secretary—F. E. Rhodes
Treasurer—Guy Platter

After some remarks by Saxe Hadsell and the Chairman, the meeting voted unaminous for the officers.

The Ohio Ladies' Harmonic Quartette arrived on the noon train and they were called on at this time to make the initial appearance.

As is the custom of Purdue to call all County and Township Presidents in once a year, to lay plans for the work, the meeting voted to send their Chairman to the Workers Conference next fall and thus get new ideas for a still better institute in 1916.

Lewis Taylor handled the subject of "Community Organization" in a very able way. This matter of organization is a big one and it would lead to a larger degree of success in the production of the crops. Get together and talk over the farm problems and thus learn the treatment of the soil, if you are having any trouble in handling it. The question of organization would cut quite a figure in the marketing of crops if the farmer was in a position to know what the demands were in the market. A rural organization would mean much to the Good Roads movement and besides the social side, the benefits would be countless. The Coburntown Quartette entertained the audience with some comic songs concerning the farm.

Mrs. Elizabeth Stanley again appeared on the program with "Community Ideals and Ethics" as her subject, taking the home, school and the church as her leaders. This address was the masterpiece of her two appearances.

EVENING

The evening session was crowded to the limit as Captain John M. Life gave his illustrated lecture on "The Other Wise Man"; followed by Rev. Oakel F. Hall, student pastor of Purdue University, on "The Rural Church", illustrated.

Here the rural church condition was shown up from every angle with the true conditions which he finds in Indiana. His plan was less churches and get together and have one church in a community that is now supporting more. His talk was given rapidly so that he might leave on the evening train.

The Ladies' Harmonic Quartette of Hicksville, gave their concert, closing the program.

Re-Elected Chairman of Ass'n.

F. B. Leighty, Editor, St. Joe News
Dear Sir:

We want to thank you for the support given this association in your editorials, comments, etc. We realize that some editors are loathe to give space to such affairs and so appreciate your liberality. We beleive you were interested in the work not so much because of your friendship toward the association as because of your interest in the welfare of this the community of the Tri-Townships and adjoining neighborhoods. For like reasons a large number have contributed to the efforts of the association with time, money, talent, rooms, etc. All of this has doubly aided the success of the institute because it enabled us to spend what money we received where it would have the greatest value.

Farmer, teacher, townsman, everyone who has supported our institute must now see the value of united effort. This being true what are we to expect a year hence? Are we not to expect the Largest and Best Institute held in the state of Indiana? At least that shall be our ambition and we sincerely hope and trust that you will see fit to work with us in the future as in the past and may the same be true of every man, woman and child in the Tri-Townships.

Yours truly,
Executive Committe,
Tri-Township Farmers' Institute Association.

NOTES

The membership now numbers 306. Isn't that going some.

Attendance last year was 440 and this year it reached 3,000, an average of 400 at each session.

Miss Gladys Smith, of Newville, the popular young soloist, rendered several fine solos on Friday evening.

The County Agent movement was given a good boost. Clarence Hart, Roscoe Conine and Clyde Hart have this matter in charge.

C. T. Bayman, our enterprising and up-to-date miller, offered prizes amounting to $5.00 for the best bread made from Daily Bread Flour.

The town hall, was donated by the City Fathers and the Meat Market donated by J. P. Buckingham, for the school displays. That shows the right kind of a spirit, don't you think so.

The finances of the association are in good shape compared with a year ago, when $1.51 remained in the treasury. This year has a balance of $54.08. Receipts $222.16 and expenses $168.08.

The Spencerville Primary Room had a display that made the older ones take notice and showed considerable hard work on part of the teacher, Miss Jennie Steward. The Intermediate displays were St. Joe first, and Spencerville second Grammer room display, St. Joe, first; Spencerville, no display.

Abel and Hart may feel proud of their scholars as Mrs. Stanley, who judged their displays says that they were the finest she has seen in the State. Sure! She knows who is capable of putting up the stuff, and a word of this kind means something, as Mrs. Stanley is one of the state's greatest workers. She also stated that the Spencerville primary room deserves special merit for their excellent work.

Common School displays were of such variety that they could hardly be judged fairly. All were excellent. Among the complete country school displays, Newville schools in charge of Ross Abel would probably have taken 1st, prize with Coletown, Clyde Hart teacher, a close second, and Cheesetown 3rd., Bessie Kinsey, teacher. The excellent work being done by these three schools shows what can be done in all our country schools. Criticism of the older teachers is occasionally offered by some but these exhibits are evidence that the younger teachers are still being led by their Seniors. Cannot the trustees see to it that all country schools are represented in this way at the next institute.

County Agent Henry, of Allen County, says their a live bunch up here—Come back next year Clarence and see what a difference—Something doin for sure.

All the cash prizes offered were put up by the interested farmers of the community. Look out for next year, boys.

Otis Crane and Lewis Taylor—"The best meeting I have been in for many a day. Guess Purdue will hear from us about this meeting."

H. M. Widney—"After filling dates all over Indiana this year, I only know of one place, South Port, Marion Co., that beats this convention, and that was due to their extra large displays. We can have the best with your co-operation next year."

Fred Ulm captured the $5.00 on corn and he turned it in to the committee and thus 20 more boys were able to share in the prize money. That's the spirit to have—help the other fellow. Paul Carpenter received 25c. in cash and he turned it in on the County Agent movement.

THANKS DEMOCRATIC VOTERS

In this manner, I wish to thank the democratic voters of DeKalb county and all of my friends as well, for the loyal support given me in the recent primary election.

I know this is a small return for the many kind courtesies which have been given me, however, as small as this may seem it comes from a grateful heart.

Sincerely,
Your candidate for sheriff,
FRANK BALTZ.

A SONG OF CHEER.

The way is long, the tea is cold; the bard is fat and growing old. But what the dickens if I am? I do not care Hepsidam. I sit and turn the bard machine, and biff dull care upon the bean. I do not rhyme or reason why, but soak affliction in the eye. O, yodel forth a yip of cheer, and hook a left to Sorrow's ear! O, skip and dance and toss your hats, and hammer Grief upon the slats! O, mop the swiftly falling tear, and join me in a song of cheer! Bang Melancholy on the snout and knock Old Tribulation out!

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

Do not pile leftover cooked potatoes together, as they will sour quickly. Spread them out on a large dish.

Dried orange peel revives a neglected fire more thoroughly and quicker than anything else, but is a very noisy and spluttery remedy.

Do not open a wet umbrella to dry it. Wipe it down with an old soft silk handkerchief and leave it to drain in a bath or basin, shut up.

A black frock may be freshened by sponging it with alcohol mixed with water in the proportion of one part alcohol to three of water. The garment should be sponged on the right side, but ironed on the wrong.

It is economical after using a bowl of old starch to let it settle. Then pour off the water and dry the starch in the oven over night. It will be reduced to a cake and can be used again.

It is a good idea to tack a piece of white oilcloth on the wall back of each of the kitchen tables, as, otherwise, it will soon become discolored and greasy, a result that is almost unavoidable otherwise.

If your wash boiler should rust make a lining of unbleached cotton to fit it. Use cover to cover pattern of bottom pieces. This is a splendid way to keep clothes from getting spots of iron rust on them.

To prevent hot water bottles "singing," screw stoppers down tightly as soon as they are filled, and after they are taken into the bedrooms unscrew them for a moment to let the steam escape, then screw them tightly up again.

LATEST STYLE IN HANDCUFFS.

New "Nippers" Operated with One Hand and Make Escape Difficult.

Lawbreakers may be nipped in the but most effectively by the poplice nippers invented by John J. Murphy of Norwich, Conn. The police nippers or "leaders," as they are sometimes called, are clasped about the wrist or even the ankles of the arrested man.

The advantage of the new nippers is not alone in their effectiveness but also in the fact that they may be quickly and easily operated with one hand. The closing of the hand about the handle portions of the nippers causes the jaws to close. These are pivotally connected by opposed extending arms with a sliding tubular member attached to the T-shaped inner handle. This tubular member slides on a basic rod to which the outer T-shaped handle is mounted. It takes but an instant to clasp the nippers on the wrist of an offender. Popular Science says.

One dark, damp, foggy day in November there entered the Union Station at Indianapolis a little elderly lady neatly dressed in a dark gray coat suit and a modest gray hat, carrying a small traveling bag. She looked about her, and then took a seat in the general waiting room, instead of going to the ladies' waiting room, where it would have been quieter, and it would seem more enjoyable to her. But she had a long time to wait, and was seeking entertainment as well as rest. She chose a seat which covered a view of the arriving and departing passengers, to and from the trains.

She was wedged in between two persons very dissimlar in appearance. On one side of her sat a very fat old lady, dressed gayly in a dark green skirt, red waist, and plaid cloak. A black hat trimmed in red roses and a white feather, was rakishly placed on one side of her head, and doddled above her good-natured face. On the other side sat a tall, slender, dudish looking young man, who languidly watched the door.

Mrs. North watched the passing stream of people with keen enjoyment. Her face changed quickly from one sentiment to another in sympathy with each group of passersby. Here came a bevy of young ladies to welcome a young friend with ecstatic kisses and exclamations of delight.

There a mother folded to her bosom with smiles and tears of joy, and then took the baby from her son-in-law's arms with reverent hands and adoring eyes. A wife clasped the hand of her broad-shouldered husband as he tenderly kissed her, and walked silently by her side, through the door to the outside world—and home. Here came a group in black, walking slowly with sad faces, and were met and led outside by equally serious looking friends. Rollicking young men met, slapped each other on the shoulders and walked quickly away.

Mrs. North read the story of each group, and entered into their feelings with ready interest. Yet she had time to note when her fat neighbor bounced out of the seat and caught a roly-poly young woman by the tail of her coat, as she was dashing by followed by two chubby youngsters. The young woman screamed "O Mamma" and they clung together while the chubby youngsters swarmed about them. The dude, also, arose after a time and dawdled outside as though nothing could arouse any feeling in him.

Mrs. North looked at the clock. Another hour yet to wait. She had noticed a long-legged, brown-skinned western looking young man walking back and forth occasionally. He seemed to have plenty of time on his hands, like her. He also seemed to keep her under observation, and she wondered if it was some one whom she ought to know.

Finally in passing he seemed to come to a sudden resolution, and coming up seated himself by her side. He fidgetted bashfully, while she watched him out of the tail of her eye, until he suddenly turned to her and blurted out—

"I beg pardon, Madam, but I have been watching you for the last hour, and I could not keep from speaking to you."

"Very well," she replied, "There is no harm in that. Ought I to know you?"

"No, I am sure we never met before. But you remind me so forcibly of my mother, who has been dead for years. Not so much in looks, but in size, and your actions are hers to a dot."

Mrs. North's face beamed. Turning she held out her hand, which was eagerly clasped in a firm brown one.

"I never had a child," she said, "Though I was always fond of children. And I am very glad I can even look like a good mother, such as I am sure yours was."

"None better," he feelingly replied, "She was faithful and tender, and true, and did her best to make me a duplicate of herself, but with small results, I fear."

A roar of trains enterring the sheds almost drowned their voices for a while. The young man again became uneasy.

"Let me introduce myself," he said. "My name is John Parkhurst. I was born in Ohio, but after my mother's death I went west, and am now in the mining business. After much prospecting, I have finally located a silver mine which I am sure will be very rich when developed. I have been east to secure money to do that, and am going back to begin work at once. I have a peculiar request to make of you. Will you tell me your name?"

"I don't call that peculiar, young man. My name is Mary North. I am a widow living alone a few miles from here, and have been visitng relatives in the city for a week."

"That was not my request. You know we miners are nothing if not superstitous. We are like the sailors. Now my mine is not named. I have a feeling that if I hit on the right name, it will pan out well, if not, it will be a failure. O, I know you will think that is childish," he hurried on as she seemed ready to speak, "But I truly believe it. And it should be named for a living person. One who is in herself a mine of love and sympathy for mankind. One who has suffered and is yet strong. In fact, a good woman like mother was. Now, are you willing to let me name my mine for you? Let me call it 'The Mother North Mine.'"

Mrs. North was thunderstruck. The idea! She thought of her humble cottage home. Of her simple country life with her chickens, cow, garden and bees. Of mining she was ignorant. Miners were rough, swearing uncouth men she had always thought. Drinking men, ready with knife or pistol to do murder.

Her companion watched her face as it changed from amazement to offence, and then to amusement.

"You must be joking, young man," she said. "I am as far removed from mining and its interests, as one can be. I am a church-going woman, livng a quiet, secluded country life. Let some one else lend her name to your mine."

He looked bitterly disappointed.

"I wish no name but yours."

She glanced again at the clock. It was nearly time to go.

"Do let me name it for you," he begged. "If I am successful, the profits shall not be spent in saloons or immorally in any way. I intend to be a good citzen, and spend my money for the betterment of my country. Let me call it the 'Mother North.'"

She rose to go.

"No, that would be untrue. I am no mother. But you may call it the Aunt Mary North Mine, if that will do. I am Aunt Mary to many who are not related to me by ties of blood, as well as to those that are. But listen, my boy, be honest and true as your mother taught you, and mine or no mine, the world needs you."

He had walked by her side to the gate to the train shed.

"Thank you, Aunt Mary," he said, "If I am successful you shall hear from me. Give me your address please. You cannot begin to know how grateful I am to you. I feel that if the mine is a success it will be because it is named right."

He took out his note book, and she gave him her address, adding—"Write to me anyhow and I will try to advise you as your mother would. But there is my train. Good-by and God bless you." They warmly shook hands, and she passed through the gate, and was hustled on the train by an impatient brakeman.

Mrs. North had lived almost alone since the death of her husband. Only a young school girl was her companion of nights and on Saturdays. She was thus thrown much upon her own resources for entertainment. But she was seldom blue or lonesome. She had grieved sorely for the husband of her youth, who had been dead a few years, for their married life had been ideal. But she had turned to her heavenly Father for comfort and it was not denied. She took up the burden of life again, and courageously resolved to live and yet be of use to those around her. She was intensely sympathetic; a hard worker, and had a keen sense of the ludicrous, always seeing the amusing side of things. Her husband had left her a little home and a small income that by good management kept her above want.

Time passed on, and she almost forgot the episode of the Union Station at Indianapolis.

If it came to her mind, it was to smile at the strange conceit of the young miner, and the idea that she might have a mine named for her in the western mountains. She knew many mines were valueless, and most likely this one would never be heard from.

She was a great reader and read the daily papers regularly. One day when she was reading she thought she saw her name, and turning the page quickly, she saw in large letters—

"A Very Rich Mine Opened."

And following the headlines: "Last week an exceedingly rich silver mine was opened by John Parkhurst & Co., name the Aunt Mary North Mine. Great things are expected of it."

Mrs. North nearly fell from her chair. The paper fell to the floor, and her hands hung limply by her side and she gasped for breath.

After a short time she raised her head and laughed nervously.

"I must be dreaming," she said, and picked up the paper again. Yes, there was no mistake.

"Aunt Mary North Mine."

It seemed to fill up the whole page. She could see nothing else, and read it again and again.

"I hope no one will see it," she said. "Its away back here from the regular news. Its not likely any one will see it that knows me." Then she mused on—"Its a common name anyhow, and perhaps there are dozens of Mary Norths' in the United States. If any one does see it, they will not think of connecting it with any one out here in Central Indiana. How silly of me to go off like that," and laughed to herself as she thought of her actions when first reading it.

It filled her mind for the rest of the day. Perhaps it would not pan out after all. It was so expensive putting in mining machinery. But if it really was a rich mine, she hoped her young man would remember that he had promised to not spend his fortune in dissipation but do some good with it. If he did that, she guessed she could bear to see her name in the paper connected with quotations of mining stock.

"I wonder if he will write and tell me of his good luck. He said I should hear from him if he was successful."

But just at that time, large broods of little chickens claimed her attention, the garden must be planted, and a friend came to stay a week with her. So her interest in the mine lessened, and she took hold of the duties nearest with such vigor, that everything was brought to its normal state in short order.

In about two months after reading of the mine in the paper, she was out in the garden one Saturday, with Mollie, weeding her onions. Everything was spick and span in the little cottage. In the early morning she had baked bread, pies and a brown cake and other things that would supply their needs for several meals and allow uninterrupted work in her garden. The latter was next her yard, and as they knelt busily at work, she heard the front gate latch click, and looking up she saw a strange man enter.

"I'll just not go in if I can help it," she said to Mollie, "He is a peddler, and I don't want anything he has, I know, and we must get these onions weeded before night. It looks like rain, and they will be ruined to wait longer."

The man had by this time discovered them in the garden, and she reluctantly rose and went to meet him.

"Good afternoon, Madam," he said.

She returned his greeting but made no further reply, nor offered to go to the house, but looked at him inquiringly.

"I came to see you on a little legal business, Mrs. North, and would like to see you in your house."

She looked startled.

"I hope it is not a subpeona," she said.

"O, no," he replied, "I will not need but a little of your time, and you can return to your work in a little while—if you want to," he muttered in his beard.

He was not used to being received in this curt manner, and hardly knew whether to be amused or offended. She came into her yard and led the way into her sunny living room, gave him a chair, and took off her garden gloves and sunbonnet.

He sat down by the table, and took from a sachel some legal looking document.

"I am John Baker of the law firm of Baker & Baker of Dunbar, Colo., and we are attorneys of John Parkhurst & Co., owners of the Aunt Mary North Silver Mine."

She said nothing, but looked at him steadily, and wondered if she could be fined for allowing a mine being named for her, and resolved she would not pay if she could help it.

Mr. Baker continued: "The company sent me to present you with a one-tenth interest in the mine as your share. This is the deed, legally executed." He handed her the paper. She took it mechanically.

And he proceeded: "And here is a bank book showing fifty thousand dollars deposited in your name in Fisher's Bank, payable to your order."

She took the bank book with dazed eyes.

"And that is all. Good day."

She nodded, and the man of law took his departure, thinking he never saw a more wooden individual in his life.

"I would have thought, she would have sent a word of thanks, in common decency," he said to himself.

He was so used to handling large sums of money in business transactions, he did not realize the immense sum this amount seemed to the hard working self-denying woman he had left, rendering her speechless.

She sat as he left her for several minutes, the bankbook in one hand, and the deed in the other.

And then, as if she could doubt her good fortune no longer, and the vision of what good she might now do in her beloved church, in charities, in her home and in innumerable other things she had often longed to do, came over her, she sank to her knees, and, although no words came from her trembling lips, her heart was lifted to God in grateful praise for his wonderful blessings to one of His humble children. And asked for wisdom to use this great good fortune for the good of mankind as a faithful steward of the Lord should.

'CORNUCOPIA' POCKET REAL NOVELTY.

One of the newest ideas is the cornucopia pocket, which stands out in relief on either side of the dress skirt and which is sometimes stiffened across the uppper edge to maintain its dressy outline. Such pockets are frequently repeated on the bolero, when that little coat is a part of the frock scheme.

A lot of sashes are featured on dressy models. This means a good season for ribbons in sash widths, and while velvet is apparently the favorite just now it is likely that flowered, striped and checked patterns will have a showing later, when linen, voile and lawn dresses supersede those of silk and wool.

The designers are seizing liberally on the color and contour suggestions offered by the Russian Ballet and by the new operas of the mid-Winter season. It was announced several weeks ago that the French couturiers had looked to spain and the Spanish painters for the inspiration in color and in lines for their Spring models.

Surely the theatrical and operatic fields have offered splendid opportunity for these purposes. It is true that not always can one find the hallmarks of the originals clearly stamped on the copies. But that matters not at all, so long as the result is attractive and the garment wearable. Already there is announced the Goyaesque dinner gown, and its forerunner is found in the Valasquez dress, with its characteristic collar and its outstanding panniers.

Despite innovations the Russian styles have by no means been neglected. This is attested not only in dresses, as such, but in certain of the separate blouses designed to wear with certain skirts, so that a complete dress ensemble is produced. Such models are offered in satin and in Georgette crepe and in colors that correspond to the prevailing tones of the half-season.

Although the dignified man may not know much, he has to be very careful of what little he does know.

"MOVIES" FOR FRENCH SCHOOLS.

Parliamentary Commission Recommends Their Use in Teaching.

According to a correspondent of the Associated Press the motion picture as a factor in public education has been the subject of inquiry by a parliamentary commission in Paris, France, which has just published a report recommending the official adoption of picture instruction by all government schools and colleges.

Military hospitals have been using moving films for the physical re-education of disabled war victims, and one primary school in Paris has introduced cinematograph projections in its curriculum. In both cases the results have been most encouraging.

In primary schools, spelling, writing, arithmetic, geography, and especially history can be illustrated on the screen with vividness. In more advanced schools the study of foreign languages can be profitably supplemented by views of the countries where these tongues are spoken, their customs and institutions. In high schools the cinematograph would play an even more important role, especially in the study of scinece. Chemistry, botany, biology, mechanics, etc., particularly in their comparative aspects, lend themselves more than any other study to film illustration.

"BRONCHO BILLY" MAKES INJURED BOY BRAVE.

The wonderful stimulus of "Broncho Billy" photoplays to bravery and patience, is told in a letter from William Flanders, a frontiersman near Billings, Mont. Flanders' son, Billy, goes to see the "Broncho Billy" plays every time he goes to town, the father said. He was stirred by G. M. Anderson's deeds of valor in the plays and longed to do something brave, "like 'Broncho Billy.'" His chance came, and Billy made good.

Billy and his sister were returning to their farm in a wagon when the horses ran away. He clung bravely to the lines until the wagon was overturned at a turn in the road. The little girl was unhurt, but Billy had a broken leg and an injured spine.

Billy was taken to a hospital, where he fought back the tears, although he suffered great pain. An operation was necessary, which might mean death. When the doctors asked Billy if he was afraid, he said:

"'Broncho Billy' wouldn't be afraid, and I ain't going to be, either."

In the weeks of suffering before Billy recovered, the doctors declared they had never seen a braver or more patient lad.

FILM STAR RIVALS FAMOUS EVANGELIST.

Miss Winifred Greenwood, one of the American Film company's most popular leading women, featured opposite Edward Coxen, in "The Happy Masquerader," has a screen personality with an infuence for good that rivals the conversions made by famous "Billy Sunday."

The letters that Miss Greenwood receives from men and women all over the world, thanking her for showing them the error of their ways through her portrayals of genuine womanhod in "Flying A" pictures, are among the treasures she hoards as a tribute to her efforts.

In "The Happy Masquerader," Miss Greenwood impersonates an orphan girl, whose guardian squanders her inheritance in speculation, while she is kept in ignorance of this fact. Her work in this role is an eloquent appeal to girls and women to live their lives unselfishly and genuinely.

Edward Coxen, the leading man, plays the part of a wealthy young man who changes places with a chauffeur to prove to the latter that money alone is not required to produce happiness. In his role as a menial, Mr. Coxen wins the love of the orphan girl, winning over the forced attentions of the real chauffeur (George Field), whom the young woman presumes to be wealthy.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN CONTRACT BRINGS BONUS OF $100,000.

New York—After all the negotiations it seems that Charlie Chaplin with his duly celebrated walk and his frequently featured kick will hereafter be exclusively shown on Mutual films. Such announcement was made today. The contracts, it is asserted, were signed Saturday. They provide for a bonus of $100,000 to Chaplin with or without his mustache, $10,000 a week salary and a percentage in the business. The money is to be paid Wednesday.

Chaplain is to have a special company organized for him by the Mutual, and his brother, Sid Chaplin, also an agile figure in motion pictures, is to be a member of it.

VILLIAN PROVES POPULAR WITH FILM FANS.

The good old days when the villain of the melodrama basked in the hisses of his audience has disappeared, according to the experiences of Bryant Washburn, the most successful "man-of-dark-deeds." Although Mr. Washburn is usually cast for the villainous part in most of the dramas, it seems he is just as popular as the "heroes." Every day he receives numbers of letters from feminine admirers declaring he is the "handsomest foul fiend in human form" they ever saw. All of which is some record for a "movie" villain.

ABE LAUDS COMMERFORD FOR "SLANG FABLES" WORK.

Among the artists who have been commended for their work in motion pictures, probably none is more elated than Thomas Commerford, the veteran actor who is playing leads in the George Ade "Fables in Slang" comedies. Mr. Ade, in speaking recently of his fables as produced by Essanay, said: "While every one of the actors deserves great credit, I am especially pleased with the work done by Mr. Commerford. He seems to read between the lines and to bring out every bit of humor there is in them."

UNITED FILM FLASHES.

Otis B. Thayer, producing director of the Pike's Peak Film Company, which is starting operations at its studio at Colorado Springs, as one of the producing units of the United Film Service, is recognized as a master maker of mountain pictures. Thayer was formally producing director of the company, which was responsible for some of the most fetching films of the West ever shown. One of his last productions with that organizaton was "Across the Border," in which Fate, acting as an invisible stage director, introduced realism beyond the camera man's wildest desires in causing Grace McHugh, the leading lady, and the manipulator of the machine, to lose their lives in the quicksands of a stream.

Winna Brown, whose fearless horsemanship as depicted in the Albuquerque film releases has caused many a motion picture theater patron to gasp, is accounted the most daring of screen actresses. Miss Brown has won the sobriquet of "The Girl Who Knows No Fear" from her studio associates. Such daring feats as hurtling from her saddle to grasp the hand rail of the locomotive cab of a train thundering at express speed toward apparent destruction, swinging herself aboard to seize the lever and stop the train at the very brink of the bridge bereft chasm, is another average instance of the risks she takes to supply realism to her sensation craving audiences.

Eethel Grandin, youngest of movie stars, has developed an acute sense of business. Computing the number of photoplays she has disposed of for publicity purposes and as souvenirs, the other day she decided that it would be a good investment to install a private photographic studio. She plans to put her idea into execution.

MUZZLING THE SNEEZE.

The bureau of public headth and hygiene, New York city, has instituted a campaign of education which, if followed up throughout the country, will materially reduce the incidence of nose, throat and chest diseases. These so-called "colds" have been running wild through the community with little effort to prevent them. People have wilfully shut their eyes to the contagiousness of all so-called "colds and refused to accept the teachings of all modern authorities, because these teachings have seemed to run counter to old traditional belief, namely, that "colds," sore throats and ailments accompanied by cough were due to weather conditions.

In the propaganda of the New York bureau excellent use is being made of certain posters and stamps. The posters were designed by school children. One depicts a conventionalized black and white view of two little tots holding handkerchiefs out before them, and these words are printed below: "If You Use These for the Sneezes You Will Stop the Dread Diseases." Another poster is in colors. It shows in the foreground a gentleman sneezing in his handkerchief, and in the background a person sneezing open-face fashion and a knowing gentleman hastening to escape from the vicinity. At the top these words appear: "Protect the Public from Disease—Use Your Handkerchief When You Sneeze."

Both posters and stamps may be had at a minimum cost. Such posters should be utilized by health departments everywhere. And every schoolroom should have one of the posters on display as a continual reminder and lesson to the pupils. The stamps may go everywhere, on letters, packages, books, and carry to every destination a much needed lesson. We have pretty well learned the dangers of expectoration and of the common towel and the common drinking cup; but we have yet to realize what a tremendously harmful thing it is to sneeze openly. This vulgar and extremely common habit is, beyond question, the cause of a great deal of preventable illness.

Many times one has a man friend to whom one would like to send a gift; something which is mannish and good looking. A Roycroft letter rack is substantially made and the sort of thing which men like to own. This in hand-wrought coupper is priced at $3.50.

Tried Cooking Recipes

Favorite Apple Recipes.

Apple Delight—Peel and core apples. Fill the space from which cores were taken with seeded raisins, bits of shredded citron, sugar and a little lemon peel. Stand in baking dish, pour over one-half cup of water, dust apples with tablespoonful of granulated sugar. Bake in slow oven until tender. Draw them to oven door and sprinkle top with bread crumbs, dust again with sugar, and allow to remain in oven ten minutes. While they are baking mix a tablespoonful of flour with halp a cup of sugar, pour over half a pint of boiling water, boil a minute, then take from fire and pour slowly over one well-beaten egg. Add the juice of half a lemon, pour over the apples and serve warm.

Apple Cup—Quarter and core, without peeling, six apples, put them in a porcelain kettle with one cup of raisins, two bay leaves, one-fourth stick cinnamon, a little yellow rind of lemon, and two quarts of water, bring to a boil, add two quarts more of water, cover and let boil slowly for half an hour. Then strain, cool, add the juice of three lemons, and serve chilled. This makes a delicious drink.

Brown Betty Apples—In a pudding dish put a layer of bread crumbs, then a few small pieces of butter, then a layer of sliced apples. Sprinkle over brown sugar and ground cinnamon. Repeat until dish is full, ending with a layer of crumbs and butter. Pour over this one cup of molasses and water, that is one-half cup of each mixed. Bake one and a half hours.

Apple Puff—Make a puff batter by creaming together one cup of sugar and one-quarter cup of butter, two eggs well beaten, two-thirds of a cup of sweet milk, flour enough to make medium stiff batter, one-half teaspoonful of vanilla, small pinch of salt. After beating all well, add two teaspoons of baking powder. Have pared five apples. Put half of puff batter in pan, add apples sliced very thin, then add remainder of paste. Bake in moderate oven as you would cake. To be served with following sauce when cold: Two cups of boiling water, one cup of sugar, lump of butter size of a walnut, two tablespoons of corn starch dissolved in cold water, one-half grated nutmeg. Cook all till clear.

Apple Cake—One pint of flour, one-half teaspoon of salt, and one teaspoon of baking powder well sifted. Rub in two tablespoons of butter. Add one egg beaten and two-thirds cup of milk. Mix well and spread about one-half inch thick in baking pan. Place in rows on this dough four good-sized apples, pared, cored and cut in eighths. Sprinkle with sugar and a little cinnamon. Bake in quick oven twenty minutes. Serve with cream and sugar or plain sauce.

Recipes.

Curried Eggs—Melt one tablespoon of butter, blend in one tablespoon of flour mixed with one teaspoon of curry powder; add slowly one cup of white stock; season with one-half teaspoon of onion juice and one-half teaspoon salt and stir until smooth and thick. Add six hard boiled eggs cut into halves lengthwise; cook until thoroughly heated and serve on rounds of buttered toast.

Meat Loaf—Two cupfuls of finely chopped meat, one cupful of bread crumbs, one package of gelatin dissolved in one and one-third cupfuls of boiling water. Season with salt, pepper and sage. Mix well and mold the meat in a square tin or in baking powder cans. To remove from mold dip in hot water. This is a good way to use the scraps left from a roast, but any kind of meat may be used.

Cream of Asparagus Soup—Cut off the very tips of asparagus stalks. Cut the remainder of the stalks into half-inch lengths and boil. Put the tips in a wire strainer and when the stalks have been boiling in salted water for half an hour steam the tips over the stalks for another half hour. Then press the stalks through a vegetable press with the water in which they were boiled—it should be only enough to keep them from burning. Mix with hot milk, thicken slightly with cornstarch or flour mixed smooth in a little cold milk, season with salt and paprika, add a teaspoon of butter, add the steamed tips and serve.

Omelet.

Beat whites and yolks of eggs separately, one egg for each person; into the yolks stir milk and flour—one teaspoon of flour and one tablespoon of milk for each egg used; salt. Grease a frying pan well after having cut the whites of the eggs into mixture; as it begins to cook on the bottom, cut in two and lift it around the edges to let the uncooked mixture run under the part that is cooked. A change from the usual omelet is made by putting through the meat chopper ham or bacon that has been cooked, heating it, spreading over one-half after it is cooked and laying the other half on to it like a sandwich.

Vegetable Soup.

One-fourth of a cabbage chopped fine, two carrots, two small turnips, three onions, one cup of rice. Add the rice to two gallons of soup stock and boil two hours, then add the vegetables and boil one hour longer.

String any spare buttons you may have on a cord, that they may be easy to get when you want them.

BELGIAN CHILDREN SEND GIFTS TO PRESIDENT

Dictates of Fashion

NEW SUITS ARE SHORT-COATED AND GAY.

It is practically settled that the short coat model will be the prevailing one for the coming season. Here and there a long suit coat is entered by way of adding variety and also perhaps by way of showing up the greater beauty of the other sort.

This does not mean that all short coats will be identical in appearance. On the contrary, the designers have vied with each other in their efforts to create diversity of line and to effect contrasting fabrics and trimmings. Sometimes the suit looks like a dress, so different is it from the regulation idea of what a trotteur or a tailleur should be.

And the simon-pure tailored suit is no longer the severe garment it once was, because braid garniture is now permitted, as well as collar and cuffs of kid, embroidered silk, heavy linen or other likely material. Sometimes the tailored jacket is cut double-breasted and this is particularly effective when the single or double capes are featured on the model.

A model that Bernard sent over several months ago and which had its copies during the Winter is advanced for demi-season wear. The skirt is a gored circular affair, which sometimes shows self folds encircling the hem. The folds, however, are largely a matter of the designers' taste and are not considered essential to the style quality of the garment.

It is in the coat that one finds the Bernard characteristics. In length it is about twenty-six inches and extremely flaring. Indeed, the flare is accentuated by the slashing of the hip section and the insertion of inverted V's of the material, which give a greater spring from waistline to hem. The V impiecements are stitched all around, and in the more fanciful editions of the model the apex is frequently finished with an embroidered arrowhead or crow's foot.

In place of the braid bindings of last year one notes that the skirt and coat edges are trimmed with rows of machine stitching. The stitching is usually done in a contrasting color and usually the thread is heavy, more like buttonhole twist than the sewing silk variety. Necessarily the stitches are rather long and somewhat raised and therefore the decorative effect is heighened.

Paris has always used machine stitching more or less for a finish of skirts and of separate coats. Sometimes there is merely a single row, and in nearly every instance the termination of the thread is accomplished by some decorative but simple motive. America has always contended that the machine stitched skirt was inartistic.

BUY YOUR SHOE LACES NOW.

The next time you pass a shoe lace vender on the street patronize him, not out of sympathy, but to be forehanded. Buy two or three or half a dozen pairs, the St. Paul Pioneer Press advises.

The scarcity of dyes is blamed for the rapid advance in price. The increased cost of metal tips is another factor, and between them they have pushed the price of the shoe lace up as high as 200 per cent in some instances.

The little state of Rhode Island alone manufactures almost enough shoe laces to supply the needs of the United States. But unfortunately Rhode Island nor any other state manufactures enough dye stuffs to cut much figure, so that the shoe lace makers have been forced to pay exorbitant prices for their dyes.

The situation has become such that manufacturers have sent notices to dealers that they reserve the right to cancel all orders should the dye situation become worse.

Prior to the war the United States made shoe laces enough for its own needs and shipped a limited quantity to Canada and the Philippine islands. Germany and Belgium furnished the bulk of the laces for other parts of the world. When the war shut off those two countries the United States was called upon to supply the demand which now exceeds any possibility of supply.

SCARF AND MUFF MATCH THE HAT.

The fashion established during the winter of matching the hat with the scarf and muff obtains to a modified degree in the spring millinery.

Hats of lace are matched by scarves of the same fabric; and there are charming shoulder capes of taffeta, satin or lace, to be worn with hats in whose composition enters one or more of those fabrics.

One may have a muff of tafeta, of chiffon cloth or of lace to carry out the fabric idea of the chapeau. Of course, one expects to find the matching sweater and sport hat, and the latter has its complement in knitted scarves or in the scarves made of wool or satin, in whose color is repeated that of the hat.

NEW NAMES FOR SPRING COLORS

Among the colors advanced for spring appreciation in dresses, hats and suits may be mentioned the new peace and dove grays, which are a degree lighter in shade than the smoke and battleship tones of the winter. Vapeur gray is, as its name suggests mist-like in its cloudy tone. Pearl gray is very delicate, and we shall see much of it later on in dresses and demi-costumes.

The French are using the word "Champignon" to designate many of the mushroom shades, in which are frequently included biscuit, ivory and banana nuances. Shades of green are denominated by the expressive word "lumineaux." The newest blues are known as "oriflamme" and "escadre," which in their various tones are military in their inspiration.

PANEL EFFECT IN BATHING SUIT

Panel sashes, panel capes and panel streamers are all indicated in the most recent offerings from the French capital. One of the very latest uses to which this idea has been put was noticed in a bathing suit worn at a Florida resort. The suit was of plain pongee and from the shoulders floated a panel of that fabric striped with bright red.

When in the water this panel floated out on the surface; and when the wearer walked the sands this same panel was lifted by the breezes and gave a wing-like effect to the promenader.

TUB SILK FOR SPRING CLOTHES.

It is really wise to think of spring and summer clothes now, and as far as possible do one's buying before the more attractive things have been selected. Some material seems to be well worth making up into blouses, negligees, or even into dainty dresses. This is called "tub silk," and is silk and cotton in pretty colorings in several combinations and in any number of widths of stripes from the pin stripe to one-third inch. This is thirty-two inches wide and is twenty-nine cents a yard.

PUFFY MUFFINS.

"When an unusually good looking light, puffy pan of biscuits or muffins is brought to the table in the morning it will be well for the mistress of the house to investigate," said a trained domestic science teacher to a party of housewives. "She should watch the ingredients used, for it is possible that the muffins that look and taste so good may be responsible for stomach trouble later on.

"A little time ago we had a biscuit and muffin contest. The prize winner for muffins was employed as a maid in a family. They were delicious, delicately brown, rich looking when broken, and melted in the mouth when eaten. In fact, it was agreed that never had the judges tasted such muffins, and for this reason the prize winner was asked to give her recipe and later on a practical demonstration.

"The recipes said the instructor, "called for the very same kind and quantity of ingredients I use myself in making muffins, yet mine could not compare with hers.

"I learned why at the demonstration. First, Hilda measured out one and one-halfs cups of flour and then the baking powder. Three level teaspoonfuls is the right proportion, but the maid dug in the spoon and took up all it would hold—probably three level teaspoonfuls—and added it to the flour. When she did this again I gasped, but when the spoon came out, filled as before, for the third time, the audience gasped as one woman, however, no one felt she had a right to speak just then, but it looked as though there would be something doing when the muffins came out of the oven, for it did not seem possible they could turn out as did the prize winning pan. But they did, were just as delicious and not a trace of baking powder could be detected when they were eaten."

"But do you not know it is a very dangerous thing to put such a large quantity of baking powder into one and one-half cups of flour?" said the instructor. "Serving hot breads every morning this way will ruin any stomach. You will make the family sick.

"Oh, no," answered the demonstrator; "everybody loves my muffins. My lady often sends a pan to her friends and they say no muffins ever tasted as good as mine. I learned to make them that way from a chef at a big hotel. He used to use more baking powder than I do and everybody said his biscuits and muffins could not be beat. They were just like puff balls."

"No wonder," added the teacher, "that physicians are so often baffled when it comes to finding the cause of certain stomach troubles. It is scarcely probable that they would think of looking for it in the baking powder tin, yet this same tin may be building up the disease quicker than he can break it down."

HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

To prevent your hands chapping always wash them in cold water; but, if this is too Spartan for you, dusting them over with a little toilet oatmeal after each washing will sometimes prevent it.

Never resort to that abominable practice of clipping a child's eyelashes to promote their growth. It considerably weakens them, and is injurious to the eyes. Don't let baby sleep with a strong light on his eyes; let his resting place be softly shaded.

To cleanse and refresh the scalp the following aromatic tonic is recommended: Oil of orange, one-half ounce; oil of neroli, twenty drops; oil of bergamot, one ounce; oil of cinnamon, one-quarter dram; oil of cloves, one dram, and olive oil, two pints.

When the day is over and retiring time comes put your work and all that refers to it out of your mind. Sleep is so wonderful, so refreshing and so health-giving we should regard it as a sort of treasure, and all of us need all the sleep we can get if we are going to be strong mentally and physically.

If your hands begin to feel a little rough, start treatment at once. Rub plenty of almond cream well into the skin, just before retiring at night, and then slip on a pair of old loose gloves and keep them on all night. If this does not remove all chap (and it usually will), use camphor ice instead of cream and the roughest skin will succumb.

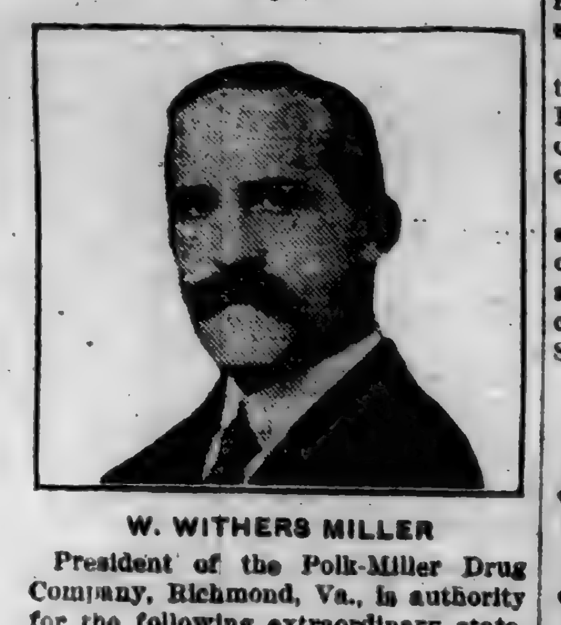
Great Business Losses Due to Neglect



W. WITHERS MILLER

President of the Polk-Miller Drug Company, Richmond, Va., is authority for the following extraordinary statement:

"I estimate that the business men of this country could increase their efficiency fully ten per cent by taking an occasional laxative and not neglecting the bowels as most of them do."

He also said that if the Department of Commerce in Washington would present each business man in the country with a box of Rexall Orderlies, it would be of great benefit to the national welfare. Rexall Orderlies are prompt in action, pleasant to take and never gripe, can be used by men, women or children, and are just the thing for toning up sluggish livers.

Last Friday evening the local High School Seconds swamped the Hicksville High School Seconds to the tune of 42-8. The playing of Milliman and Perry featured the game, Milliman getting ten baskets and Perry six. But Hicksville is not to be blamed, as this is their first year at the game. The girls put up a good game in the preliminary, the score being 7-0. Next Friday evening, the High School First Team will try conclusions with the Concord Township teachers; and the High School Seconds will play the Spencerville High School Seconds in the preliminary.

F. M. Thornton, day operator at the tower, has in his possession some letters that he prizes very highly, written by the officials of the B. & O., Railroad, in appreciation of his faithfulness to duty. A few days ago a broken rail occurred near the tower and Mr. Thornton discovered that a piece about 8 inches long was loose. He immediately held the block on all trains and sent for the men to come and repair it. This prompt action saved the company many thousands of dollars, no doubt, because a wreck would have resulted had it not been discovered. The Railroad Journal displays a likeness of Mr. Thornton accompanied with a write-up of his noble deed.

PUT CREAM IN NOSE AND STOP CATARRH

Tells How To Open Clogged Nostrils and End Head-Colds.

You feel fine in a few moments. Your cold in head or catarrh will be gone. Your clogged nostrils will open. The air passages of your head will clear and you can breathe freely. No more dullness, headache; no hawking, snuffling, mucous discharges or dryness; no struggling for breath at night.

Tell your druggist you want a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic cream in your nostrils, let it penetrate through every air passage of the head; soothe and heal the swollen, inflamed mucous membrane, and relief comes instantly.

It is just what every cold and catarrh sufferer needs. Don't stay stuffed-up and miserable.

Tampering with our Postal Laws

The attention of all patriotic citizens is called to the following Bills now before the National Legislature; (H. R. 491) known as the Seigle Bill and (H. R. 6468) known as the Fitzgerald Bill, both are "Bills to amend the Postal Laws".

A Bill.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever a complaint in writing shall be filed with the Postmaster General that any publication making use of or being sent through the mails contains any article therein which tends to expose any race, creed, or religion to either hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, he shall forthwith cause an investigation to be made under his direction and shall within twenty days after receipt of such complaint, if the facts contained therein are true, make an order forbidding the further use of the mails to any such publication, but nothing herein contained shall be deemed to prevent the Postmaster General from restoring such use of the mails to any such publication whenever it shall be established to his satisfaction that the publication has ceased to print or publish such prohibited matter and given him satisfactory assurances in writing that there will be no further repetition of the same.

A Bill.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever it shall be established to the satisfaction of the Postmaster General that any person is engaged, or represents himself as engaged, in the business of publishing any obscene or immoral books, pamphlets, pictures, prints, engravings, lithographs, photographs, or other publications, matter, or thing of an indecent, immoral or scurrilous character, and if such person shall, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, endeavor to use the post office for the promotion of such business, it is hereby declared that no letter, packet, parcel, newspaper, book, or other thing sent or sought to be sent through the post office by or on behalf of or to or on behalf of such person shall be deemed mailable matter, and the Postmaster General shall make the necessary rules and regulations to exclude such nonmailable matter from the mails.

The citizens of our country aught to observe that these bills are aimed as a direct blow at the free press of our country. The constitution of the United States declares for the freedom press and speech, this is the foundation of a free government for the people by the people.

Every patriotic citizen, regardless of sex or political affiliations, should write a personal letter to the Congressman from their district, and also to their State Senators asking them to use their every influence and power to defeat the above bills or any like measure.

When we note the action of some of our Congressmen, we are led to believe that there is some secret undermining influence trying to undermine the foundation of our great Republic.

If there is any such secret influence at work the people should be apprised of the fact, and the press is the only safe method left to a free people for the knowing of these facts.

If we will only read the signs of the times we can read of the downfall of this Republic.

Again let me urge upon each and every patriotic man and woman to help bury our Congressman and Senator under such an avalanche of letters and petitions, that they will not dare refuse to vote against these bills. J. B. HAIFLEY.

LESS MEAT IF BACK AND KIDNEYS HURT

Take a glass of Salts to flush Kidneys if Bladder bothers you—Drink lots of water.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

DRINK HOT TEA FOR A BAD COLD

Get a small package of Hamburg Breast Tea, or as the German folks call it, "Hamburger Brust Thee," at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the tea, put a cup of boiling water upon it, pour through a sieve and drink a teacup full at any time during the day or before retiring. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieving congestion. Also loosens the bowels, thus driving a cold from the system.

Try it the next time you suffer from a cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

RUB BACKACHE AND LUMBAGO RIGHT OUT

When your back is sore and lame or lumbago, sciatica or rheumatism has you stiffened up, don't suffer! Get a 25 cent bottle of old, honest "St. Jacobs Oil" at any drug store, pour a little in your hand and rub it right into the pain or ache, and by the time you count fifty, the soreness and lameness is gone.

Don't stay crippled! This soothing, penetrating oil needs to be used only once. It takes the ache and pain right out of your back and ends the misery. It is magical, yet absolutely harmless and doesn't burn the skin.

Nothing else stops lumbago, sciatica and lame back misery so promptly!

Miss Agnes Sechler, of St. Joe High School, carries of honors of second prize, with a grade of 95%.

There are two processes for making bread, the long and the short method, either of which can be used, according to time and convenience. I used the long method setting the yeast the day before I made the bread.

There are several steps to be taken, and the first one I took was to make the yeast. I boiled three or four potatoes, and stirred up in a separate pan one tablespoon of flour, one cup of sugar, and one tablespoon of salt. After the potatoes had cooked, I poured the potatoe water over the ingredients and added some cold water. After this I poured in the yeast and allowed to stand over night.

In the morning I sponged the bread and allowed it to stand for one or two hours. Then I sifted in sufficient flour to make a dough which could be handled; turned it out onto a floured board; kneaded it well, adding enough flour to prevent the dough from adhering to the board. After this I placed the bread in a greased pan and let rise until it was double in bulk and then formed it in loaves. This mixture made four loaves.

Last of all, after I let the loaves rise until light I placed them in the oven and baked them for about an hour, until thoroughly baked, took them out of the oven, placed them on a table and greased the top well so as to prevent the bread from becoming hard.

THE CHIEF LEGATEE

by ANNA KATHERINE GREEN

Author of "The Leavenworth Case," "Behind Closed Doors" etc. [illegible]

SYNOPSIS

Chapters I to III—A few hours after marriage the wife of Roger J. Ransom is missing from the hotel where they have just registered. A detective, Mr. Gerrage, is called into the case. The bride, formerly Miss Georgian Hazen, becomes alarmed over something which happened while passing down the aisle from the altar.

While standing at the hotel desk with the groom the woman disappears. A man with a twisted face was seen whispering to the bride at the reception. Evidently flight was meditated after that meeting.

The bell boy noted peculiarities about the woman and was the only one who noticed her slip away. The detective claims the maid was a substitute for the wife, and rode from the house to the hotel while the wife left by the basement door in the maid's clothes.

Chapters IV to V—The woman who left by the basement door was traced to a meeting with the man with a broken jaw. Ransom receives a note from his wife who claims to have found a long lost twin sister, supposed to have been dead. The twin is of unbalanced mind and stone deaf. Ransom meets the man with the broken jaw and who declares himself to be Mrs. Ransom's brother who was in need of money.

Chapters VI to VII.—Ransom interviews his wife's lawyer, who insists that she has a twin sister. When leaving the office the office boy gives him his wife's address.

Ransom goes to Stitford, Conn., and finds the hotel where his wife has secured rooms. He visits the cemetery and finds a man about to efface from the tombstone the record of the death of the twin sister, which was supposed to have occurred years previously. He also finds the announcement of the death of the man with whom he had recently talked, who claimed to be his wife's brother.

Chapters IX and X.—Ransom learns that his wife, her sister, and the lawyer, are coming to the inn. The sister who had left the coach for a walk appears later and he is surprised at the resemblance to his wife. He learns that his wife has had the lawyer draw her will.

Chapters XI to XIII—The inmates of the hotel were aroused by a piercing cry in the night. The sister declared that Ransom's wife had gone to the waterfall to destroy her life.

The mill stream never gave up its dead. A letter was found from Mrs. Ransom confirming the fact that she had tired of life. Some doubt was expressed by the detective.

Chapters XIV and XV—After a full investigation of the house and grounds by both Ransom and the lawyer come to the conclusion that the woman remaining in the hotel and known as Anitra was Ransom's wife.

Chapter XV to XVIII—Ransom is convinced, after following several clues, that he was mistaken and that his wife had perished.

The sister endeavors to win Ransom's love, but is repulsed.

Chapters XIX to XXI.—The sister tells her story to Ransom, but fails to win him from the memory of his wife. His wife's brother appears who believes that Ransom's wife is masquerading as her twin sister, but is baffled by her actions.

CHAPTER. XXI TO XXIII—The writer declares that his interest is because of money matters and a test to decide the identity of the woman was agreed upon.

"She's approaching her room. She looks tired. Her eyes are stealing this way;—no, they are resting on her own door. She sees the sign. She stands staring at it, but not like a person who has ever seen it before. It's the stare of an uneducated woman who runs upon something she does not understand. Now she touches it with one finger and glances up and down the hall with a doubtful shake of the head. Now she is running to another door, now to another. She is looking to see if this scrawl is to be found anywhere else; she even casts her eye this way—I feel like leaving my post. If I do, you may know that she's coming—No, she's back at her own door and—gentlemen, her bringing up or rather coming up asserts itself. She has put her palm to her mouth and is vigorously rubbing off the marks."

The next instant Mr. Harper rose. "She's gone into her room," said he. "Listen and you will hear her key stick in the lock."

Ransom sank into a seat; Hazen had walked to the window. Presently he turned.

"I am convinced," said he. "I will not trouble you gentlemen further. Mr. Ransom, I condole with you upon your loss. My sister was a woman of uncommon gifts."

Mr. Ransom bowed. He had no words for this man at a moment of such extreme excitement. He did not even note the latent sting hidden in the other's seeming tribute to Georgian. But the lawyer did and Hazen perceived that he did, for pausing in his act of crossing the room, he leaned for a moment on the table with his eyes down, then quickly raising them remarked to that gentleman:

"I am going to leave by the midnight train for New York. To-morrow I shall be on the ocean. Will it be transgressing all rules of propriety for me to ask the purport of my sister's will? It is a serious matter to me, sir. If she has left me anything—"

"She has not," emphasized the lawyer.

A shadow darkened the disappointed man's brow. His wound swelled and his eyes gleamed ironically as he turned them upon Ransom.

Instantly that gentleman spoke.

"I have received but a moiety," said he. "You need not envy me the amount."

"Who has it then?" briskly demanded the startled man. "Who? who? She?"

Mr. Harper never knew why he did it. He was reserved as a man and, usually, more than reserved as a lawyer, but as Hazen lifted his hands from the table and turned to leave, he quietly remarked:

"The chief legatee—the one she chose to leave the bulk of her very large fortune to—is a man we none of know. His name is Josiah Auchincloss."

The change which the utterance of this name caused in Hazen's expression threw them both into confusion.

"Why didn't you tell me that in the beginning?" he cried. "I needn't have wasted all this time and effort."

His eyes shone, his poor lips smiled, his whole air was jubilant. Both Mr. Harper and his client surveyed him in amazement. The lines so fast disappearing from his brow were beginning to reappear on theirs.

"Mr. Harper," this hard-to-be-understood man now declared, "you may safely administer the estate of my sister. She is surely dead."

CHAPTER XXIII.

A Startling Decision.

BEFORE Mr. Ransom and the lawyer had recovered from their astonishment, Hazen had slipped from the room. As Mr. Harper started to follow, he saw the other's head disappearing down the staircase leading to the office. He called to him, but Hazen declined to turn.

"No time," he shouted back. "I shall have to make use of somebody's automobile now, to get to the Ferry in time."

The automobile was soon leaving the stable. Hazen was already in it and the man who had come up from New York was with him. Stepping out into the road Harper stopped full in the glare of the office lights and held up his hand. The chauffeur reversed the lever and the machine stopped.

"One word," said Harper, approaching to the side where Hazen sat. "I thought you ought to know before leaving that we can take no proceedings in the matter we were speaking of till we have undisputed proof that your sister is dead. That we may not get for a long time, possibly never. If you are interested in having this Auchincloss receive his inheritance, you had better prepare both yourself and him for a long wait. The river seems slow to give up its dead."

The quiver of impatience which had shaken Hazen at the first word had settled into a strange rigidity.

"One moment," he said to the chauffeur at his side. Then in a low, strangely sounding whisper to Harper: "They think the body's in the Devil's Cauldron. Nothing can get it out if it is. Would some proof of its presence there be sufficient to settle the fact of her death?"

"That would depend. If the proof was unmistakable, it might pass in the Surrogate's Court. What is the matter, Hazen?"

"Nothing." The tone was hollow; the whole man sat like an image of death. "I—I'm thinking—weighing—" he uttered in scattered murmurs. Then suddenly, "You're not deceiving me, Harper. Some proof will be necessary, and that very soon, for this man Auchincloss to realise the money?"

"Yes," the monosyllable was as dry as it was short. Harper's patience with this unnatural brother was about at an end.

"And who will venture to obtain this proof for us? No one. Not even Ransom would venture down into that watery hole. They say it is almost certain death," babbled Hazen.

Harper kept silence. Strange forces were at work. The head of another gruesome tragedy loomed vaguely through the shadows of this already sufficiently tragic mystery.

"Go on!" suddenly shouted Hazen, leaning forward to the chauffeur. But the next instant his hand was on the man's sleeve. "No, I have changed my mind. Here, Staples," he called out as a man came running down the steps, "take my bag and ask the landlady to prepare me a room. I'll not try for the train to-night."

Then, as the man at his side leaped to the ground, he turned to Harper and remarked quietly, but in no common tone:

"The steamer must sail without me. I'll stay in this place a while and prove the death of Georgian Ransom myself."

CHAPTER XXIV.

The Devil's Cauldron.

HAZEN'S solemnity and his queer manners impressed Mr. Harper strongly. As soon as the opportunity offered he cornered the young man in the office where he had taken refuge, and giving him to understand that further explanations must pass between them before either slept, he drew him apart and put the straight question to him:

"Who is Josiah Auchincloss?"

The answer was abrupt, almost menacing in its emphasis and tone.

"A trunk-maker in St. Louis. A man she was indebted to."

"How indebted to—a trunk-maker?"

"That I cannot, do not desire to state. It is enough that she felt she owed him the bulk of her fortune. Though this eliminates me from benefits of a wealth I had some rights to share, I make no complaint. She knew her business best, and I am disposed to accept her judgment in the matter without criticism."

"You are?" The tone was sharp, the sarcasm biting. "I can understand that. For Auchincloss, in this will, read Hazen; but how about her husband? How about her friends and the general community? Do you not think they will ask why a beautiful and socially well-placed young woman like your sister should leave so large a portion of her wealth to an obscure man in another town, of whom her friends and even her business agent have never heard? It would have been better if she had left you her thousands directly."

The smile which was Hazen's only retort was very bitter.

"You drew up her will," said he. "You must have reasoned with her on this very point as you are now trying to reason with me?"

The lawyer waved this aside.

"I didn't know at that time the social status of the legatee; nor did I know her brother then as well as I do now."

"You do not know me now."

"I know that you are very pale; that the determination you have just made has cost you more than you perhaps are willing to state. That there is mystery in your past, mystery in your present, and, possibly, mystery threatening your future, and all in connection with your great desire for this money."

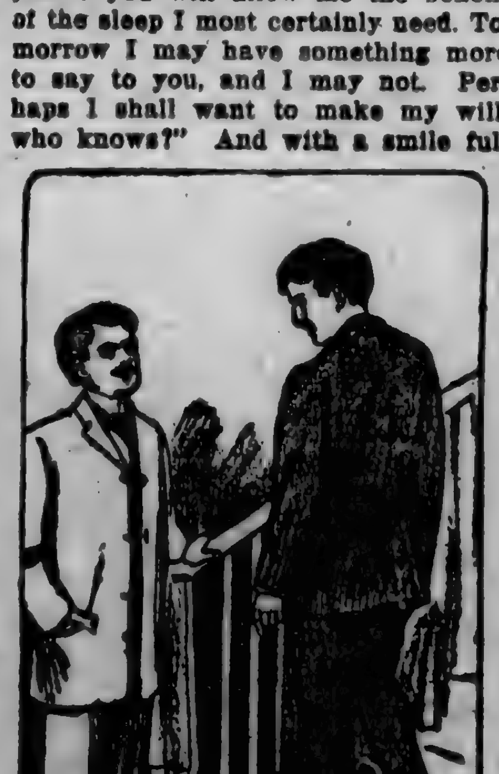
Hazen made a forcible gesture, but whether of denial or depreciation, it was not easy to decide.

"Would it not then be better for all parties," pursued the lawyer, "for you to give me some idea of the great obligation under which your sister lay to this man, that I may have an answer ready when people ask me why she passed you so conspicuously by, in order to enrich this stranger?"

"The story is not mine. Had she wished you to know it, she would have confided it to you herself. I must decline—"

Mr. Harper interrupted the other impressively. "Do you realize what a shadow may be thrown upon your sister's memory by this reticence on your part? Her death was suggestive enough without the complications you mention. In justice to your relationship you should speak. If, as I think, the money is really meant for you, say so. The subterfuge may be difficult of explanation, but it will not hurt her memory as much as this extraordinary silence on your part."

"You are a man of limited experience, Mr. Harper," replied Hazen. "You would not understand the truth, Georgian or me. Ransom might, but I shall not even risk Ransom's discretion. Now this is all I am going to say about this matter. Georgian's last will and testament, followed through it was by suicide, was a perfectly regular one. The only impediment to its being so recognized and acted upon is the doubt as to her actual decease. If the body of my poor young sister has become lodged in the Devil's Cauldron, I am going there to seek it. As the projects calls for courage and, above all, a good condition of body and mind, I shall be obliged to you if you will allow me the benefit of the sleep I most certainly need. To-morrow I may have something more to say to you, and I may not. Perhaps I shall want to make my will, who knows?" And with a smile full of sarcastic meaning, he pushed Mr. Harper's arm aside and made for the staircase, up which he presently vanished without another attempt on the lawyer's part to hold him back.



"Perhaps I shall want to make my will, who knows?"

A few minutes later the lawyer was getting what information he could about the so-called Devil's Cauldron. It seems that this was a very deep hole in which, on account of the rocky formation surrounding it, the water swept in an eddy which had the force of a whirlpool. No one had ever sounded its depths and nothing had ever been seen again which had once been sucked into its deathly hollow. That Georgian's body had found its everlasting grave there many had believed from the first, and if the conviction had not yet been publicly expressed it was out of consideration for Mr. Ransom, to whose hopes it could but ring a final knell.

"Where is the hole? How far from the waterfall?" queried Mr. Harper.

"A good mile," muttered one man. "It's a horrid place, sir. No one has ever sounded its depths."

Harper could no longer hide his excitement at the thought that Hazen meditated this undertaking.

"How he must want money!" thought he.

That a man should face such a horror for another man's profit did not seem likely enough to engage his consideration for a moment. Lawyer Harper knew the world—or thought he did. Next day the whole town was thrown into a hubbub. Word had gone out through every medium possible to so small a place that Alfred Hazen, Georgian's long lost brother, was going to dare Death Eddy in a final attempt to recover his sister's body.

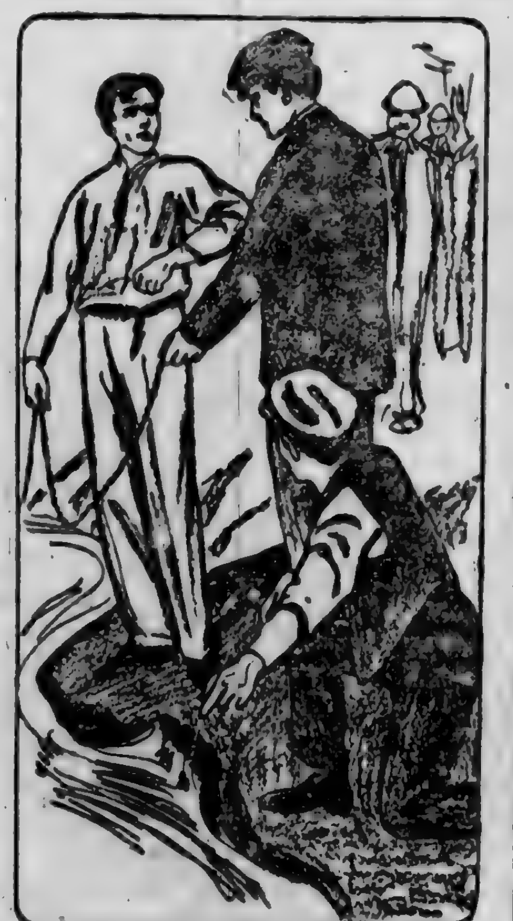
CHAPTER XXV.

Death Eddy.

IT was a gray day, chill and ominous. As the three most interested in the event came together on the road facing the point from which Hazen had decided to make his desperate plunge, the dreariness of the scene was reflected in the troubled eye of the lawyer and that of the still more profoundly affected Ransom. Only Hazen gazed unmoved. Perhaps because the spot was no new one to him, perhaps because an unsympathetic sky, a stretch of rock, the swirl of churning waters without any of the lightness and color which glancing sunlight gives, mean for him but one thing—the thing upon which he had fixed his mind, his soul.

Under a tree at the spot a small group of strong and determined men was already collected; not as spectators but as helpers in the adventurous attempt about to be undertaken by their old friend and playmate. The spectators had been barred from the point and stood lined up in the road overlooking the eddy. They were numerous and very eager. Hazen's brows drew together in his first exhibition of feeling as he saw women and even children in the crowd, and caught their expression of morbid anticipation.

"Cormorants!" escaped his lips. "They look for a feast of death, but they will be disappointed. I shall survive this plunge."



"Cormorants!" escaped his lips. "They look for a feast of death."

"Mr. Hazen?" It was Harper who spoke. They had passed a little thicket of brush and were drawing near the group under the tree. "Have you duly considered what you are about to do? I have talked with several men of judgment and experience about this attempt, and they all say it can have but one termination."

"I know. That is because they know little or nothing of the life I have led since I left this town. There is not a man amongst them so slight and seemingly frail of figure as myself, but none of them, not one, has been so often up to the very gates of death and escaped, as I have. My schooling has been long and severe, perhaps in preparation for this day. I have been through fire; I have been through water. The swirling of my own native stream does not appall me. I rather welcome it; it is but another experience."

"But for money?" broke in Ransom. "You acknowledge it is for no other purpose. Will it pay? I own that in my eyes no amount of money could pay a man for so superhuman a risk as this. Take a few thousands from me—I had rather give them to you than see you leap into that water opening beneath us like a hungry maw."

Hazen stood silent, his eye glistening, his hand almost outstretched. Harper thought he would yield; the offer must have struck him as generous and very tempting—a good excuse for a hot-headed man to withdraw from a very doubtful adventure. But he did not know Hazen. This latter advanced his hand and squeezed Ransom's warmly, but his answer, when he was ready to give one, conveyed no intention of a change of mind.

"Will your thousands amount to a clean million?" he smiled. "That is the amount, I believe, bequeathed by your wife to Mr. Auchincloss. Nothing less will suffice. Yet I thank you, Ransom."

The latter bowed and fell a little behind the others. The struggle in his mind had been severe; it was severe yet; he did not know but that it was his duty to stop this Hazen from his intended action by force. He was not sure but that the onus of this whole desperate undertaking would fall upon his conscience if the end was fatal. The horror of this self-probing was still upon him as he followed Hazen's slight and virile figure across the rocks, but it fled as he felt the spray of the tossing waters dash its chilling reminder in his face.

The event was upon him and he must add to his former actions that of a complete and determined opposition to the risk proposed or possibly forfeit his peace of mind forever. Quickening his pace, he reached Hazen and the lawyer just as the men awaiting them had advanced on their side. Instantly he knew it was too late. There was neither time nor opportunity for any weak protests on his part now. Older men pointed out to Hazen what especial points of suction were to be avoided, and showed him the chain they had brought for his waist, and how he was to pull upon it the very instant he felt his senses of his strength leaving him.

He answered as a courageous man might; and making ready by taking off his coat and shoes he gave himself into their hands for the proper fastening on of the chain. Then, while the murmur of expectation rose from the crowd on the river bank, he stepped back to Mr. Ransom and whispered hurriedly in his ear:

"You have a good heart, a better heart than I ever gave you credit for. Promise that, in case I never come out of those waters alive, you will put no obstacle in the way of Mr. Auchincloss inheriting his fortune in good time. He's a man worthy of all the assistance which money can bring. You do not need her wealth; Anitra—well, she will be cared for, but Auchincloss—promise—brother."

Ransom half drew back in his amazement. Then started forward again. This man whom he had always distrusted, whom he had looked upon as Georgian's possible enemy, certainly his own, was looking into his eyes with a gaze of trust, almost of affection. The money was not for himself; he showed it by the noble, almost grand look with which he waited for his answer; a look that carried conviction despite Ransom's prejudice and great dislike.

"You will give me that much additional nerve for the task lying before me?" he added. And Ransom could only bow his head. The man's mastery was limitless; it had reached and moved even him.

Another moment and a gasp went up from fifty or more throats. Hazen had taken the chain in his hand, walked to the edge of the rock and slipped into the quietest water he saw there.

"Strike left!" called out a voice. And he struck left. The eddy seized him and they could see his head moving slowly about in the great circle which gradually grew smaller and smaller till he suddenly disappeared. A groan muffled with horror went up from the shore. But the man who held the chain lifted up his hand, and silence—more pregnant of anticipation than any sound—held that whole crowd rigid. The man played out the chain; Harper stared at the seething, trembling water, but Ransom looked another way. The torture in his soul was taking shape, the shape of a ghost rising from those tossing waters. Suddenly the pent-in breath of fifty breasts found its way again to the lips.

The men who held the chain were pulling it in with violent reaches. It dragged more slowly, stuck, loosened itself, and finally brought into sight a face white as the foam it rose amongst.

"Dead! Drowned!" the whisper went around.

But when Hazen was dragged ashore and Ransom had thrown himself at his feet, he saw that he yet lived, and lived triumphantly. Ransom could not have told more; it was for others to see and point out the smile that sweetened the wan lips, and the passion with which he held against his breast some sodden and shapeless object which he had rescued from those awful depths, and which, when spread out and clean of sand, betrayed itself as that peculiar article of woman's clothing, a small side bag.

"I remember that bag," said Harper. "I saw it, or one exactly like it, in Mrs. Ransom's hand when she got into the coach the day we all rode up from the ferry. What will he have to say about it? and could he have seen the body from which it has evidently been torn?"

CHAPTER XXVI.

Hazen.

"AN unfathomable man," grumbled Mr. Harper, entering Mr. Ransom's room in marked disorder. "They say that he has not spoken yet; but the coroner is with him and we shall hear something from him soon. I expect—" here the lawyer's voice changed and his manner took on meaning—"that his report will be final."

"Final? You mean—"

"What his fainting face showed. For all its pallor and the exhaustion it expressed, there was triumph in its every feature. The little bag was not all he saw in that pit of hell. You must prepare yourself for no common ordeal, Ransom; it will take all your courage to listen to his story."

"I know." The words came with difficulty but not without a certain manly courage. "I shall try not to make you too much trouble." Then after a moment of oppressive silence, "Did you notice, when we all came in, the figure of a woman disappearing up the stair way? It was Anitra's and it paused before it reached the top, and I saw her eyes staring down at Hazen's helpless figure with a wildness in its inquiry that has sapped all my courage. How are we to answer that girl when she asks us what has happened? How make her know that Hazen is her brother and that he has just risked his life to satisfy himself and us that Georgian was really lost in that dreadful pool."

The lawyer, darting a keen glance at the speaker, softly shook his head.

"I am not thinking of Miss Hazen," said he. "I'm wondering how far the proof he has obtained will go." He paused, listening, then made a gesture towards the hall. "There's some one there," he whispered.

Ransom rose, and with a quick turn of the wrist pulled open the door.

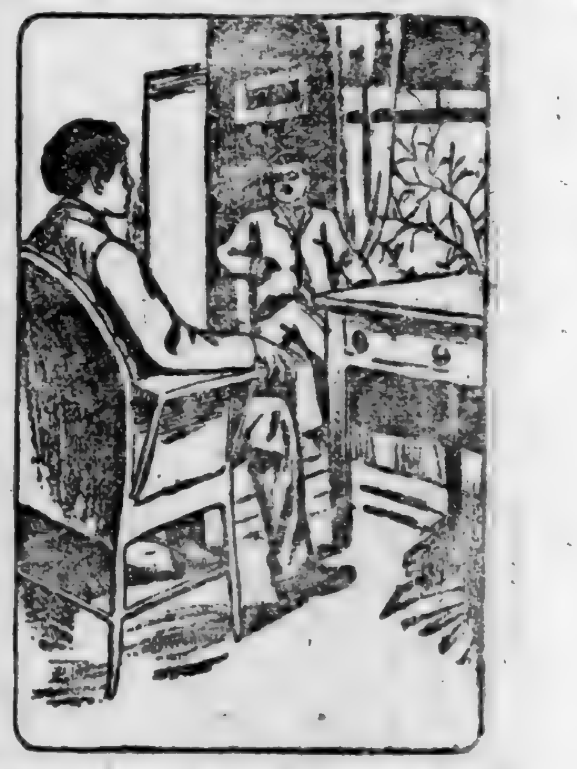
A man was standing on the threshold, a ghastly figure before which Ransom involuntarily stepped back.

"Hazen!" he cried; then, as the other tottered, he sprang forward again and, reaching out his hand to steady him, drew him in with the remark, "We were expecting a summons from you. We are happy that you find yourself able to come to us."

"The coroner has just gone. The doctors I dismissed. I have something to say to you—to both of you," he added as he caught sight of Mr. Harper.

Entering slowly, he sat down in the chair proffered him by the lawyer. There was something strange in his air, a quiet automaton-like quality which attracted the latter's notice and led him to watch him very closely. Ransom was busy with the door, which the strong west wind blowing through the hall made difficult to close.

"I—" The one word uttered, Hazen seemed to forget himself. Sitting quite still, he gazed straight before him at the open window. There was little to be seen there but the swaying boughs of the huge tree, but his gaze never left those tossing limbs, and his sentence hung suspended till the movement made by Ransom recrossing the room roused him, and he went on.



Sitting quite still he gazed straight before him at the open window

"I have made the plunge, gentlemen, and fortune favored me. I—" here his voice failed him again, but realizing the fact more quickly than before, he shook off his apathy, and facing the two men, who awaited his slow words with inconceivable excitement, continued with sudden concentration upon his subject, "I saw what I went to see—poor Georgian's body. I have satisfied the coroner of this fact. The little bag I tore from her side proves her identity beyond a doubt. You saw it, Mr. Harper. They tell me that you recognized it at once as the same you saw in her hand in the stage-coach. But if you had not, the initials on it are unmistakable, G. Q. H., Georgian Quinlan Hazen. Auchincloss will get his money, and soon, will he not? Answer me plainly, Harper. Such an experience merits some reward. You will not make difficulties?"

"I?" The lawyer's query had a strange ring to it. He glanced from Hazen to Ransom, and from Ransom back to Hazen, whose features had now become more composed, though they still retained their remarkable pallor.

"If the proof is positive," he then went on, "you assuredly can trust both my client and myself to remember our promise to you."

"The coroner, you say, is satisfied?"

"Yes, with the proof and my sworn statement. He is obliged to be. No one else, least of all himself, feels any desire to go down to that whirling eddy for confirmation of my story. And they are wise. I do not think that any man with less experience than myself could sound the depths of that vortex and come up alive. The noise—the swirl—the sense of being sucked down—down in ever-increasing fury—but my purpose kept the life in me. I was determined not to yield, not to faint, till I had seen—and proved—"

"What's that?"

The cry was from Mr. Ransom. A sudden gust of wind had torn its way through the room, flinging the door wide, and strewing the floor with flying papers from the large stand in the window (To be Continued)

FEAR OF GHOSTS CANCELS LEASE

JURY HOLDS TENANT NOT TOLD OF HAUNTS NEED NOT PAY THE RENT

FAMILY GREW VERY NERVOUS

Servant Girl Tells in Court of Strange Noises that Disturbed Her Slumbers

Kansas City, Mo.—Judicial approval to a belief in ghosts has been given by Justice Shepherd and a jury in a Kansas City court in a suit for rent for a haunted house.

Several years ago a man entered the home of his estranged wife early in the morning and was shot to death by his 20 year old daughter. At the inquest the daughter told of the killing. She said:

"In the moonlight I saw a man's hand move on the banister. In the other hand he carried something black as he moved up the stairs. The lights went out. I shot at him in the darkness. They tell me I killed him. I didn't know who he was. I rather would have been killed myself than to have killed him. He was my father."

The house had stood untenanted from a few weeks after the shooting until last August, when after extensive repairs had been made it was leased for a year.

The new tenant knew nothing of the tragedy. He took his wife and the maid to view the new home preparatory to moving in. The moment the wife stepped inside the door her intuition, she says, told her something was wrong. Her husband laughed at her intuition and her premonitions that something fearful surrounded the house. He persuaded his wife to move, but the conviction stuck to her. The maid, too, confessed that she had had the same feeling the moment she entered the door.

Day after day as the wife and the maid were left at home to care for the two children their horror grew. There were nights when the maid, as she testified, lay awake, listening to the soft patter of feet along the hall. She told of times when creeping from her bed she had thrown shoes down the darkened hall at the fearful thing that frightened her into wakefulness.

And then the wife testified, that there were times when her son would wake from a sound sleep to cry out that he heard someone moving downstairs. There were times, too, the mother said, when just as she would be going to sleep a fancied noise as if a muffled shot would bring her bolt upright, shaking with fear.

The husband never had heard these things, never felt a depressing atmosphere, except that it was created by the wife, the maid and the children, frankly, he said he didn't believe in ghosts and his attorney agreed with him that there wasn't any such thing. But here was the maid threatening to quit, the children beginning to get hysterical after dark and the wife's health being undermined. He moved out.

The owner demanded the payment of rent to the limit of the lease, and the ex-tenant refused to pay. The owner sued, and that brought the matter into court, and before a jury which after hearing all the evidence, declared the house haunted and brought in a verdict for the defendant.

FAMOUS ICE CAVERN SOLD

Freak Mine in Pennsylvania Disposed of to College Professor—Covers 25 Acres.

North Dingcton, Pa.—The Sweden Valley Wonder, an ice mine located at Sweden Valley, Potter County, Pennsylvania, has been sold to M. J. Kelley Mount Vernon, Ohio, consideration $3,700.

This famous ice mine has long been one of the interesting attractions in the east. It consists of a large cavern in the hillside from which, during the summer months, ice is mined and strange as the matter may seem, there is no ice in the mine in the winter months.

Tourists from all parts of the country visit this freak of nature in large numbers every summer, the trip being made by rail to Goudersport, Pa., the county seat of Potter County, and from there automobiles are secured, which soon hurry the visitors up the beautiful Sweden Valley, over splendid macademised roads for a distance of about fourteen miles to the mine. The ice mine is located upon twenty-five acres of ground and the property has been in the ownership of John Dodd for several years past, but a few days ago he sold the entire property. Mr. Kelley, the new owner is a young man and a professor in a commercial college at Mt. Vernon, Ohio. His family will come to Sweden Valley in a short time and until that time the mine will be in charge of Mr. Dodd.

Prof. Kelley does not contemplate any extensive improvements on the property except that he will endeavor to make it still more attractive to the traveling public.

WINS MAYORALITY

Giant Parson's Unusual Theory Raised Against Him, But He Meets It Squarely.

Asheville, N. C.—The shape of the earth and the movement of the sun were chief of the issues in West Asheville's mayorality contest, which resulted in the election of the Rev. J. L. Crook as an advocate of the long ago discredited flat theory. Besides his old fashioned geographical views, the minister has some distinctive personal characteristics, which his supporters could not help comparing with those of his opponents.

Mayor Crook is 6 feet 9 inches tall, or as he puts it "5 feet 21 inches." He weighs 260 pounds, and in his career as a preacher he has never hesitated to combat the theory that the earth is round, even when the whole world seemed arrayed against him.

When he announced for mayor his opponents thought to ridicule him by calling attention to his statements that the earth is flat. The preacher welcomed the challenge and started in hotly to defend his views. He argued that if the earth was round and turned over and over people would fall off; that the rising of the sun in the east its setting in the west proved it traveled around the earth, and that the Bible record of Joshua's command to the sun to stand still proved his contention beyond doubt. Whatever people thought of his views, they voted for him in preference to his short, round opponent who championed the roundness of the earth.

ROMANTIC TURN TO WAR TRAGEDY

VETERAN WEDS DAUGHTER OF OFFICER HE KILLS.

Story Develops That Widow Is Same Little Girl Whose Life He Saved at Chancellorsville.

Scranton, Pa.—After shooting her father, a captain in the Confederate army, on the bloody battlefield of Chancellorsville, and rescuing a little girl from a burning homestead on the edge of the smoke-smudged field, Emmet A. Bishop, 81 years old, a Civil war veteran, has married Mrs. H. Skiles-Simpson, aged 54, the daughter of the man he shot and the little girl he rescued from the flames fifty years ago.

They met for the first time since the battle in a store in Wilkesbarre, where the widow Simpson gave her name to a clerk to have her purchases charged to her account. Bishop, standing nearby, recalled the name "Skiles" as that of the tot he had rescued over a half century ago. He spoke to Mrs. Simpson out of courtesy and found that it was the little girl he had really rescued. The result was a short courtship which ended when the aged veteran escorted the comely widow to the office of the marriage license clerk and thence to a minister.

Emmet A. Bishop was born in Wayne county, Pennsylvania. He enlisted in a northern regiment at the outset of the Civil war and saw service in Maryland. At the battle of Chancellorsville, after heavy fighting, Bishop's company was given a rest and he with several comrades were sent on a foraging expedition to surrounding hamlets for food.

Two and a half miles from the real scene of battle, Bishop and his comrades saw a house in flames. It was one of those big homes with ramblin gables peculiar to the south in antebellum days.

Bishop, in commenting on the episode, said: "We investigated and found that the house had been fired in some way and decided that we might as well collect any articles we could save. So we entered the house and found the little girl lying across a big bed overcome with smoke."

"Yes, and I was pretty near gone," remarked Mrs. Bishop, who was fondly watching her aged husband while he was telling the story of years gone by.

Bishop, while he was carrying the little girl to safety, asked her where her parents were.

"Papa is over there. He's a soger and he wears these kind of straps," the little tot replied as she pulled from her apron pocket the shoulder straps of a captain in the Confederate army.

One of Bishop's comrades recognized the numerals and insigna that was worn by a captain in the regiment against which the northern men were pitted. Bishop took the little girl over to the Confederate hospital, under a flag of truce.

He was astonished to find that the little tot's father was the man he had shot and killed only a few days before while on picket duty. The little girl was turned over to people living in the vicinity. That was the last Bishop saw of her, although he carried her name, written hastily, on a scrap of paper for a long time.

The widow always gave her name as Mrs. H. Skiles-Simpson. When Bishop dropped into the Wilkesbarre store to buy a few necessities he heard the word Skiles. He asked the woman if she had any relatives in Maryland. She answered in the affirmative. Then the story of the little girl's escape and other events of that time, told by the aged veteran, brought forth repeated exclamations from Mrs. Skiles-Simpson.

"I always remembered the young man who rescued me, because he looked so big and strong in his blue uniform," she said to the clerk.

Mrs. Skiles' first husband died February 18, 1882, and Bishop's first wife July 9, 1881. Bishop is a retired carriage maker and lives at 1605 Nau Aug avenue, Scranton. They will make their home in Mr. Bishop's house near Nau Aug Park.

SPRING TURNED INTO BATHTUB

Former Popular Drinking Pool Now Barber Shop Attraction.

Bothan, Ala.—This city was once known as Poplar Springs, but at that time it was only a crossroads drinking place, but a favorite one with travelers. The same bountiful spring is now enclosed in a local barber shop, and is used as a bathtub. The cold water bathers are clamoring, however for a hot water pipe, as they claim the flow of water is much too frigid for less rugged or timid humanity.

NEARLY ALL ARE SOON BROKE

Settlements to Blacks Causes a Big Boom in All Kinds of Business.

Ardmore, Okla.—The reckless liberality of the Ardmore negroes who received cash from the Santa Fe Railroad in settlement of claims resulting from the disastrous gasoline tank explosion a few months ago, was a boost to trade in the little town. Many of those whose claims were paid by the railroad company without litigation were negroes, and most of the negroes and their money are now parted.

Although there is a great deal of building going on in Ardmore, the negroes who have 'splosion' money, as they call it are not working. They spend freely, have plenty to eat and all of them are well dressed. The expert craps players are reaping a harvest, and the police find it useless to try to break up the gambling. The rattle of the dice is heard all night, and nearly all day.

One young negro whose father was killed in the explosion, settled with the claim agents early, and bought an automobile the same day he was paid. He has since invested in a piano, and is now the most popular negro in Ardmore.

Negro dance houses are flourishing and the clothing and millinery stores are having a big trade in the brightest colors, both in clothing for men and in millinery for women.

The increase of business extends to the grocery stores, too, for the negroes live well while the money lasts. A circus recently made a long jump to come to Ardmore. It never had half as good patronage on any former visit.

One remarkable case is that of a negro to whom was paid about $700 for injuries he received in the explosion. As soon as the money was in his hands he bought a piano, a costly rug for the hut in which he lives, a silk dress for his wife and a flashy suit for himself. He is not yet out of bed and may never be able to wear the suit.

In this same household the children are barefooted and the wife needs a new washtub, but the money is all gone. No member of the family can play the piano, but it had always been the ambition of the negro and his wife to own one.

All the negroes who have received money on account of the explosion are envied by those who had no claims against the railroad. Those who had no claims are compelled to work. White claimants have for the most part invested the money they received, or have placed it in the bank, but only three or four negroes are known to have made bank deposits.

ROUNDS UP HIS SHEEP WITH A FLYING MACHINE

Herder Views His Flocks from Dizzy Heights Instead of Tricky Broncho's Neck.

Omaha, Neb.—It's all off with the old time sheep herder. Hereafter, in order to be up to date a sheep herder must tend his flocks soaring around over them in an aeroplane.

Jim Dickie of Thermopolis, Wyo., has set the pace. He has just returned from the Pacific coast, where he saw wonderful demonstrations with aeroplanes and was prompted to order one of the latest models. Today Dickie is soaring over the plains of Wyoming looking over his various flocks of sheep.

"The lambs and some of the ewes were a little afraid at first," said one of Dickie's herders, "for they thought the old man was a monster eagle coming around looking for tender meat but now they are getting used to it.

Dickie is an old time sheep man of Wyoming. He has tens of thousands of sheep scattered all over the ranges of Wyoming. He expects to visit the various flocks and their representative herders once or twice a year, but the flocks have grown so numerous that each year this has become a great task.

"There is nothing quite equal to an aeroplane as a convenience," said Dickie, "for a man in my line of business with so many flocks to visit. Some of the flocks are twenty-five to fifty miles apart. The country is so rough that an automobile is out of the question. I have been going horseback all the time to maintain general supervision over the various camps, but henceforth the flyer for me, see!"

So saying he jerked the throttle, the gasoline engine began to sputter and roar, the great white bird glided off the buffalo grass, and in a moment the flock master was gliding high over the remote buttes of the Wyoming plains.

Southwark, Eng.—After singing "Kind words shall never die," Emmie Wise, 43, a widow, died suddenly. It was stated at the inquest that her heart was twice the normal size.

CHOKES TO DEATH ON TONGUE

Arkansas Farmer's Cow Meets Death in Extraordinary Manner.

Dennard, Ark.—Sam Treese, a farmer near Owls Cove, Ark., recently lost a cow and as her death was a surprise to him, Mr. Treese decided to investigate the cause. He first examined her stomach for dry murrh or poison from frost bitten cane. His investigations were unsuccessful and he gave up hopes of finding the cause of the fatality when he thought that an examination of her mouth might lead to a solution of the mystery.

As he opened the cows mouth he observed blood clotted on her lower jaw and on the inside of the mouth. He inserted his hand to find the cause of the blood and could not locate her tongue. Instead he found a large piece of sharpedged glass resting on the salivary glands. He removed the glass and searched deeper in her mouth for her tongue. He was much surprised to find the base of her tongue lacerated and nearly cut in two; the tongue had folded back and in the cow's effort to swallow it she had become strangled and choked before she was relieved.

The only solution Mr. Treese had to offer was that the cow had probably found the glass with a small quantity of salt on it and had taken it into her mouth to obtain the salt. She had moved it about in her mouth, working it back and forth, until it had nearly severed her tongue.

FORESTERS FIGHT WALL OF POISONOUS REPTILES

Many Big Ones Killed—Government Sends Out First Aid Kits for Snake Bite

Washington, D. C.—This is not an ordinary snake story. It differs from ordinary snake stories in that it is true—every word of it.

This snake story is the subject of an official report made by the district forester on the Pacific Coast to the Government at Washington. The district forester is a clear headed man and not a man who sees things—not even snakes—if they do not exist.

The story thus reported officially tells about a battle which three men, sent to extinguish a fire in the Shasta national forest in California, had with rattlesnakes before they could get to the blaze. The battle lasted six hours the district forester reports.

During an electrical storm lightning started about twenty-five small fires in the forest. Apparently all of them had been put out, when a lookout discovered that one was smoking again.

Three men started pell mell over the brush and rocks to extinguish the fire, but when they had almost reached it they found their way blocked by a writhing wall of enraged rattlesnakes. The heat had driven the snakes out from among the rocks and they were ready for a fight.

It was then early in the afternoon and the report states that the men battled with the angry reptiles until late in the evening. Some of the snakes cut off their retreat and they could neither advance nor go backward. All they could do was to fight—fight for their lives.

The official report like most love stories ends happily. By the time the sun went down the three men had killed all the snakes, and within three hours after sunset they extinguished the fire. The official report does not say how many snakes were killed, but it states that ten of those slaughtered were very large ones, with from ten to thirteen rattles each.

Forestry employes report that their work is handicapped to an unusual extent this year by poisonous snakes. So great has become the hazard that the forest service has arranged for the purchase and distribution among the employes of a pocket instrument for treating snake bites. In one end of the instrument, which is carried in a small case, is a sharp blade with which to make a fresh incision in the snake bite. In the other end is a drug all ready to be applied to the reopened wound.

The forest service has heard, of course, of the great American specific for snake bites, which is redish in color and carried in pint bottles, but it has no faith in that remedy.

The Correct Returns

Auburn Evening Star

That Cyrus Cline won over Harry Hilgemann for the democratic congressional nomination by 234 votes and that Prof. L. W. Fairfield won over his closest opponent R. B. Hanna, for the republican congressional nomination by 1,322 votes, are interesting figures brought out in the official primary election returns of the six counties in the Twelfth district.

Cline's strength was shown in Steuben county where he received a majority of 508, Noble 503, LaGrange 222, and DeKalb 104, making a total of 2,135.

Hilgemann showed up strong in Allen and Whitley counties. In Whitley county he pulled out with a majority of 563, and in Allen county 540, making a total of 1,103.

In DeKalb county Cline received 1,180 votes and Hilgemann 1,081; Whitley, Cline 564, Hilgemann 1,137; Steuben, Cline 583, Hilgemann 75; Noble, Cline 856, Hilgemann 353; LaGrange, Cline 375, Hilgemann, 153; and Allen, Cline 3,265, and Hilgemann 3,805.

Fairfield's strength was in the north tier of counties. Steuben led with 1,639 over Hanna, Noble 29, LaGrange 81, and DeKalb 386, making a total of 2,135.

Hanna's big gain was in Allen county where he led by 696 and in Whitley by 111, making a total in the two counties of 807.

In DeKalb county Fairfield received 883 votes to Hanna's 497, in Allen Fairfield 1,303, Hanna 1,999, LaGrange, Fairfield 545, Hanna 464; Noble, Fairfield 640, Hanna 611; Steuben, Fairfield 1,914, Hanna 303; and Whitley, Fairfield 462, and Hanna 573.

The total democratic vote in the twelfth district was 13,427 and the total republican vote 10,221.

An error was discovered in the count of the election returns in DeKalb county which was ratified Friday evening by the election commissioners. The vote as given out showed John W. Kern, democratic candidate for senator had received 1,292 votes when the real vote was 1,992.

What

of St. Joe

has to say about cream separators this week.

Ninety-eight per cent of the world's creameries use De Lavals exclusively.

CREAMERYMEN have better opportunities than other separator users to see which separators are most efficient and durable. That is why they select De Lavals.

More De Lavals are in use on farms than all other makes combined. Time and experience have proved to a vast majority of farmers that no other separator gives as good service as the De Laval.

Each year in the United States and Canada alone, some 40,000 farmers discard inferior separators and replace them with De Lavals. They learn from experience that the so-called cheap separators are wasteful and costly at any price. They would have saved money if they had bought a De Laval in the first place.

If you will bear these facts in mind in selecting a separator, you will realize that the wisest course is to buy a De Laval.

We will be glad to bring a De Laval out to your farm and let you try it out and see for yourself that it does offer you the greatest value for your money. We are willing to prove every claim we make for the De Laval. Just phone us or send a post card and we will see that you get an opportunity to try a De Laval.

TEMPERANCE NOTES

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

LICENSE—HIGH TO HIGHEST.

In Massachusetts the minimum cost of a first class saloon license is $1,000. The maximum is not fixed by law, but there are instances on record where licenses have sold for $7,500 and $10,000. The average price is about $3,500.

How does it work—this license system raised to its highest power? The New York Commercial—certainly not a dry advocate—speaking of the increase of the license fee in the state of New York from $1,200 to $1,500 a year, says:

"It seems plausible to reduce the number of drinking places and raise their status by imposing heavy license fees, but in practice it results in turning over the business to a few brewers who are able to finance the license fees and to drive independent dealers out of business. In some cities in Massachusetts brewers and wholesale dealers control practically all the saloons and hotels and form syndicates to handle the monopoly so given to them by the high license law. It would be easy to form a syndicate in New York city that would pay $10,000 a year for each license taken out. The revenue might be increased by giving such a monopoly, but the liquor business would be run for 'all there was in it,' and social conditions would not be improved. Massachusetts has given high license a fair test and the results are not what its original advocates promised."

TOTAL ABSTINENCE ADVANCE.

Total abstinence is no longer a ridiculed fanaticism. It sits in regal state on the throne of empires and of kingdoms, and in republics sways, in ever-increasing measure, the voting citizenship. It safeguards the soldier, the aviator and the crew of the submarine. It gives a clear brain to the railroad man, the athlete, the autoist and the commercial, industrial and agricultural worker. It says: "The first man to be taken off and the last man to be taken on is the man who drinks."—Anna A. Gordon

USE FOR TOBACCO STEMS.

Now Utilized in Cheap Smoking Mixtures and in Other Ways.

"Economies in the tobacco business are carried to as fine a point as in the other big and successful industries," said a man identified with that line of trade," according to the Washington Star. "Economies are of especial importance in the tobacco business, where so many of the sales are of amounts of only a few cents. Small economies make a gigantic aggregate of saving, and the tobacco manufacturers have carried the efficiency of their plants to such a degree that there is no waste in the sense that any tobacco or any part of a tobacco leaf is not utilized.

"Take the matter of the stem, or the rib of the leaf, in the big cigar factories. There was a time when no use could be found for it. Then some man hit on the idea of grinding the stems to dust for use as an insecticide, and that opened a useful field for what hitherto had been factory waste. Another man took to boiling the stems and using this infusion to saturate leaves and other things that were not tobacco, so that they had the taste and effect of tobacco and were probably sold as tobacco or as adulterants of tobacco.

"The commercial value of tobacco stems is well established today. One of the largest cigarmaking plants in the United States bales the stems and there is a ready market for them, our understanding being that the stems are thoroughly softened by steaming, are then rolled out so that each piece of stem is as flat and thin as a piece of leaf tobacco, and that they are then cut up after the fashion of cut plug for smoking tobacco. They are not sold outright, as plug-cut smoking tobacco, but the treated and manipulated stems are used as a filler, or an adulterant for smoking tobacco of the very cheapest kind. Cheap tobacco suitable for making into pipe tobacco of a very inferior grade may be bought for 5 or 6 cents a pound, but the stems can be bought for half a cent a pound, and when mixed in the proportion of about half and half with this cheap tobacco the product can be sold at a very low rate and yet yield a good profit.

"There is no reason why the stem should be thrown away, for the rib of the leaf, after being properly softened, flattened out and cut up, makes a material that smokes well enough and gives satisfaction to the injudicious or the extra-economical smoker. All the 'floor-waste' of a cigar factory, the dust and extremely fine bits of filler and leaf that fall away from the benches, is swept up, and it is this material which largely enters into the making of the tobacco insecticides. And this is probably as satisfactory and effective for the purpose as any other could be; besides, the economy is passed along to the ultimate consumer with a reasonable profit to the dealer. All the bits of filler and fragments of binder and wrapper that do not find their way to the floors of the factory are collected and used in cheap smoking material, either as pipe tobacco of about third grade or as short filling in the cheapest cigars."

TO SILVER MIRRORS.

You can make a mirror from common glass. The process of silvering a mirror is to coat the glass with an amalgam. For this purpose a large, perfectly flat stone table is provided; upon it is evenly spread a sheet of tinfoil without a crack or flaw; this is covered uniformly to the depth of one-eighth of an inch with clean mercury. The plate of glass, perfectly cleansed from all grease and impurity, is floated onto the mercury carefully, so as to exclude all air bubbles. It is then pressed down by loading it with weights, in order to press out all the mercury which remains fluid, which is received in a gutter around the stone. After about 24 hours it is raised gently upon its edge, and in a few weeks is ready to frame. It is desirable to have the lower end of the glass, from which the mercury was drained, at the bottom of the frame.

The following is a good method of silvering a mirror. Pour three drachms of quicksilver to the square foot of foil. Rub smartly with a piece of buckskin until the foil becomes brilliant. Lay the glass upon a table, face downwards, place the foil upon the back, lay a sheet of paper over the foil, and place on it a block of wood or a piece of marble with a perfectly flat surface; put upon it enough weight to press it down tight, and let it remain in that position for a few hours. The foil will adhere to the glass.

RECIPES.

Cleaning Hints—Clean satin slippers of any color with denatured alcohol. Straw hats may be cleaned with a piece of velvet dipped in alcohol. Rub a piece of crinoline over suede or velvet shoes, purses, etc.

When washing or cleaning dresses, whether woolen or cotton, hang on a coat hanger on the clothes line, and the garment will retain its shape and will also be easier to iron. Rub cornmeal in panama hats to clean them

Baking Hint.—Milk taken out of the refrigerator or window box is too cold for baking. Try warming it a little and see if the results are not better.

Cream Soup.—Slice of white bread cut in dice; fry light brown in butter so it is crisp but not greasy; put in bowl and pour two cups of boiling water in the pan; add a little salt and nutmeg on bread, then pour water on the bread, add a little cream.

Celery Salt.—Take all the best leaves of celery, wash, dry near fire until crisp, then take a strong round bottle and roll it until it is fine as powder. Put one teaspoon of powder to a cup of salt. It is better than what you buy and has a fine flavor. I save all the leaves that are good and when celery is hard to get you have your powder to flavor anything you would use celery for. Saves many a dime.

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE.

When the ceiling above the gas jet has become darkened from heat or smoke, apply a layer of starch and water with a piece of flannel. Let it dry and then brush off lightly with a brush. No mark will remain.

If you wish to restore the original "cream" or "ecru" color to curtains that have become white from washing, add a little strained coffee or tea to the starch; this will not give them the "yellow" look that is obtained from using yellow ochre.

No matter how much dripping is used, fish when being fried is very apt to stick to the pan bottom. To prevent this, before using your pan put a tablespoonful of dry salt into it, rub well all over with grease-proof paper and it will be found a thorough success.

To keep suet, take out any skin there may be and then put the suet in a saucepan and place it on a warm, but not hot fire and let it melt gradually. When quite melted pour it into a pan of cold water. When quite hard wipe it dry, wrap it in white paper, and when wanted for use it may be rubbed on a grater.

NEEDLEWORK.

A new method of decorating a square satin cushion or sachet is to procure a small fluffy-haired doll or a "kewpie," drape it in chiffon the color of the cushion in lieu of clothing and manufacture a pair of butterfly wings out of chiffon edged with wire wrapped in satin to hold them out on either side, and then lay the doll from corner to corner in the center of the cushion.

Creamed Potatoes.

There are several different ways in which creamed potatoes may be prepared. (1) Freshly boiled or cold boiled potatoes may be cut into small cubes and served heated in cream sauce. (2) Wash, pare, and cut potatoes into small cubes. Put into frying pan with a few slices of onion cut up very fine, and parboil 10 minutes. Pour off water. Add one tablespoon butter, seasoning of salt and pepper, and milk enough to cover. Cook for 15 or 20 minutes, or until the potatoes are well done and the sauce thick and creamy. It is necessary to stir the potatoes frequently to prevent sticking. The starch in the potatoes thickens the sauce.

Pan Fried or Sauted Potatoes.

Slice cold boiled potatoes in quarter-inch pieces; season with salt and pepper, and brown on both sides in well-greased frying pan.

THE A B C'S OF PLANT CULTURE IN POTS.

One of the most important items to be considered in the culture of plants in pots is that of drainage. Many a flower-loving woman loses her plants because of neglect in this respect. Surplus water settles to the bottom of the vessel in which the plants are placed, and as there is no way of escape provided for it it accumulates until there is enough to make the soil almost like mud.

Presently there is souring of the soil because of too much moisture, and in a short time the roots of the plant become diseased, and that is the beginning of the end. Every pot larger than four inches across should be well drained. Put at least an inch of broken crockery, brick, or something else that will not decay readily into the bottom of the pot, and then add the soil.

Drainage is not a whim, as so many persons seem to think. There is a scientific idea back of it and those who ignore the principle underlying it need not expect to have healthy plants. The soil in which the roots grow must be kept moist at all times, but never wet, and in order to obtain this condition it is absolutely necessary that an oversupply of water must be got rid of and this can only be done by providing perfect drainage.

Good soil is another item of great importance. You cannot grow fine plants in poor soil, nor can you grow them well in a heavy one. The soil must be light and mellow, and contain a sufficient amount of plant food to keep the plants going steadily ahead. Without it you will have weak and sickly plants which will give you few if any flowers.

Therefore take pains to have a soil that is full of nutriment, and make sure that it has sufficient lightness to allow the plants to send their tender roots through it in all directions. Only strong rooted plants, like roses, take kindly to a soil containing clay. If you make use of garden loam as a basis for plant soil mix enough sharp, coarse sand into it to make it friable.

A good test of its quality, so far as lightness is concerned is this: Squeeze a handful of it together. Then relax your grip on it. If it falls apart readily it will be safe to make use of it, but if it holds together in a compact mass a little more sand should be added.

THE MISUNDERSTOOD CUCUMBER.

According to Sherman (Food Products, p 325), the pared cucumber is 95.4 per cent water—fine nature distilled water, of course. That leaves but 4.6 per cent of solid matter to be indigestible or nondigestible. Of this 3.1 per cent is good, bulky cellulose, a type of food of digestive help which all the world is seeking when it eats the drier and stiffer bran.

If, secondly, we wish further to mitigate the idea that cucumber is an arch digestive foe, notice that fresh cucumbers have the high basic coefficient 45.5. That means that people who have a too acid stomach, or any one of the many actual diseases due to what is called "acidosis," might profitably have eaten fresh cucumber, although one has to be careful with what one eats or it seems indigestible.

And do you believe acidosis is something rare? As for me, I do not know of any sort of physical misbehavior that we hear so much about. I turn to the New York Medical Journal for Feb. 26, and there is an editorial on "The Diagnosis of Acidosis." And then I turn to the popular writers on disease who kindly avoid giving two technical words to each line. One of these told the other day how he matched with another of the same profession in tests of endurance winning every test.

Although there are delicious ways of cooking cucumber and adding materials of much food value to it, as a tonic eat it well freshened under running water and cool, just peeled, without any addition. Never peel a cucumber without washing it and your hands.

CITY BOYS PORK CHAMPS.

Make Better Records Than Lot of Their Country Brothers.

Who said city boys couldn't raise hogs?

"Strange to say, some of the best records made in the recent boys' baby pork contest were made by boys who lived in the city and who virtually had 'never seen a pig,'" says E. C. Bishop of Ames, state leader of the boys' and girls' club work. "Their knowledge of feeding they gained solely from instructions sent them by the extension department."

One city reared porker, raised by Paul Oursler of Pottawattamie, made remarkable gains solely on a diet of kitchen waste, sour milk and corn. "Hercules," as Paul called his pig, in 141 days increased in weight from 100 lbs. to 332 lbs. with an average daily gain of 1.64 lbs. at a cost of 3.8 cents per lb.

"The contest put 'farm' into the heads of most of the city boys," says Mr. Bishop, "and most of them put the money which they got from selling their pig into the bank as a college fund to take them to Ames, where they might learn agriculture and then start farming."

As a man grows thinner with age his wife usually grows fatter.

Bliss comes with the honeymoon; after that comes the blister.

BREEDING STOCK "ALL IN ALL."

Upon Breeders Depends the Kind of Chicks Raised This Year.

Whether a farmer will raise better poultry this year than he did last will depend primarily, upon the kind of stock that is used for breeding. Every baby chick is entitled to be well born. Unless its parents are strong, vigorous, hardy and resistant to disease, a "poor hatch" and weak, puny chicks will result, say the poultrymen at Iowa State college.

The use of low vitality breeders is the most frequent cause of poor incubating success and high death rate in brooding. Chicks hatched from poor breeding stock never reach the size of well bred individuals. The pullets do not begin laying until the following spring and then hardly enough to pay for their feed.

If the flock is to be improved, only those birds that show size, vigor and egg producing qualities should be used as breeders. Twenty-five good females in a roomy pen with a couple of good males will furnish eggs for incubation that will produce chicks worth while, ones that will grow into big fellows worth a good price on the market. The pullets from such mating mature rapidly and are in condition to "lay the winter eggs."

SOME SOIL FERTILITY FACTS.

Soils Department, Iowa State College.

Phosphorus should be applied to Iowa soils that are short of this plant food. Applying it to a soil that does not need it is, however, a poor investment. Directions for determining whether a soil needs this element may be had from the soils department at Ames.

Although soils may be loaded with plant food, it is not valuable unless available to growing crops. Draining, adding organic mater and thorough cultivation will make plant food available.

Soil bacteria, the same as live stock, require a good home. Liming, draining and adding organic matter will furnish it.

Complete commercial fertilizer supplies three elements of plant food, nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium. It is not likely that any Iowa soil lacks all three. Study your soil and its needs before investing your money in complete fertilizers. It is wasteful to buy elements the soil doesn't need.

DON'T RUB IT—SPRINKLE IT.

Do not try to clean a dusty auto reflector by rubbing it with a cloth. No matter how soft it is, it will scratch the reflector, says the extension engineers at Ames. It is best to remove the dust with a stream of water.

Discolored reflectors can best be polished by rubbing with a piece of clean chamois, which has been moistened with alcohol and sprinkled with jeweler's rouge or crocus. Place a small piece of cotton or waste inside the chamois. Apply a light pressure and rub with a rotary motion to prevent scratching. Badly discolored reflectors should be sent to the manufacturer or a reliable silver plater to be resilvered.

MASSIVE TROPICAL SCENE CONSTRUCTED FOR "THE ISLAND OF SURPRISE.

Technical Director, Charles Chapman, of the Vitagraph Company, has one of the largest and most beautiful tropical scenes ever staged. This scene, which represents a cave with three compartments and a rocky approach, looks like a transplanted section from one of the South Sea Islands. It was built for the picturization of Cyrus Townsend Braly's "The Island of Surprise."

Mr. Chapman and a corps of thirty workmen including carpenters, and expert workers in burlap and plaster of paris modeling, were engaged for four weeks on the construction of this mammoth set which is forty feet high, one hundred feet wide and three hundred feet long. The burlap and plaster of paris was used in the construction of the sides and entrance of the cave and to reproduce huge rocks that weigh several tons apiece. Tropical plants, clinging vines, grass, shrubbery trees that mask in the opening of the cave and lend atmosphere to the scene, were brought from nearby woods and florists. Special boats were hired that made trips after sea plants, while automobile trucks were continually running to and from the beach transporting seaweed, sand and other material necessary to give the scene the realism demanded. In the construction of the rocky approach to the cave, huge boulders had to be built to rest on a super-structure strong enough to stage a battle between the three Island castaways in the Brady story and a band of two hundred cannibals that were intent on their capture. In the construction of these boulders alone, a hundred and seventy-five barrels of plaster of paris were used.

The entire scene was first modeled in clay, then cast in plaster of paris, put up in pieces and joined together on a wooden frame. It took two tons of clay to fashion the original model. Mr. Chapman estimates the entire scene weighs in the neighborhood of twenty-seven tons and besides being the largest of its kind ever staged, represents his inception of what kind of scenes will be required as backgrounds for all feature pictures in the near future.

FRANK CAMPEAU — A GENIAL VILLAIN.

"When I looked around at that painted scenery," remarked Frank Campeau, in regard to the Rio Grandic decorations prevailing at the Blackstone, "I missed the real hills and the good outdoors of the motion picture."

Mr. Campeau is that sterling player to be remembered from the Fine Arts success, "Jordan is a Hard Road," where he enjoyed the happiness of being a reformed bandit.

His present occupation as Ben Hecht, the orderly, permits him only to be mean. As to being mean, he says for the same effect one must do it much more lightly for the movies than for the stage. "The camera is quick to register, and the player has to beware of overacting. If he stormed about, gesticulated as he does on the stage, he would be a dreadful sight on the screen."

Though Mr. Campeau is at present engaged in the legitimate and has been in only one picture, with him the picture if not the thing, is a very important one, and he is full of sage talk about it. He expects to do more pictures this summer. "Whispering Smith" has been suggested in this connection, "Jim Bludsoe," and others of that kind.

"There'll always be western pictures," averred he. "People don't get tired of good ones, and when the war is over they'll fairly eat 'em up in Europe. Russia especially can never get enough riding pictures."

EDWARD EARLE "STUNG."

To get the atmosphere of the western country for the Edison feature, "Ranson's Folly," Director Ridgley had to take the principals, Edward Earle, Mabel Trunnelle, and Marc MacDermott, and company away into the woods near the Catskill mountains. It has been overlooked that Edward Earle would have to make a complete change of costume during the scenes. The automobiles afforded no dressing rooms, so Earle took to the woods. The Director was getting impatient when an eerie yell came from the depth of the shrubbery and Earle, swinging his arms, dashed full tilt into the clearing, garbed only in his underwear. Everybody—except the women who ran off in another direction, startled—looked for the wild animal, but instead James Harris was nearly knocked over by the highly excited Earle who shouted "Get 'em off! Get 'em off." They doubted the man's sanity, until they saw that he was covered with tiny black specks—mosquitoes, on the job with all horsepower pumps working and very much attached to the favorite. John Sturgeon, who, it seems, should have been named "surgeon," heroically grabbed a "smoke pot," and like an incense bearer waved it around Earle until the pesky critters gave up and flew away. It may be noticed that the hero of this tale does practically no sitting in the feature named, though he does smile wonderously well in it, at times.

It was a bright cold day in November. The air was crisp and pure; the leaves in their bright autumn colors were scattered beneath the trees that bordered the walk leading to the old fashioned brown house, before which a young girl was standing. Hers was not what you could call a sad face, yet there was not hint of frivolity about it. It was the earnest expression of the blue eyes, the firm lines of the chin and the full red lips, that made the picture so complete. She paused and looked out over the yard, as if in meditation.

"Richard is at the office," she thought, "perhaps if I go to the park I will miss seeing him, and he will wonder at my non-appearance, after telling him that I would be here."

As the thoughts formed themselves in her busy mind, she retraced her steps to the house, opened the hall door, and went in.

Millicent Winston was a girl of about nineteen years of age; her life had been tempered with an equal share of sunshine and rain. Her father was a man of great mental ability, but physically weak. Unable to work at his office in Banghills block, after a severe siege of typhoid; he had gone west to recuperate, hoping to return well and strong.

The girl was left at home with her mother, and only too gladly determined to put her shoulder to the wheel and work. Ambition, love of home ties, and the feeling of strength within herself, these things helped her on and in spite of her mother's misgivings, Millicent took her father's place, in the office of Mr. Whitehood in Banghill's Block.

It was with a gently dignity that she responded to the respectful "Good morning" of those with whom she came in contact, in her business life, as at half past seven each morning, she unlocked her father's desk, and took his accustomed place. He was an accountant, having the journals and ledgers, of two business firms to look after, besides figuring miscellaneous items. His accuracy had been perfect.

Mr. Whitehood was a young man of perhaps twenty-eight years of age. He had studied to be a lawyer, but realizing at the proper time, that his talents were not of the kind necessary for him to possess in order to be a successful legal attorney, so he gave it up to become a member of the greatest mercantile firm of which his father was president.

Each morning as Millicent entered he glanced up at her politely, said "good morning," and went on with his work.

Things went on in this way, until one day, when a heavy rain came up just before the noon hour, Millicent was unprepared for bad weather and was dressed in a dark blue serge suit, with white shirt waist. She had neither rain-proof coat nor rubbers with her nor did she have an umbrella.

Mr. Whitehood took in her plight at at glance.

"Miss Winston," he said, "Take my umbrella and rain-proof coat; you will be drenched if you do not."

She did so and thanked him very kindly.

That was the beginning of a great friendship, a friendship that soon ripened from admiration into something more. Millicent was in love and she knew it. Richard had promised to call for her that evening, and together they were to walk in the park.

Millicent's father had resumed his work, so she was now at home. Thinking the crisp air would do her good she had half decided to walk to the park alone and join him there. After second thought, she decided to wait. At five-thirty he called for her, and together they went across the leaf-strewn lawn.

"Autumn is my favorite season," she said. "It seems so royal, so rich, and yet it makes me so thoughtful. Think of the wonderful beauty of it all, how all things are provided for, how the birds fly to the south-land, and creatures bury themselves for the winter."

Richard touched her arm softly.

"Millicent you ought to have been a minister," he said gently, "or better still, a philosopher."

"Or an accountant," said Millicent laughing.

"No, an accountant's wife," said Richard. "Millicent, I love you, surely you have known it; the very air seems to breathe it. Will you be my wife?"

The wind whistled through the trees, the leaves rustled softly and Millicent was filled with joy as she gave him her answer.

SOFT COAL FIRING POINTERS.

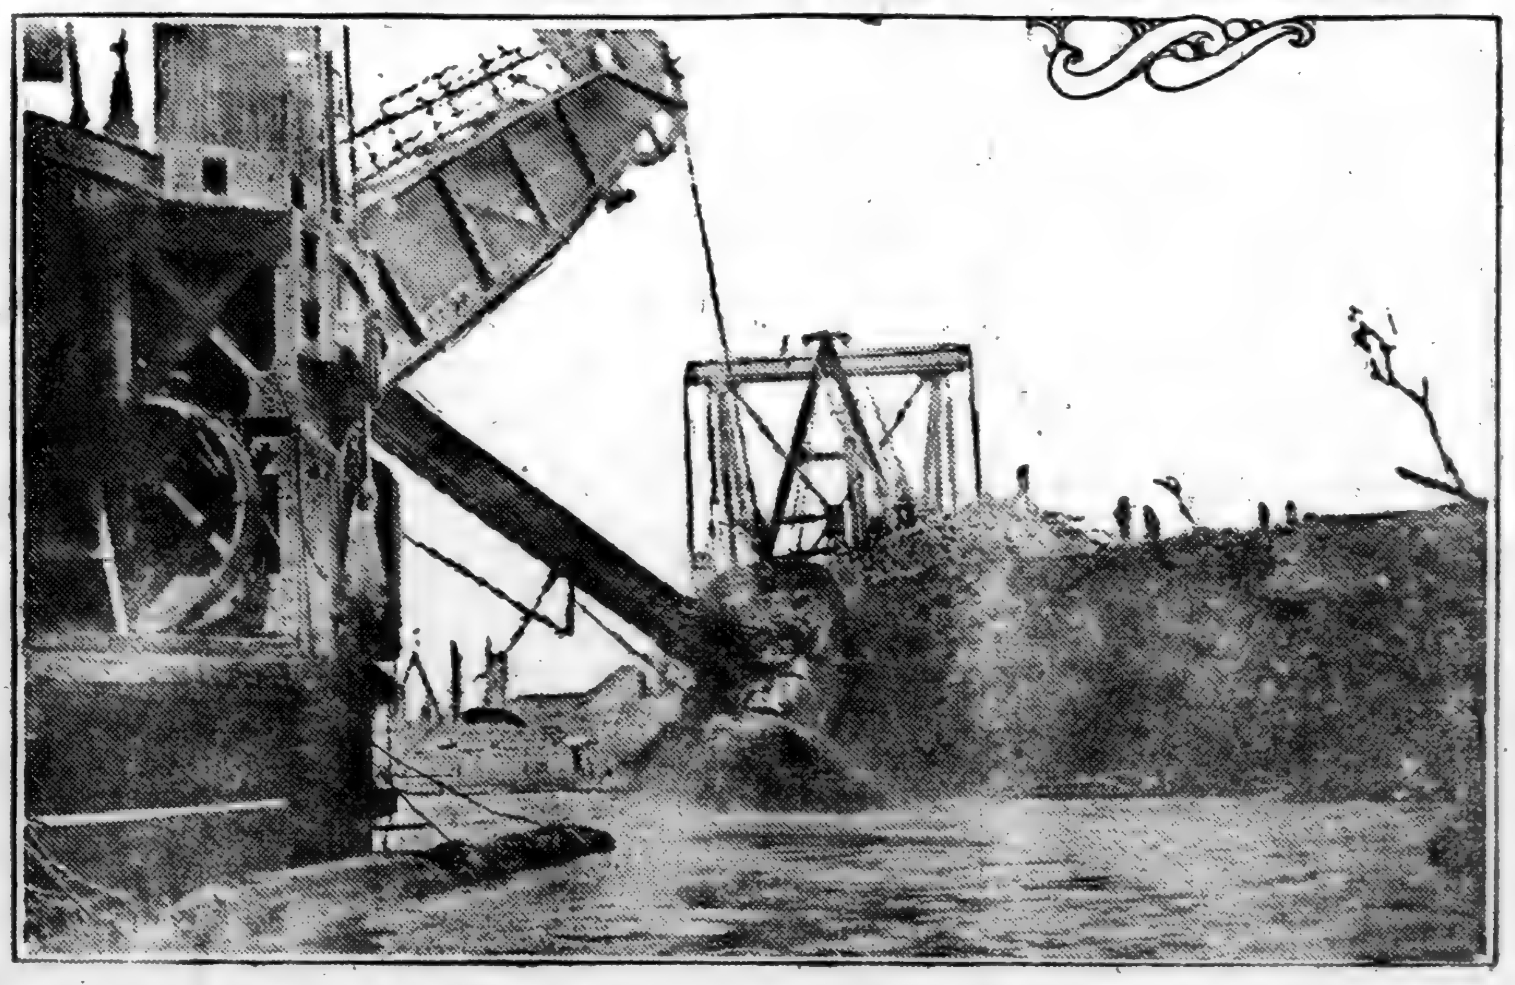
When firing a furnace with soft coal, do not spread the fresh coal entirely over the fuel bed.

Place the fresh coal at one side, or, better, in front, just inside the firing door. The gases will then be consumed in traveling over the hot coals before the go up the chimney, thus preventing smoke and saving fuel.

After fixing the fire for the night do not close the furnace door immediately. Throw the drafts open for five to fifteen minutes and, allow the gases to pass off freely and be burned.

Then close the furnace for the night. This warms the house before retiring, prevents possible escape of gas and the coked fuel will keep the fire throughout the night. These and other points on furnace installation are covered in the course for firemen offered by the engineering extension department at Iowa State college.

GIANT STEAM SHOVEL FIGHTS CANAL SLIDE



This gigantic steam shovel is working night and day to open up the Panama canal. It takes out 14,000 wagon loads of dirt a day.

Dictates of Fashion

Overcollars of white silk or dove gray broadcloth are seen in some of the many serge suits.

"Checks, but never such checks as these," says one dealer, in commenting on the spring styles.

White serge dresses have insertions of white chiffon with narrow bands of the serge applied to the chiffon.

You may combine serge and satin, broadcloth and velvet, plain and plaid serge and checked and plain taffeta.

A handsome evening gown represented a clever combination of black chiffon and dark green spangled net. The entire bodice and shoulder straps—there were no sleeves—were made of the spangled net. The skirt was of draped chiffon, beneath which appeared bands of the spangles.

PICTURESQUE FROCK OF TURQUOISE BLUE SATIN.

This is the day of the picturesque in dress and the modes of the spring tend toward more elaborate effects than one has been accustomed to during the last few seasons. In fact, some of the new French models show such excessive width and such elaboration of trimming that one wonders whether they will be adopted by the American woman. However, it is quite possible to modify them to suit the conservative taste of many who do not care to dress in the most extreme fashion, and at the same time in no way detract from their original charm.

The little frock shown is delightfully feminine in its quaintness and might almost have been worn by a famous belle of the days of 1860. Its old time look proclaims it as the newest mode with its many tiered skirt, its pointed basque, and its lace ruffles. It is developed in an exquisite shade of turquoise blue satin, a trifle darker in shade on the under side. This contrast is cleverly shown by turning back a narrow hem on the outer side of each ruffle.

Despite the rumor that skirts are to be slightly longer, many still show extreme brevity, and this model adheres to fashion's laws in shortness and width at the sides.

The pointed bodice is seamed in a fashion almost forgotten, while the round decolettage with dropped shoulder line and double lace ruffles is one of the marked features of the modes of 1916.

Small bows of black velvet ribbon add the finishing touch of coquetry to this exceedingly dainty and attractive model.

Distinctive simplicity is the keynote of a handsome gown of black tulle. Several layers of tulle form the extremely full skirt which has an undulating band of dull gold ribbon for trimming. The bodice of tulle is cut in one with three-quarter sleeves, which flare widely just below the elbows, and is embroidered in beads, showing shades of blue and gold with black beads for contrast.

CEREALS, COOKED AND UNCOOKED.

It is only uncooked foods that tell no lies about their chemical and actual food values. After they have passed through the hands of the cook they may vary, measured by the one pretty certain standard we have, the caloric, imeasurably.

The man who wishes to know instinctively that he has reasonable powers of resistance, without constantly applying physical tests, must know somewhere nearly what stores he has laid in. He must know what his cook has done to food or he may be much deceived in his reckonings.

Uncooked oatmeal averages 1,860 calories to the pound. Boiled oatmeal, according to Atwater, yields 285, yet people often count their portion of oatmeal at the former value, since by now there are scores and scores of people who do keep books on the matter of eating. An oatmeal gruel averages only 155 calories, and an oatmeal water only seventy calories. Please remember this when you think you are supplying the invalid with fuel enough to raise his powers to walking strength.

Raw rice averages 1,630 calories per pound uncooked. Boiled, it averages 525. It seems almost curious in contrast to this that potatoes, both white and sweet, have their calorie value raise in cooking. See why?

Breakfast Oatmeal.

One cup of oatmeal, plus two or three cups of water, started with both cold, brought to boil and covered tight over a tiny fire will have practically all the water at the end, that is, be diluted in food value two or three times. With much fire evaporation will be more or less great.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

Fill the foot of a soft sock with hot salt, then tie a knot in the sock leg; apply to aching ear or tooth and almost immediate relief will be the result.

Take moderate daily exercise, such exercise will briskly circulate the blood without fatiguing the body, and always preserve serenity and cheerfulness.

A patent has recently been taken out by an Alabama man for a guard to put on baby's thumb to prevent it from finding its way to the mouth.

Be sure that every bit of powder and rouge is removed before you retire at night. Take it off with cold cream first and then wash your face well with soap and water. But it is much better to trust to nature instead of to art for your complexion.

The lungs chiefly influence beauty by the efficiency with which they purify the blood, and their influence is profound. Let them therefore be given the opportunity of doing their work well. Do not compress them with tight clothing. Give them pure air. Keep the bedroom windows open day and night.

At night, before retiring, when the hands have been well washed and dried, rub in a fair quantity of a good cold cream or camphorated ice. Then powder them lightly with a fine talcum and slip on loose old gloves reserved for this purpose. This will whiten the hands and keep them soft and smooth.

One should not eat when tired, and eat lightly if suffering from any great emotion. Eat slowly always, and rest for half an hour after each meal. A woman who eats quickly or who hurries to pleasure or work immediately after a meal will almost invariably suffer from flushings and red features sooner or later.

England has nearly 100,000 women munition workers.

All of Montana's county school superintendents are women.

Women are acting as street cleaners in southern Germany.

Women members of the Maccabees number more than 200,000.

Missouri has nearly 4,000 women workers who are members of unions.

Typewriter girls are found even among the kimono clad women of Japan.

There are today probably 7,000 men in the United States practicing medicine.

Barnard college girls have taken up jiu jitsu, the ancient sport and self-defense used in Japan.

It has been asserted that 99 women in 100 don't know how to put on their hats.

The queen of Sweden has visited the German empress three times since the outbreak of the war.

Four young women were among the 174 candidates who took examinations for the bar in New Jersey recently.

Over a thousand girls have been employed to make shells at the Eddystone plant of the Baldwin Locomotive works.

Queen Eléonore of Bulgaria has spent her entire fortune in relief work for the subjects of her husband, and is now penniless.

Miss Hoyl Skinner of Georgia has been appointed by the department of agriculture to demonstrate farming to women of the south.

Sophie L. Burke of Detroit has given $35,000 for the establishment of a home for the reclamation of children with criminal tendencies.

Mrs. Annie McLean Fowler, who died in St. Louis recently, was the first woman bank president in the United States, having been president of the First National bank at Mount Pleasant, Tex., for over twenty years.

TWO COLORADO DREAMERS.

C. Warman Won Fame and John A. Hill Made His Million.

In the mountains of Colorado some thirty years ago a freight train waited on a siding for another train to come and pass, and as it waited the locomotive engineer leaned out of his cab window gazing at the far off mountain tops and dreaming. The fireman sat upon the tender gazing into the purple haze and he too was dreaming.

"What you dreaming about, John?" asked the fireman.

"I'm dreaming that I'm going to have a million dollars some day; and what's your dream, Cy?"

"That I'll write a real book some day and have it printed," answered the fireman.

Cy Warman, the fireman of the locomotive, became a poet and author, a writer of many books and a singer of songs that touched the hearts of a whole continent, the Kansas City Star says. He died two years ago.

His love for pure, sweet and beautiful things was shown in the last lines of his song, "Sweet Marie," which he wrote as a marriage proposal to the woman he loved and which the whole world sang for a time.

Not the sunlight in your hair, sweet
  Marie,
Not because your face is fair, love to see;
But your soul so pure and sweet
Makes my happiness complete,
Makes me falter at your feet, sweet
  Marie.

John A. Hill, the engineer, made his million as founder and publisher of the trade papers: Power, the American Machinist, Locomotive Engineer, Engineering and Mining Journal, Engineering News and the Coal Age. He put up a great building in New York and was one of America's captains of industry. He died the other day.

The dreams of both came true. Each saw the fulfillment of his wish. Each served in his own way the needs of his age.

A Friend in Need.

When Glando Gargle is used for a cold in the head it is surprising to see how quickly the clogged nostrils are opened. Adenoids are caused by a neglected cold. If the mucus which forms is allowed to remain in the nostrils, a diseased condition will result, which causes chronic catarrh and adenoids. Glando Gargle was prepared to meet these special needs. Equally effective for sore mouth or sore throat. Price 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

Save Your Waste Paper.

The shortage in paper is a serious proposition that may become much more serious during the next year Even now it is next to impossible to place orders for future delivery of various grades of paper and the men in the business declare that if the war continues there is no certainty of how long they can supply the great demand for paper in this country. The newspapers of this nation use many hundred cars of print paper each day and the furnishing of this supply is one that keeps many mills running day and night. For a score of years we have all wasted paper because it was cheap, but the time is here when everybody should aid in saving paper. Save your old papers and magazines. You will be surprised at the price you will receive from your waste paper about the house. The News will pay you 20c. per 100 pounds delivered at our office.

FARM OPPORTUNITY BETTER THAN EVER

City Dwellers Struggle for Their Meager Comforts.

GOOD FINANCIAL PROSPECT

Wisconsin Official Shows Why Young Men and Women Should Stay in Country and Help Make the Nation's Real Wealth.

(By MATTHEW S. DUDGEON of Wisconsin Free Library Commission.)

TEN years ago—twenty years ago—all the alert, energetic farm boys were leaving the farm for the city. They did this because they wanted to make money, because they wanted to see life. If they stayed on the farm, they were not only sure to be lonely and to be in unattractive surroundings, but they were sure to be poor. But times have changed.

Today, if you go through a fairly prosperous farming community, you will find the telephone in nearly every farmhouse and a daily delivery of mail bringing the daily newspapers to every door. You will find many farmhouses better fitted up with conveniences and comforts than are the homes of the average city laborer. Because there are better roads and better horses and better buggies and more automobiles, you will find that the farmer and his family are no longer imprisoned in the farmhouse, but move about and have as much social life and as great an opportunity to meet each other as do the city man and his family. Many a farm boy who is ten miles in the country, with his automobile, can and frequently does, reach town in less time than it takes the average man in the big city to reach his business from his city or suburban home. The boy who stays on the farm need no longer look ahead to a lonesome, cheerless existence.

Prices Going Higher.

Never before has the American farm boy had so promising a financial prospect as he has at the present time. Profits are surer than they ever were and they bid fair to increase. Prices are high and they are going higher. American consumers are demanding more and better farm products and stand ready to pay better prices. They are going more directly to the farm for what they want and the farmer is getting a bigger share of what they pay. The war and the disturbances that have grown out of it have interrupted, if they have not permanently cut off, the channels of trade for foreign farm products, so that the American farmer is likely in the future to have open to him the markets of the world as they never before have been.

Skill and experience in handling soils, in rotating crops, in selecting seeds, and in planting and tending, is rendering a total failure of any crop unusual and unlikely. But as up-to-date farming is now carried on, the failure of a single crop is no longer the disaster which it formerly was. No one is now a one-crop farmer. Today's successful farmer has not only a variety of crops which constitutes reserve resources when the yield or the price of a single crop fails him, but he now gets revenues from a score of sources, from his corn and oats and wheat and potatoes as of old, but also from his truck garden, from his orchard and small fruit, from his fat hogs and cattle, from his purebred stock animals sold at fancy prices, from his dairy products, and even from his poultry.

Big Financial Returns.

In fact, the farmer who formerly was considered a plodder working at one thing, with one idea and one resource, is now getting to be a resourceful business man, an administrator, an alert student of the market and finance, a well-read professional man who understands the science of his profession.

The boy who stays on the farm to become a successful farmer is entering into an occupation where brains, intelligence and study, energy and alertness are getting as large financial returns as they are in any human activity. Moreover, he is entering into an occupation where working and living conditions are more universally attractive and healthful than are the surroundings of any group of workers in the world. What more can he hope for if he goes to the city?

MADE FORTUNE ON PEANUTS

A week or two ago a man died in Virginia who was called the "Peanut King." He had made a pretty good sized fortune buying the peanut crop in his vicinity, storing it until the market was favorable and then selling it. Not only had he made a fortune himself, but the farmers of that vicinity had always been provided with a market at fair prices and the dealers had always known where to go to purchase peanuts. In other words, he had earned his money, not because he was a producer, but because he had the ability to bring the producer and the consumer together.

A Cure for the Blues.

Have you ever met with the man or woman who is a victim of the blues? They feel that fate is against them. They worry and stew about imaginary ills until life becomes a burden.

Many a man has made a business failure and given up in dispair all because he had the blues.

We should not consider such conditions lightly, for there is a deep secret underlying every case of the blues.

The person whose physical condition is normal, is optemistic; adversities only make them more cautious and more determined to succeed.

If the liver is not acting properly the system becomes full of poisonous accumulations, the kidneys and the stomach and intestinal glands become suggish and a general debilitateed and nervous condition exists.

The blood becomes impure, the circulation sluggish and the brain clouded.

GLANDO is the best remedy for the blues. It is a general gland tonic that starts up the glandular action, drives off the accumulated poisons and builds up the system. A 50 cent package contains three seperate treatments, each treatment having a specific part to perform in effecting a cure.

AT LESS AND TAKE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Take a glass of Salts before breakfast if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you.

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys; to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing.

The Chief - - Legatee

A Story of Love by Anna Katherine Green

SYNOPSIS.

Chapters I to III—A few hours after marriage the wife of Roger J. Sansom is missing from the hotel where they have just registered. A detective, Mr Gerrage, is called into the case. The bride, formerly Miss Georgian Hazen, becomes alarmed over something which happened while passing down the aisle from the altar.

While standing at the hotel desk with the groom the woman disappears A man with a twisted face was seen whispering to the bride at the reception. Evidently flight was meditated after that meeting.

The bell boy noted peculiarities about the woman and was the only one who noticed her slip away. The detective claims the maid was a substitute for the wife, and rode from the house to the hotel while the wife left by the basement door in the maid's clothes.

Chapters IV to V—The woman who left by the basement door was traced to a meeting with the man with a broken jaw. Ransom receives a note from his wife who claims to have found a long lost twin sister, supposed to have been dead. The twin is of unbalanced mind and stone deaf. Ransom meets the man with the broken jaw and who declares himself to be Mrs. Ransom's brother, who was in need of money.

Chapters VI to VII—Ransom interviews his wife's lawyer, who insists that she has a twin sister. When leaving the office the office boy gives him his wife's address.

Ransom gies to Stitford, Conn., and finds the hotel where his wife has secured rooms. He visits the cemetery and finds a man about to efface from the tombstone the record of the death of the twin sister, which was supposed to have occurred years previously. He also finds the announcement of the death of the man with whom he had recently talked, who claimed to be his wife's brother.

Chapters IX and X—Ransom learns that his wife, her sister, and the lawyer, are coming to the inn.

The sister who had left the coach for a walk appears later and he is surprised at the resemblance to his wife. He learns that his wife has had the lawyer draw her will.

Chapters XI to XIII—The inmates of the hotel were aroused by a piercing cry in the night. The sister declared that Ransom's wife had gone to the waterfall to destroy her life.

The mill stream never gave up its dead. A letter was found from Mrs. Ransom confirming the fact that she had tired of life. Some doubt was expressed by the detective.

Chapters XIV and XV—After a full investigation of the house and grounds by both Ransom and the lawyer, come to the conclusion that the woman remaining in the hotel and known as Anitra was Ransom's wife.

Chapter XV to XVIII—Ransom is convinced, after following several clues, that he was mistaken and that his wife had perished.

The sister endeavors to win Ransom's love, but is repulsed.

Chapters XIX to XXI.—The sister tells her story to Ransom, but fails to win him from the memory of his wife. His wife's brother appears who believes that Ransom's wife is masquerading as her twin sister, but is baffled by her actions.

CHAPTER. XXI TO XXIII—The writer declares that his interest is because of money matters and a test to decide the identity of the woman was agreed upon.

CHAPTERS XXIII TO XXV—The brother declares that his sister is dead, but decides to go into the Devil's Cauldron to prove it. Coming back with his sister's bag he again declares her dead.

"Then you forget my money," suggested Georgian. "Can you expect mercy from a man who sees a million just within his grasp? I know," she acknowledged, as Hazen lifted that same ungentle hand in haughty protest, "that it was not for himself. I do not think Alfred would disturb a fly for his own comfort, but he would wreck a woman's hopes, a good man's happiness for the Cause. He admitted as much to me, and more, in the interview we held that afternoon at the St. Denis. I had to go to him at once, and I had to employ subterfuge in order to do so," she went on in rapid explanation, as she saw her husband's eye refill with doubt under a remembrance of the shame and anguish of that unhappy afternoon. "I had not the courage to leave you openly at the carriage door. Besides, I hoped to work on Alfred's pity in our interview together, or, if not that, to buy my release and return to you a free woman. But the wound which had changed his face for me had changed and made hard his heart. He had other purposes for me than quiet living, with a man who could have no real interest in the Cause. The money I inherited, the rare and growing beauty which he declared me to have, were too valuable to the brethren for me to hope for any existence in which their interests were not paramount. I might return to you, subject to the same authoritative beck and call which had put me in my present position, or I might leave you at once and forever. No half measures were possible. Was I, a bride, loving and beloved by my husband, to listen to either of these alternatives? I rebelled, and then the thunderbolt fell.

"I was no longer on probation, no longer subject to his will alone. I was a fully affiliated member. That day my name had been sent to the Chief. This meant obedience on my part or a vengeance I felt it impossible to consider. While I lived I need never hope again for freedom without penalty.

"'While I lived'; the words rang in my ears. I did not need to weigh them; I knew that they were words of truth. There is no power on earth so inescapable as that exercised by a secret society, and this one has a terrible safeguard. None but he who keeps the list knows the members. You, Roger, might be one, and I never suspect it, unless you chose to give me the sign. Knowing this, I realized that my life was not worth the purchase if I sought to cross the will of my own brother. Nor yours, either. It was the last thought which held me. While I dutifully listened, my mind was working out the deception which was to release me, and when I left him it was to take the first step in the complicated plot by which I hoped to recover my lost happiness. And I nearly succeeded. You have seen what I have borne, what difficulties I have faced, what discoveries eluded, but this last, this greatest ordeal, was too much. I could not listen unmoved to a description of my own drowned body. I, who had calculated on all, had not calculated on this. The horror overcame me—I forgot—perhaps because God was weary of my many deceptions!"

CHAPTER XXIX.

"There Is One Way."

"HAVE you done?" Hazen was on his feet and, rigid still, but oscillating from side to side, as though his strength did not suffice to hold him quite erect, was surveying them with eyes sunk so deeply in his head that they looked like dying sparks reanimated for an instant by some passing breath.

The half-fainting woman he addressed did not answer. She was looking up at Ransom for the sympathy and pardon he was as yet too dazed to show. Hazen made a move. It was that of physical suffering sternly endured.

"Let me speak," he urged. "I have a question to ask. I must ask it now. Who was the woman who came up from New York with you? There were two of you then."

Without turning her head Georgian replied:

"That was Bella, my maid; the same one who personated me on the afternoon of my wedding."

"That accounts for the coarseness of her neck," Hazen explained with a certain grim humor to the lawyer, who had given a slight start of surprise or humiliation. Then quietly to Georgian:

"Was it she who threw the comb and dropped your bag where my man found it?"

"I threw the comb; threw it from my window before I uttered that loud shriek. It did not go very far; but I had to be satisfied with the fact that it lay in the direction of the waterfall. But it was to Bella I entrusted the flinging of the bag. I gave it to her when she left the coach. I had explained to her long before just what a place she would find herself in when she was set down at the foot of the lane; how she was to make her way in the darkness till she came to where there were no more trees, when she was to strike across the stream, led by the noise of the waterfall. I was very particular in my directions, because I knew the danger she incurred of slipping into the chasm. It was her fear of this and the more than ordinary darkness, I presume, which made her throw the bag hap-hazard."

"I saw the girl," Mr. Harper broke in. "She wore a black skirt like the one you now wear, a black blouse and a red-checked handkerchief knotted about her throat. But the young woman who was seen leaving these parts the next morning had on some kind of a red dress and wore a hat. Bella had thrown away her hat; it was picked up where the coach stopped and afterwards brought here."

"I know. My plans went deep; I foresaw the possibility of her being recognized by her clothes. To guard against this, I had her skirt and blouse made double, the one side black, the other a bright color. She had simply to turn them. The extra hat she carried with her; it was small and easily concealed. Her neckerchief she probably tucked away. I had its mate in my pocket, and when I left my room by the window, as I did the moment after I had locked the two rooms, it was with my hair pulled down and this neckerchief about my shoulders. How did I dare the risk. I wonder now; but it was life, life I was after; life and love; nothing else would have made me so fearless; nothing else would have given me such confidence in myself or lent such speed to my feet, running as I did in the darkness."

"You ran around the house to the lane, and entered it by the turnstile."

"Yes, and so quickly that I had time to splash myself with mud and lose all my natural characteristics before any one came to find me. It was Anitra they met, panting and disheveled, at the head of the lane; Anitra in appearance, Anitra in heart. I did not act a part; I was Anitra; Anitra as I had conceived her. To me she was and is an active, living personality. Whenever I faced you in her character, I thought with her half-educated mind; felt with her half-disciplined heart. I even shut my ears to sounds; I would not hear; half the time I did not. Nor did I fall back into my old ways when I was alone. From the minute Georgian closed her door upon you for the last time, and I darkened my skin in preparation for a permanent assumption of Anitra's individuality, I became the imaginary twin, in thought, feeling, and action. It was my only safeguard. Alas! had I only gone one step further and made myself really deaf!"

The cry was bitterness itself, but it passed unheeded. Mr. Ransom could not speak and Hazen had other cares in mind.

"Where is this woman Bella now?" he asked.

Georgian was too absorbed or too unwilling, to answer.

He repeated the question, this time with an authority she could not resist. Rising slowly, she faced him for one impressive moment.

"My God!" came from her lips in startled surprise. "How pale you are! Sit down or you will fall."

He shook his head impatiently.

"It's nothing. Answer my question. Where is this Bella now?"

"I don't know. She is beyond my reach—and yours. I told her to lose herself. I think she is clever enough to do so. The money I paid her was worth a few years spent in obscurity."

The spark lighting his eye brightened into baleful flame, but she met it calmly. An indomitable spirit confronted one equally indomitable, and his was the first to succumb. Turning from her, Hazen took out pencil and paper from his pocket, and, crossing to the window with that same peculiar and oscillating motion of which he seemed unconscious, or which he found it impossible to subdue, he wrote a line, folded it, and before even Harper was aware of his purpose threw up the sash and flung it out, uttering a quick, sharp whistle as he did so.

"What's that you're up to?" shouted the lawyer, rushing to the window and peering over the other's shoulder into the open space below, from which a man was just disappearing.

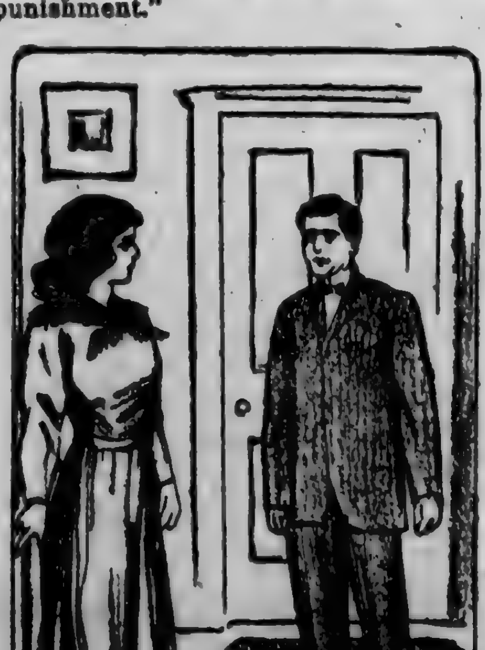
"Am I a prisoner of the police that you should ask me that?" returned Hazen, haughtily.

"No, but you should be," retorted Harper. "I don't like your ways, Hazen. I don't like what you and your sister have said about the Cause and the conscienceless obedience exacted from its members. I don't like any of it; least of all this passing over of poor Bella's name to one whose duty it will possibly be to make trouble for her."

Hazen smiled and moved from the window. No one there had ever seen such a smile before, and the oppression which it brought heightened Georgian's fear to terror.

"Let me!" she cried, lifting her hands towards Harper in inconceivable anxiety. "A quarrel with him will not help you and it may greatly injure me. Alfred, what am I to expect? Something dreadful, I can see. Your face is not the face of one who forgives, or who sees in a gift of money an adequate recompense for a cowardly withdrawal."

"You read rightly," said he. "Your fortune will be accepted by the Chief, but he will never forget the cowardice. What faith can he put in one who prefers her own happiness to the general good? You must prepare for punishment."



"You must prepare for punishment."

"Punishment!" broke scornfully from Harper's lips.

She hushed him with a look before which even he stood aghast.

"You will only waste words," she cried. "If he says punishment, I may expect punishment." And turning back to Ransom, in a burst of longing and passion, she raised her eyes to him again saying, "You do not forgive because you do not realize my danger. But you will realize it when I am gone."

Ransom, under a sudden releasement of the tension of doubt and awe which had hitherto held him speechless, gave her one wild stare, then caught her to his breast. She uttered a happy sigh.

"Ah!" she murmured in the soft ecstasy and boundless relief of the moment, "how I have learned to love you during the fears and agonies of this awful week."

"And I you," was the whispered answer. "Too deeply," he impetuously added in louder tones, "to let any harm come to you now."

She smiled; but desperation fought with love in that smile. Gently releasing herself, she cast another glance at Hazen, upon whose gray and distorted countenance there had settled a great gloom, and passionately exclaimed:

"Had law or love been able to interfere with the judgment of our Chief, I should not have been driven into the herculean task of deceiving you and the whole world as to my real identity."

Then with slowly drooping head, and the manner of one who has heard his doom pronounced, she hoarsely whispered:

"The death-mark was scrawled upon my door last night. This is never done without the consent of the Chief. No one can save me now, not even my own brother."

"False. I scrawled those lines," declared Ransom. "It was a test—"

"Which I commanded you to make," put in Hazen. Then in fainter and less strenuous tones, "She's right. Georgian Ransom is doomed; no one can save her."

"False again!" This time it was Harper who interposed. "I can and will. You forget that I know the name of your Chief. Conspiracy such as you hint at is indictable in this country. I am a lawyer. I shall protect, not only your sister, but her money."

The smile he received in return evinced no ordinary scorn.

"Try it," said he. Then with a laugh so low as to be almost inaudible, yet so full of meaning that even Harper's cheek lost color, he calmly declared: "No one knows the name of our Chief. Auchincloss is a member and a valuable one—the only one whose name Georgian positively knows; but he's but a unit in a thousand. You cannot reach the Head or even the Heart of this great organization through him, and if you did and punished it, the Cause would grow another head and you would be as far from injuring us as you are now. Georgian is right. Not even I can save her now." Then, with a steady look into each of their faces, he smiled again and one and all shuddered. "But the Cause will go on," he cried in tones ringing with enthusiasm. "Mankind will drop its shackles and we, we shall have unriveted one of its chains. It is worth dying for. I, Alfred Hazen, say it."

Slowly he sank back into his chair. The pallor which had astounded all from the first had now become the ghastly mask of a soul whose only token of life glimmered through the orbits of his fast glazing eyes. He breathed, but in great pants. Georgian became alarmed.

"What is it?" she cried, forgetting her own fears and threats in the horror which his appearance excited. "This is something more than exhaustion from the pounding of that murderous eddy. What have you done? Tell me, Alfred, tell me."

"Simply forestalled the verdict of the Chief," said he. "I was under oath to leave the country to-day on no ordinary errand. I failed to keep my word, believing that the interests of the Cause could be better served by what I have here undertaken than by the fulfilment of my primal duty. But we are not allowed the free exercise of our own judgment, else what man could be depended on? With us, neglect means death, no matter what the excuse or the Cause's benefit. I knew this when I made my choice last night. I have been dying ever since, but only actually since I came into this room. When the doctors decided that I had received no mortal hurt in the eddy, I—"

"Alfred!" The sister-heart spoke at last. "Not—not poison!"

"That is what you may call it here," said he, with a return to his old imperious manner, "but later and to the world it will be kindness on your part to name it exhaustion—the effect of my battle with the water. The doctors will reconsider their diagnosis and blame my poor heart. You will have no trouble about it. It is my heart—I feel it failing—failing—"

He was sinking, but suddenly his whole nature flared up. Bounding to his feet, he stood before them, with eyes aflame and a passionate strength in his attitude which held them spellbound.

"What can law, what can selfish greed, what can self-aggrandizement and the most pitiless ambition effect against men who own to such discipline as this? Nothing. The world will go on, you will try your little ways, your petty reforms, your slow-moving legislation and promise of justice to the weak, but the invincible is the ready; ready to act; ready to suffer, ready to die so that God is justified of his children and man lifted into brotherhood and equality. You cannot strive against the unseen and the fearless. The Cause will triumph though all else fails. Georgian, I am sorry—" He was tottering now, but he held them back with a stern gesture, "I don't think I ever knew just what love was. There is one way—only one—"

But from those lips the explanation of this one way never came. As they saw the change in him and rushed to his support, his head fell forward on his breast and all was over.

CHAPTER XXX.

Not Yet.

THEY had laid him on the bed and Mr. Harper, in his usual practical way, was hastening to rouse the house, when Georgian stepped before him and laid her hand upon the door.

"Not yet," said she with authority. "He said there was a way—let us find it before we give up our secret and our possible safety. Mr. Harper, have you guessed that way?"

"No, except the usual one of protection through the law which he scouts. I do not believe, Mrs. Ransom, in any other being necessary. Your brother's threats answered a very good purpose while he was alive, but now that he is dead they need not trouble you. I'm not even sure that I believe in the organization. It was mostly in your brother's brain, Mrs. Ransom; there's no such band, or if there is, its powers are not so unlimited as he would make you believe."

She simply pointed to the motionless form and the distorted face which were slowly assuming an expression of great majesty.

"There is my answer," said she. "Men of his strong attributes do not kill themselves from fancy. He knew what he did."

"And you think—"

"That I will not live a week if I pass that door under the name of Georgian Ransom. Mr. Harper, I am sure of it; Roger, I beg you to believe what I say. It may not come here—but it will come. The mark has been set against my name. Death only will obliterate this mark. But the name—that is already a dead one—shall it not stay so?—It is the one way—the way he meant."

"Georgian!"

It was a cry of infinite protest. Such a cry as one might expect from the long-suffering Ransom. It drew her from the door; it brought her to his side. As their eyes and hands met, Harper stepped back to the bedside, and remembering the sensitiveness of the man before him, softly covered his poor face. When he turned back, Mrs. Ransom was slowly shaking her head under her husband's prolonged look and saying softly:

"No, not Georgian, Anitra. Henceforth Anitra, always Anitra. Can you endure the ordeal for the sake of the safety and peace of mind it will bring?"

"I endure it! Can you? Remember the deafness that marks Anitra."

"That can be cured." Her smile turned almost arch. "We will travel; there are great physicians abroad."

"A sister—not a wife?"

"Your wife in time—Ah, it will mean a new courtship and—Anitra is a different woman from Georgian—she has suffered—you will love her better."

"O God! Harper, are we living, awake, sane? Help me at this crisis. I do not know where I am or what this is she really asks."

"She asks the impossible. She asks what we can, perhaps, give, but not what I can. You forget that this deception calls for connivance on my part, and whatever you may think of me or my profession, deception is foreign to my nature and very repugnant to me."

"And you refuse?"

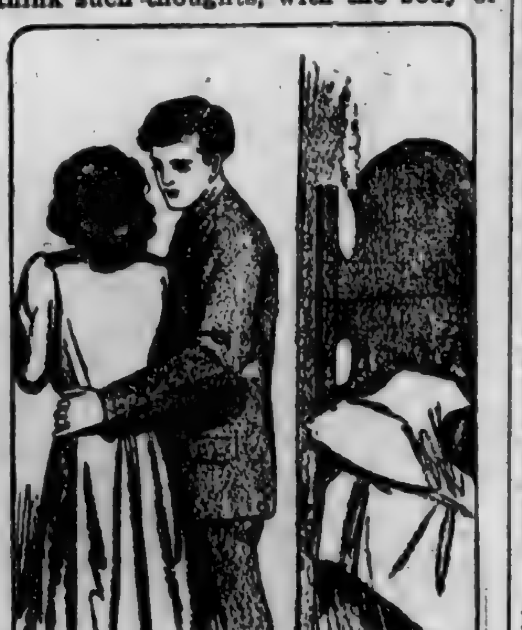
"Mrs. Ransom, I must."

The hope which had held her up, the life which had returned to body and spirit since this prospect of a possible future had dawned upon her, faded from glance and smile.

"Then good-by, Roger, we shall never have those happy days together of which we have often dreamt. I may stay with you a week, a month, a year, but the horror of a great fear will be over us, and never, never can we know joy."

She threw herself into her husband's arms; she clung to him.

"One moment," she cried, "one moment of perfect happiness before the shadow falls. Oh, how I must love you, Roger, to say such words, to think such thoughts, with the body of the brother I loved so deeply once, lying there dead before us, killed by his own hand."



Ransom softly drew her aside where her eyes could not fall upon the bed.

Ransom softly drew her aside where her eyes could not fall upon the bed.

Harper stopped still where he was, the picture of gloom and uncertainty.

"It must be settled now," said Ransom. "As we leave this room, our relations must remain."

"I cannot but think your fears all folly," muttered Harper. "Yet the responsibility you force upon me is terrible. If it were not for that will! How can I present it to the Surrogate when I know the testator is still alive?"

"You need not. I will do that," said Ransom.

"And the property! Given to a man we none of us know. Property that is not legally his."

"I will make it so," cried Georgian with a burst of new and uncontrollable hope as she saw, as she thought, this conscientious lawyer yielding. "There is paper here; draw up a deed of gift. I will sign it and you shall hold it so that whether I live or die, Auchincloss' title to his money shall be absolute. This much I wish to do, that Alfred's life should not have been sacrificed for nothing."

BELT GROWN INTO FLESH

Once, When Bulging With Gold, It Held Serbian Owner at Bottom of Harbor.

Omaha, Neb.—As a tree grows over a horseshoe that is carelessly hung on a branch when the tree is young, so the flesh of Ziva Ross, a Serbian now living in this city has grown partly over a great steel and leather belt this man has worn since he was a boy in his teens.

The police of the South Side put him on the table in the station a night or two ago and removed the belt after laboring over an hour with pincers, pliers, file and pinch bars. The belt, which for years had been too small for the man, had cut deeply into his body, and rolls of flesh and skin on the man's back and abdomen had grown down half way over the 6 inch width of the belt. Thus this belt, for the second time in the Serbian's career, had nearly cost him his life.

The belt, with great buckles, was locked upon his person in Serbia many years ago. It contained compartments where gold could be stored. That was the original purpose of the belt.

When he landed in New York three years ago from Europe he carried $4,000 in gold coins with him in the belt. Now this sum in gold constitutes a considerable weight. Coming down the gangplank he slipped and fell into New York Bay. He went to the bottom and did not arise again. Officers on duty looked for him to bob up, but he did not. A life crew was summoned. The men found him lying flat on the bottom of the bay, unable to move. They dragged him to the surface and pumped the water out of him. It was found on examination that it was the weight of the gold that had held him down.

Today the $4,000 in gold is gone. The Serbian is penniless. He was arrested on a warrant here for some petty crime, and it was then that the belt was discovered. It was then, also that he told the story of his narrow escape from death at the bottom of New York Bay.

The huge buckle of the belt had rusted so that it could not be worked, and the leather had grown extremely hard, almost like a board.

RECIPES THAT ARE "DIFFERENT"

Candied Sweet Potatoes—To two cups sugar add one cup water and boil it until it syrups, the same as for preserves, then remove from the fire and stir in one heaping tablespoon butter. Slice boiled sweet potatoes into a buttered baking pan of the proper size, pour the syrup over them to almost cover, put extra bits of butter on top of them, and bake about one hour, or longer, basting occasionally by tilting the pan and dipping up some of the liquid. Be careful not to let the top get dry. Serve hot in the pan in which it baked.

Carrot and nut loaf.— To one cup boiled, mashed carrots, add one well-beaten egg, half cup chopped walnuts, one finely minced onion, a tablespoon butter, melted, half teaspoon salt, a dash of pepper, and bread crumbs to make a stiff mixture—about one cup. Form into a loaf, bake in a greased pan in a hot oven half an hour, and serve hot with tomato sauce.

Carrot Pudding.—To one cup boiled, finely mashed carrots, add two well-beaten eggs, one-fourth teaspoon salt and half cup each of milk and cream. Mix well, pour into a pudding dish and bake about half an hour in a hot oven. Insert a silver knife into the pudding, if nothing adheres to the knife the pudding is done. Serve cold with sweetened and flavored whipped cream.

Carrot Puffs.—To each cup cooked, mashed carrots, add half cup cream, one well-beaten egg, one teaspoon butter, melted, half teaspoon sugar and one-fourth teaspoon salt. Mix well, pour into greased custard cups and bake about half an hour in a hot oven, until puffed up and light.—Farm and Home.

PAYS TO BUY ONLY PURE SEED.

''Will it pay me to buy alfalfa seed containing three per cent of Russian thistle if I can get it cheaper than pure seed?'' writes an Iow farmer to the botany department at Ames.

''No, '' answers Dr. L. H. Pammel of the department. ''Russian thistle is a troublesome and unlawful weed in Iowa. Pay more and buy pure seed, since it is easily obtainable, and always gives better results.''

MISSOURI COW MILK PRODUCER

IN THREE YEARS MISSOURI UNIVERSITY ANIMAL HAS GIVEN 64,957 POUNDS

IS A TWELVE YEAR OLD HOLSTEIN

Her Output of Butter Is Six Times that of Any Other Bovine in State

Columbia, Mo.—If you were keeping 47 persons in a boarding house and had only one cow to supply the milk and butter, what would you do?

If the cow were Carlotta Pontiac, a 12 year old holstein bred and owned by the dairy department of the College of Agriculture of the University of Missouri, and you gave each boarder an amount equal to the per capita consumption of milk and butter in the United States you would not need to do anything but sell 9643 pounds of milk every year.

That is the amount this same cow produced each of the last three years above the percapita allowance for 47 persons. The percapita consumption is figured by the United States Department of Agriculture as 17.6 pounds of butter a year and one third of a quart of milk a day.

In three years Carlotta Pontiac has produced 64,957 pounds of milk and 2480 pounds of butter, or 826.6 pounds a year. The average Missouri cow would have furnished in that time 10,500 pounds of milk and 420 pounds of butter, about one sixth as much as Carlotta.

At the average price in Columbia of 7 1-2 cents a quart for the milk, Carlotta's product in the three years would be worth $2319.90. At 30 cents a pound for the butter and 25 cents per hundred pounds for the skimmilk, it would be worth $882.05. Skimmilk involves little cost of handling.

Carlotta Pontiac's three year record probably has not been equaled by any other cow in Missouri. She is still producing milk, having given birth to a heifer calf three weeks ago.

However, she is not on test now. The production of Carlotta Pontiac is made possible by her breeding. A record made by her three years ago was broken a year later by her ungrateful sister.

Like other cows in the dairy herd at the university, Carlotta eats grain, corn silage and alfalfa hay. Of the silage and hay she has all she will eat. With the grain she gets cottonseed meal and bran.

Carlotta's home is a large box stall of iron bars with straw for a bed. The only favor that she has which is not shared by other cows in the herd is that her door is fastened with an extra button on the outside. For a time she enjoyed the privilege of lifting the latch of her door and walking out without the permission of her keeper.

When the keeper leaves her now, Carlotta knows that he will turn the button and stands resigned to her imprisonment. But let a stranger leave the stall, Carlotta suspects his ignorance of her methods and tries to lift the latch. Often she is successful.

PATENT POLISH.

A very good formula for patent polish for varnish surfaces is made with two eggs, one quart of vinegar, one quart of raw linseed oil and one pint of alcohol. The ingredients should be added in the order named, mixing each one in thoroughly before adding the next.

The work should be first rubbed, then gone over with rotten stone and water, and finally polished with the above, with the addition of a small quantity of rotten stone. After polishing the work, it should be thoroughly wiped off with a clean cloth or cotton waste.

HUMAN DUCK'S QUACKER REFUSES TO BE STILLED

Heretofore His "Duck Tongue" Worked Only When Commanded, but Now Works Overtime.

Orange, Tex.—Unless he discontinues his quacking proclivities, Elmer Borgne, the human duck, fears some careless hunter will shoot him; and if he checks his vocal activities, he is in danger of starvation. In the latter case a large family dependent upon him is liable to the same fate. Present indications he says, are that it will be a survival of the fittest.

Mr. Borgne, equipped with a duck tongue growing out of the roof of his mouth and a set of false teeth, has been making a livelihood solely thru fishing and hunting. When hunting ducks it has merely been necessary for him to extract the teeth, and the duck tongue automatically starts thrilling. The ducks always came in large numbers, some, it is said, even emerging from under the water. When Elmer had bagged the limit he would pack up, readjust his teeth and arrive home in time for an early breakfast.

But his duck charmer is no longer under control. It has grown to such an extent within the past few weeks that it is continually quacking. And Elmer is very much annoyed. When he now starts to talk he is interrupted by a rude quack-quack. He is even aroused from sleep by a sound like that made by a distressed duck. He hears duck noise all day and all night, and despite his being a good huntsman he is unable to make use of his skill.

He is considering the advisability of having the duck tongue removed by an operation, altho he realizes such action will be a serious impediment toward his future livelihood.

NOVEL DEMONSTRATION

Telephone Rung in Court By Current Passing Through Man in Attempt to show Woman Could Not Have Been Injured as Alleged.

Springfield, Mo.—A telephone was rung by current passing through a man's body in the circuit court here as evidence in a damage suit. The case was that of Mrs. W. T. Warren, who sued the Missouri and Kansas Telephone Co. for $5,000 for an alleged injury from electric shock while using a telephone.

The defendant contended the current of 75 to 100 volts used in the ringing telephones is not enough to cause injury to a human being and provided the novel demonstration in support of their claim.

A telephone was placed on the court stenographer's desk and one of the wires forming the circuit was cut. Louis Hoffman grasped the two ends of the wire, one end in each hand, and over another telephone the operator was told to ring the improvised phone. The telephone rang, the current passing through Hoffman's body. Apparently he was uninjured. The jury could not agree and was discharged.

NEVEN SPEAK AS THEY PASS

Husband Provides and Wife Cooks, Both Using Sign Language.

Detroit, Mich.—In the family of Orrin Harlow there is strife and unrest.

And a situation that perchance might be declared a bisis for farce comedy, but never would one imagine that in real life such a thing could transpire.

Orrin and his wife lived on a farm in Brownstown in the manner of the usual rural family. They arose with the lark and the rooster and retired with the same promptness. They brought forth three children and they tilled the soil. Very commonplace and very monotonous it all was until a few weeks ago.

Then the wife left the farm and went home to her mother—at the earnest solicitation of her husband. Later she desired to return, and it was necessary to seek the courts of Wayne county for an injunction to force the husband to allow her to enter the place. In the meantime a bill of divorce was filed.

The attorneys impressed very earnestly on each, but should the two sit on the porch of an evening when the moon was full and the scent of the flowers crept in with the evening mist and added to the witchery of the summer nights that are known to provoke love, and should they forgot the domestic wounds and allow their fingers to stray until they linked one with the other's, why—the whole works would be off, as attorney Robert Toms graphically and somewhat idiomatic language remarked. He represents the woman.

So these two fortified themselves as best they could and took up residence in the home—at opposite sides of the house. They agreed on certain rules of warfare wherein the wife was to cook the meals for each and the husband was to provide the wherewith to cook. They agreed to share a common table, but not to speak one to another or even allow the attitude of a city landlady in treating with the boarder who was three weeks behind for the second floor front.

The wife cooks and places the dishes on the table. The husband stalks in and sits down. If he happens to want the salt and it is out of reach, he points and grunts. If the wife wants the bread, she gestures and nods. The meal goes on in stony silence. Afterward the husband takes his pipe to the back porch and the wife takes her sewing to the front.

The robins hop about in pairs, crimson breasted protests to the state of affairs; the chickens cleave to the little red rooster and the big Poland China boar keeps watchful care of his wives, but these two look not at each other and pass the time in gloomy quiet.

The other day Orrin discovered $200 in cash. The wife claims it was her savings from butter and egg money before she saw her husband. He claims it is his. And he took it. The wife, under the rules of warfare, could not enter verbal protests, but it is said her facial contortions were wonderful to behold. She did tell her lawyer about it, and he appeared before Judge Hosmer with demands for alimony, solicitor's fee and a few other little matters. The court allowed most of the requests. Said he:

"Are you sure these two are not living as man and wife?"

"No," said both attorneys in chorus. "They don't even speak."

"What a happy home," murmured a little man on the front row of spectators, glancing askance at a large, determined woman in the new suit.

"And how peaceful," said Attorney Toms.

SNAKES HISS AT ARIZONA INDIANS IN WEIRD DANCE

"Most Impressive Thing I Ever Saw," Traveler Declares—Tells Why They Drink Emetic.

Sacramento, Cal.—Roger Foster, a traveler has just returned from a journey through the Panama Canal to California. He said:

"The most impressive thing I saw during my travels was the snake dance of the Hopi Indians on their reservation in Arizona. The Hopis neither welcome nor levied tribute upon visitors, of whom there were a little more than a hundred present. There was no charge for admission and no collection. There was no posing and no imposture. Neither the snakes nor the men were under any hypnotic or narcotic influence. And credible investigators who have examined the serpents after the dance have found the fangs and bags of poison intact.

I have seen the fire worshippers in Persia, but I have never witnessed a ceremony so primitive, so imposing or so ancient as this. I believe that nothing in the world exceeds it in these respects except the rite of cannibalism, which is said to be practiced in Central Africa and by the voodoos in the West Indies. Yet it was performed in the United States within 100 miles of a railroad in a village scrupulously clean, among a people who ate fruit and vegetables preserved in cans; whose features are regular, who possess considerable physical beauty and who present the signs of a high state of civilization.

"The object of the ceremony is to obtain the rain which is greatly needed in Arizona desert at times. The snake dance is the culmination of a festival that lasts several days, during which it is preceded by other dances and by foot races. It is performed by a religious fraternity into which the members are initiated about the age of purberty. They prepare themselves for the rite by a fast and diet for a few weeks before, during which they collect the snakes. At the conclusion of the ceremony, they drink an emetic and use a lotion, the contents of both of which are secret. This regimen is said to render them immune.

"The dancers were covered with war paint. Their only garments were loose flesh colored breetches, not reaching to the knees, high moccasins and a tail composed of the skin of a wild animal. Some wore necklaces of small birds. All had headdresses with feathers.

"The music was made by rattles shaken by a row of about ten men, some of whom represent the antelope and buffalo fraternities. The dance was performed by about twenty of the braves, in couples, one of each two holding red feathers with which he teased the snakes and sought to divert their attention from those that held them.

"The dancers entered in single file, passing before the musicians after each had stamped upon a piece of wood covering a hole so that they might thus communicate with the Great Spirit in the bowels of the earth. This was followed by a dance consisting of a measured movement of the feet of the dancers and musicians as they stood in rows opposite each other. Then as they circled around the stone one of each couple in turn took a snake from the mass of shrubbery where the snakes were hidden in bags.

"The snakes numbered nearly fifty, mostly rattlers, with a few whip snakes and other serpents among them since rattlesnakes were scarce. Upon the first round each snake dancer seized a single snake, grasping it in the middle by his teeth, leaving it free to coil with the tail around his arm or neck, there to writhe, twist and rattle while it might with its head hiss, strike and bite. Later some would take two or even three in their hands and mouths.

"At times a snake was thrown from the dancer's mouth upon the ground where it hissed and rattled. One of these charged upon the spectators, but a white man in the front row caught it by the neck and threw it back into the ring. In spite of the teasing of the feathers, the snake more than once closed their teeth in the faces, necks and shoulders of those who held them, but the war paint concealed any blood that followed.

"Throughout the Indians chanted a prayer that the serpents would persuade the Great Spirit to give them rain, and women wearing bright colored shawls threw meal upon the ground. This lasted about half an hour. The Indians then threw all the snakes into the middle of a ring which they formed before the inner side of the stone and divided them among different couples who ran with them down the trails upon the side of the cliff, going east, west, north and south, until they found dens among the rocks of the desert where they deposited the serpents. Finally the dancers took emetics and ablutions, in the latter being assisted by the virgins of the tribe and returned apparently unharmed to the sacred caves where they had prepared for the ceremony.

"The dance was followed by a storm of rain which blocked the traffic on the railroad for more than a day."

EDISON COULDN'T BORROW $100 FOR WORK IN 1867

Veteran Operator Tells How He Passed Up Chance to Share Inventor's Fortune for Small Loan.

Louisville, Ky.—Zachary Taylor Underwood, retired telegrapher, who lives at 1709 West Jefferson street, this city, would be a rich man today if he had grasped the one big opportunity of his life. Underwood once had the chance of sharing in the profits from some of the 900 or more inventions for which Thomas Alva Edison has been granted letters patent in the United States and other countries.

Underwood and Edison were intimate friends. For this loan of $100 Underwood was to share in the profits which Edison then confidently believed would eventually accrue from his inventions, particularly the double transmitter, the quadruplex telegraph, sextuple telegraph, the alkaline storage battery, quadruplex and sextuple telegraph transmission, and many other inventions which have to do with telegraphy and electricity.

All these prospective inventions were in Edison's mind while he was employed as a telegraph operator for the Western Union Telegraph Company here.

This all happened in the years 1866-67. Edison at that time did not have sufficient money to purchase the necessary instruments with which he desired to make the experiments for improvements in telegraphy. At the same time Underwood was a clerk and messenger in the telegraph office. He was a frugal boy, and had saved some money, in that particular being like unto another Western Union messenger boy, Andy Carnegie, altho Underwood is not a Canny Scot, but a native Kentuckian, a kinsman of former congressman now United States Senator, Oscar Underwood of Alabama, who, by the way, was also born in Louisville. A hundred dollars looked big to Taylor Underwood at that time, and altho he liked Telegraph Operator Edison better than anyone else in the office, he hesitated about letting him have the $100 which he wanted so badly. So he consulted the chief operator, who at that time happened to be Andrew Ellison, now dead, and also manager of the office at the time, Thomas R. Boyle, now dead. Says Underwood:

"That fellow Edison has a wheel in his head," they all said and added: "He will be in the lunatic asylum within six months if he doesn't quit projecting! Let him have $100! Why, boy, you would be as crazy as he is to do so. You had a hard time earning that $100; keep it, and pay no attention to Edison and his inventions."

"That's what my bosses told me," said Underwood rather sorrowfully.

And Underwood kept his $100. Edison soon afterward left Louisville, but not for a lunatic asylum. He left in order to accept a better position in the east and soon afterward Underwood heard that he was getting a salary of $6,000 a year. Underwood and his fellow operators who are still alive have heard of Edison many times since then. Messenger Underwood became a telegraph operator for the Louisville and Nashville Railroad and was afterward for twenty-five years, city ticket and pessenger agent for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company in Louisville.

Underwood confesses that he would not know what to do with the vast amount of money he might have made had he shared the profits from the inventions of Edison. He has no regrets on the score of monetary loss, but he wishes that he had not taken the advice of his superior officers, and had given Edison the $100 he wanted to borrow, just to be his partner, and to share in some of the great honors which such an association would have brought him.

Underwood, however, long ago amassed a competence sufficient to satisfy his every want, and is also held in high esteem by his neighbors and acquaintances but he cannot help every now and then saying to himself:

'I wish I had loaned Tom Edison that $100.

At the same time Mr. Underwood says he cannot help congratulating himself that he does not have to live in West Orange, N. J., where Edison now lives. He loves his old Kentucky home and feels satisfied to live and die where his distinguished namesake, Gen. Zachary Taylor, lies buried. Had Mr. Edison succeeded in getting that $100 forty-nine years ago, he might have located in Louisville and not in New Jersey.

Many Uses for Alfalfa.

Warsaw, Ind—A factory for the manufacture of human foods from alfalfa may be opened in Warsaw. Long years of experimenting have proved that alfalfa has valuable food and medicinal properties for humans as well as for animals. These experiments have resulted in the perfecting of a process by which alfalfa may be converted into human food in many ways. Among the common articles produced from alfalfa are flour, coffee, tea, syrup, candy, tobacco, breakfast food, stock foods, axle grease and many other articles in every day use.

WOMAN BESTS COUGAR

With Child Clinging to Her Back She Wins Fight With Beast.

Aberdeen, Wash.—With her infant child clinging to her back, Mrs. E. Burkhart, a former resident of this cuty but now living at Tahola, fought a large cougar nearly twenty minutes, finally beating the animal off with a piece of water pipe. Her clothing was torn to shreds and she suffered minor scratches about the neck and breast.

The Burkharts live on the mountain opposite the Indian village at Tahola and each day Burkhart goes for the mail, and it is Mrs. Burkhart's custom to go down the path and meet him. Owing to the high water Mr. Burkhart was late. Mrs. Burkhart saw a small fox run close to the engine used for hoisting supplies and she picked up a piece of pipe to strike it, when the cougar appeared and immediately attacked her.

All through the battle the child hung to its mother's neck. Mrs. Burkhart plied her weapon vigorously and finally beat off the beast. Then she fled for home.

Texas Zoologists Asked to Identify 8 Inch Pink Reptile.

Fort Worth, Texas—Classification of an eight inch pink snake found on the white settlement road by Dr. John O'Reilly is causing considerable speculation among Fort Worth zoologists.

It is believed that the reptile belongs to a poisonous variety. It has a sharp tail, and a flat head with reversed spectacles. Its body is marked with diamond spots. It puffs like some varieties of poison reptiles but apparently has no fangs.

Dr. O'Rielly will send the snake to the state zoological department at Austin hoping that experts there will be able to identify it.

Oat Smut Prevention Is Explained by the Government Experts.

The average annual losses from smut in oats are greater than those caused by any other preventable cereal disease in U. S. Treating the seed with hot water or with formaldehyde solution before sowing is an easy, cheap and effective way of preventing this disease. The latter method which is the one most available for general use, is here briefly summarized. Both methods are described in detail in Farmers Bulletin 507, which will be sent free on application to the Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Mix the formalin (a commercial preparation which is 37 % formaldehyde by weight) with water at the rate of one pound (a little less than a pint) to forty gallons of water. The grain may be loosely inclosed in sacks or put loose into a tub or vat with the solution. Agitate the sacks or stir the loose grain occasionally so that the entire surface of every grain will be thoroughly wet, instead of being immersed the seed oats may be spread on a clean floor or canvas and sprinkled with the solution and shoveled over during the process so that they will be wet evenly as in other method. Not over a gallon of solution will be needed for every bushel of dry grain. After sprinkling, shovel the seed into a pile, cover it with sacks, wet with the solution and allow it to stand for at least two hours before spreading it out to dry.

PRECAUTIONS:—The oats may be seeded as soon as dry enough to run through the drill. If the seed is still moist, however, the drill must be set to sow more to the acre than if it is dry. The quantity which should be sown may be determined by measuring a given bulk before and after treatment and figuring the proportion of increase. After treating do not expose the seed to freezing until it is thoroughly dry. Do not allow the treated seed to come in contact with old sacks, bins or machinery in which they may be smut spores. If such must be used, scald them or wash them first with the formaldehyde solution.

FARM SUCCESS SURE

Young Men and Women Should Stick to Agriculture.

Country Citizen Has Advantages Over His City Relative When It Comes to the Real Opportunities.

(By G. H. ALFORD, Extension Division Maryland Agricultural College.)

WE think we are facing a new condition of affairs in the drift of the young people from the country to the cities, in the steady rise in the cost of living, and in the decline of our food exports. It is true, for us, this is a new situation, but for the world it is as old as civilization. Plutarch thundered against the depopulation of the rural districts. Justinian, the great lawmaker, was in favor of legislation designed to keep people on the farm. The great Roman emperor, Augustus, before the Christian era, saw that his empire was being undermined and called to him the poets of the nation and commanded them to sing of the beauties and profits of country life.

The young people of this country have been taught in their homes, in the schools, and through the literature placed in their hands, largely to overestimate the advantages of city life and they have not been taught correctly to comprehend its disadvantages. Likewise, the people of both city and country exaggerate the difficulties and drudgery of country life and fail to appreciate fully its great and peculiar advantages.

Low City Wages.

One middle-aged man in New York city, in answering the question, why young men leave the farm, says: "I wish to say that I speak from experience, for I am one of the army of deserters, and like thousands of others, am now too poor financially to go back to the farm, and too proud to go back broke. I know a great number here in New York city who are in the same position as I am. While I know many country boys, I know but very few who do not wish they had stayed on the old farm, and everyone tries to make his friends up the state think he is happy and very prosperous on a salary of twenty-five dollars per week, when, at the same time, he is trying to make both ends meet and still live respectably."

Probably the best way to convince boys that it is best to remain on the farm is by such methods of farming as will yield the necessary profits to provide the necessities, comforts, and some of the luxuries of life. There are thousands of small farmers cultivating farms with labor-saving tools and keeping plenty of good live stock, who are making the work of their own hands bring them in more than fifteen hundred dollars annually. Comparatively few men in towns and cities get as large a salary. The farmer grows his living on his farm and pays no house rent. The larger part of his fifteen hundred dollars is net profit. The fifteen hundred dollar town man can hardly make both ends meet.

Demonstrations, lectures, bulletins, books and contact with men trained and paid to advise and help him are now his privileges. He has a chance with tremendous odds in his favor to be a man—and a successful farmer.

Permanent Prosperity Sure.

It is unquestioned that we are now entering a permanent era of high priced farm products and high priced land. This being true, it is advisable for farmers' boys to buy land and grow high priced foodstuffs.

The country schools and churches are rapidly being consolidated, and made the equal of the best in the towns. Our industrial and commercial affairs will soon be adjusted so that farmers will receive their full share of what the consumer pays.

Farmers will soon have an equal chance with other men in securing capital to supply their farms and homes with labor-saving and wealth-producing equipment. The business world expects food of the right kind, and at prices commensurate with progressive living and is joining the farmers in advocating the establishment of financial institutions that will afford capital to meet the legitimate needs of farmers.

The farmer and his family many now have all city conveniences. Water, electric lights, telephone, fireless cookers, gasoline engines, automobiles, and so on, can be obtained for a comparatively small outlay of money.

The time has come when county agents, agricultural specialists, principals of agricultural high schools, and, in fact, agriculturists for all kinds of agricultural work will be selected from among the successful farmers and dragged from the farm. More farmers will be elected governors and sent to congress. There is a bright future for the educated, successful farmer.

GETTING THE SELLING HABIT

Farming is a business as well as a science. The business of the farmer is to produce things and sell them for profit. This is also the business of all the manufacturing plants throughout the world. A farmer is not only a business man, but also a manufacturer, and might be considered a merchant, since his income is dependent on the products that he sells for profit.

What

has to say about cream separators this week.

BUYING a cream separator is a good deal like hiring a man to work on your farm. A hired man that does poor work and is lazy is an expensive proposition, no matter how little you pay him. A cream separator that is hard to turn, hard to keep clean and doesn't skim close, would be expensive even if you got it as a gift.

Creamerymen and dairymen all over the world recognize the superiority of the De Laval.

About the only reason why any one ever buys any other cream separator is because they can get it a little cheaper.

Then they soon find out they have lost ten times as much from separator inconvenience, poor skimming and a machine that quickly wears out, as they saved in the beginning.

Remember that a De Laval will soon pay for itself, and if you have no separator now, or an inferior machine, we can sell you a De Laval on such terms that it will pay for itself while you are using it.

The best cream separator is the cheapest. Let us prove it for you on your own farm.

Sooner or later you will buy a DE LAVAL

History of U. B. Church at Newville.

The U. B. Class at Newville, Ind., was organized in 1842 by Bishop Henry Kumler, Jr., who also dedicated the first church, built in 1855. Rev. Jonathan Thomas was the first pastor.

The class was organized in a small log building, on the east side of the road, about two miles west of Newville, then called Vienna, on the farm owned by Samuel Woodcox. There were eleven charter members, nine of whom are as follows: Mr. and Mrs. Solomon DeLong, Hannah Robertson, Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Woodcox, Mr. and Mrs. Solomon Woodcox, Mr. M. Soper and Mrs. Ellis.

About 1842 a frame schoolhouse was built where the parsonage barn now stands, and soon after, the place of meeting was transferred from the Woodcox home to the schoolhouse, which was used for church purposes until 1855. Several of our older members well remember the great religious services held in this primitive school building.

In 1855, during the pastorate of Rev. J. Find a splendid frame church 30x46x18 was erected. This indeed was a splendid achievement for that early day and conclusive evidence of the regard those sturdy pioneers had for the Christian religion, for that church was undoubtedly superior to any other building in the community.

About 1880 the building was moved back from the road and placed on a brick foundation, truss beams were put in and the center supports removed. In 1885, while Rev. R. T. Martin, now residing at Angola, Ind., was pastor extensive repairs were made, which cost $500 and consisted of tower bell, slate roof and new windows.

This building served the needs of the congregation very well for a while but as the various other interests and enterprises of the community advanced, the people became more prosperous and began to feel the need of a better church for themselves and their children.

Of course this movement, like all other necessary improvements, was brought about slowly. It had been agitated and talked about some, but not much effort was made in that direction until about 1907, under the pastorate of Rev. S. M. Hill.

At this time some arrangements were made and different plans discussed, but nothing materialized but from that time, the people, together with the different pastors worked and planned along that line until 1912, when Rev. Givens came to serve the church as pastor. At this time there were four new members appointed on the board of trustees and immediately began the plan of re-building. During the winter the board, which consisted of G. F. DeLong, A. W. Platter, J. S. Kain, John Washler, Mac Leighty and Sam Wyatt, together with the pastor, worked unceasingly, trying to plan the best way to remodel the old building.

Several plans were drawn up, each of which, brought up some new difficulty. At last they decided upon a satisfactory plan and the building contract was let to Mr. John Deardorff, who deserves much credit for doing his work promptly and faultlessly.

Early in Mar. 1913, actual work was begun on the building. The main part of the church was turned around making an auditorium 30x44 ft. A lecture room 16x26, and a tower 12x12 were built on the north side and on the south a pastor's study 12x12 and alcove for rostrum 8x26 ft. An excellent 4 room basement is under the entire building, except the two 12x12 rooms. It rests on a foundation of concrete and cement blocks and is covered with a half pitch slate roof, the material and workmanship of everything is of superior quality.

Special mention should be made of the acetyline lighting, the interior woodwork, and beautiful frescoing which was done by C. A. Woodcox, of St. Joe, Ind.; the excellent four piece pulpit set which was donated by Beeks Erick, of Fort Wayne, Ind.; the circular oak pews, art glass windows, beautiful metal ceiling and the G. A. R. memorial window, the funds for which were solicited by Mrs. G. F. DeLong.

Finally the building was completed at a total cost of $5,230 including $485 donated labor, and on April 19, 1914, it was dedicated by H. H. Fout. By means of the very liberal pledges of the people on that day, together with what had already been pledged it was possible to pay this church debt in a very short time.

We claim to have the best equipped and most up-to-date rural church in the County, for which we desire to thank the community in general for their interest and generous contributions, which alone made this achievement possible. Our purpose is, that it may be a community church, devoted to the social, intellectual and religious uplift of the people. You are always welcome. We wish to thank the public for their generosity, the Ladies Aid of the church, who contributed $865, the different classes of the Sunday School and everyone who helped in any way, and last of all, we thank the trustees for their noble work.

To show our gratitude, joy and thanks we are planning a "Praise and Triumph Service", for April 16, 1916. An all day service will be held, and a basket dinner at the noon hour. We take this means of inviting all our friends who so generously helped us in our work, to be present on that day and rejoice with us in our victory.

In Society

The third section of the Ladies' Literary club entertained the rest of the club, and also the husbands of the club, Wednesday evening at the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Tustison. The rooms were nicely decorated in the club colors—red and green. About forty in all were present. The following program was carried out: "America" was sung by all. A solo was sung by Mrs. S. W. Tustison; "Kentucky Babe," which was acted out by Mrs. Charles Bayman, who was dressed to represent a negro "mammy." Mrs. A. K. Mumma then entertained those present with a story, and Mrs. Mumma is a delightful story teller. Mrs. Bayman gave a recitation, followed by a solo by Mr. Fred Thornton. Then while Mrs. Tustison played an accompaniment on the piano the other seven members of the "third" section—Mesdames Bert Bowman, Frank Benninghoff, Charles Bayman, Rolland Bearss, B. L. Dunkle, George Swineford and A. K. Mumma—recited the club song and saluted the club with pennants of red and green, the club colors. The program was interspersed with games, conducted by Mrs. Bearss and Mrs. Dunkle. Next came a delightful two-course luncheon and a social hour which all enjoyed to the limit.

Mrs. Addie Filley very pleasantly entertained the W. C. T. U., Friday afternoon. The topic being "Press and Literature." Mrs. Buckingham called the meeting to order at two o'clock. Opening song "All Hail the Power of Jesus Name" Devotional led by Mrs. Etta Hull. After reading the minutes and the roll call by Mrs. Grace Dilley, acting Secretary, Mrs. Jennie Sechler read a paper written by Mrs. Chloe Hart, but who could not be present. It was very interesting, being on "The Importance of Good Literature in Homes and Public Places." Echoes from the County W. C. T. U. Convention came next by the ones who attended. Readings from the "Union Signal" and "Young Crusader" by several of the ladies. Mrs. Etta Hull read a leaflet on "Why I Belong to the W. C. T. U." Business, Closing Song and prayer of dismissal by Mrs. Addie Patterson. Four guests were present:—Mrs. Deibert, of Garrett; Mrs. William Brown, of near Butler; Mrs. Charles Bayman and Mrs. Fred Thornton.

"Well, I'll swan," exclaimed Uncle Philo, pulling in on the lines. "What in thunderation ever burned that 'ere fence?"

It was a hot and lazy day, and Uncle Philo Baxter and I were in the middle of a four-mile drive from the farm to town to get our supplies for over Sunday, when we came to a strip of rail fence, six or eight rods of which had been burned to the ground.

"Some o' them pesky hoboes' work, I'll bet. That's what comes o' buildin' fires around in fence corners. No use gittin' down," but I jumped to the ground as Uncle Philo gave the lines a jerk. It was purely for curiosity sake, for the damage was done and the fire out. Walking over among the charred sticks I poked around with my foot, but seeing the folly of my actions, and hearing the call from Uncle to "come on," I was about to start for the wagon when my toe flipped out from a tuft of burnt grass an old copper coin about the size of a half dollar. I picked it up, rubbed it on my trousers and examined it. As near as I could tell it was an old Dutch penny, but the service and otherwise which it had seen had entirely obliterated the date. I picked up a stick and began further search, but Uncle Philo's impatience was becoming rather persuasive, and I gave it up.

"Find somethin'?" was the inquiry, as I stood with one foot on a spoke of the front wheel ready to step up into the wagon. A show dodger which had been discarded by some passerby was caught by a little whirl wind and blown up directly in front of the horses. Uncle emitted a good, healthy "whoa," but they gave such a sudden start that my foot slipped between the spokes and my leg was given a terrible wrench before I was able to free myself. I was pulled onto the seat and we resumed our journey. We were in but a short distance of town and my leg was giving me such pain that I had forgotten all about fence and coin, until Uncle Philo said: "Let's see that thing you found."

I fumbled in my pocket and, finding it, handed it to him. We were driving up the main street of the village at the time, and he was still looking at the coin when we reached our trading place. I held the lines and Uncle Philo jumped out. He dropped the coin in his pocket, drew a basket of eggs from the back end of the wagon and entered the store In a short time he came out muttering to himself.

"How in thunder that happened is more than I know."

"What's the matter, Uncle?" I inquired.

"Why, about half of them eggs was cracked. The horses couldn't 'ave jerked the wagon hard enough to 'ave done that without tippin' the basket over, seems to me;" and he looked puzzled. It was indeed queer, for I knew that Aunt Lucy had put in nothing but good, sound eggs; but the bottom of the basket showed that Uncle's statement was true.

"Well, it's done and that's all there is to it," came the consoling words. I'll step over here and get that Woman's Journal for mother."

In a few minutes we were on our way home. When we passed the "mile stones," which were nothing but two rocks which projected slightly from the middle of the road and were about a mile from Uncle's farm gate, something unexpectedly happened. "The "bumps," though slight, were enough to dislodge the other end of the seat, and Uncle Philo made the funniest drop onto the ground that I have ever seen. A word to the horses and they stopped instantly or the accident might have proved more serious. Regardless of the pain in my leg, I was convulsed with laughter but managed to hold in. While I was straightening the the seat up, Uncle said: "I've driv' over that spot for over thirty years and never had a bump like that before, not even with horses trottin." He rubbed his thigh and rolled up his trousers leg to see just how much skin was missing from his shin. We were soon on our way again, and reached home without further accident.

It was a sorrowful pair that did the chores that night. Uncle's back hurt him so he could hardly straighten up, and it was all I could do to walk. We left a good many things undone which should have been attended to, but our condition justified us. We certainly welcomed the call for supper. Aunt Lucy wanted to know what had happened, and after we told her, she reminded us of "how careless" we were for this, and we should "never" do that until Uncle Philo, who was just upset enough to resent it, blurted out:

"What made you send me to market with about half a basket of broken eggs?"

"Why, Philo, what do you mean?"

"I mean that when them eggs was counted out that about half of them was broke, and we didn't break them drivin' to town either."

"Now Philo, you know very well that I'm always careful about sortin' out the eggs that I send to town, and that I never put in a broken one, and if there was any of them cracked you done it on the way there."

The argument continued, and as Uncle Philo saw he was getting the worst of it, he wished to change the subject, and reaching in his pocket, he produced the coin I had found and handed it to Aunt Lucy.

If there was anything in the world which interested her it was coins. Whenever she sold a pint of milk she always looked at the dates on the pennies; and when she bought a stamp of the mail carrier she'd always manage to hand him a nickle so she would get pennies in change. And often times she had in this way picked up a rather rare date. In an old mustach cup on the mantle she had quite a collection.

She at once settled herself to the perusal of the coin.

"Wonder what that's worth. I'll send for one of them coin books Monday and we'll find out, for I'll bet it's a mighty valuable piece."

I told her I did not think that a coin in that condition was worth much of anything, regardless of its rarety. However, she insisted that it was, and on my telling her that she could have it, deposited it in the cup on the mantle.

I was awakened that night by a terrific storm. The incessant flashes through my window almost blinded me, and the din and roar was something terrible. I was just donning enough of my clothes to make myself presentable below when a terrible crash came which nearly knocked me off my feet and set little needles at work all over me. I was just hobbling down-stairs when Aunt Lucy called from the bottom for me to hurry for "lightning has struck the chimney and the house is on fire."

Sure enough, lightning had struck the fireplace chimney, and had disrobed the mantle and scattered things about until it had lost nearly all of its former appearance. The smoke which filled the room and caused Aunt Lucy to think that the house was on fire was nothing but the sulphury vapor which follows lightning strokes, and it soon disappeared.

Directly after the shock the storm seemed to subside, and within ten minutes the stars were shining.

"Well I'll be swizzeled," said Uncle Philo, seating himself in an easy chair, while Aunt Lucy and I began gathering up some of the debris, "This storm seems to 'av' been got up for our special benefit."

Aunt Lucy was all done up. "Did you ever see such talk? And to have this happen right after we've had our house fixed over."

The next morning we arose to view a mighty dilapidated looking "settin' room" as Aunt Lucy called it. The plaster was off the ceiling and one side of the room. The mantle shelf was torn off and a few bushels of brick and mortar were scattered about the hearth. The trinkets which had decorated the shelf we had scraped up during the storm and placed on the table. The teacup in which Aunt Lucy always put her butter money and the mustach cup which contained her "collection" had both been broken and the contents of each were piled in a heap.

Uncle Philo would allow no "straightenin' up" while it was Sunday, so we went about affairs as if nothing had happened.

We were about to drive off for church when Aunt Lucy happened to remember that she had forgotten her pocketbook, and we waited while she went in search for it. Being unable to find it readily, she picked up a handful from the heap on the table and hurried out to the wagon. The journey to and from church was without accident or incident.

We had just finished dinner, and Aunt Lucy thought she would read a while before "clearin' off the table," so she asked Uncle what he did with her Journal.

"Hain't taken it out of my pocket yet. You'll find it in there behind the door."

The magazine was soon found and Aunt Lucy was wiping her glasses. A minute later: "Why, Philo, this ain't my paper."

"If you got it out of my pocket it's your paper, for that's the only one I had in there," returned Uncle.

"Well, I got it out of your pocket, and it's not my Journal. I'd be ashamed to play a trick like that, or to carry such stuff around," and Aunt Lucy tossed a copy of a Detective Weekly in Uncle Philo's lap.

There were a good many words from both sides, but Uncle Philo was never able to give a plausible explanation how he ever happened to buy a dime novel in place of the Woman's Journal.

When Aunt saw that her day was spoiled, so far as reading was concerned, she gathered up her coins and began looking them over and sorting them out. She had been at this but a short time when she said:

"Now I wonder what has become of that funny coin you give me yesterday."

I remarked that we might not have picked it up with the rest of the coins, and it probably was still on the floor.

Aunt Lucy began searching for it, and regardless of Uncle Philo's protests, we looked through everything, including the heap of brick and plaster, but no coin was to be found. The only explanation any of us could give was that Aunt Lucy had put it in the contribution box, thinking it was a half dollar which was her weekly gift. She had been without her "specks," and we therefore decided that as final.

"Well, I'll let him have it rather than say anything about it, but I hate to give it up." Uncle and I both agreed with Aunt Lucy so that was the last of the coin so far as we were concerned.

The second day following, while the masons were at work repairing the damaged room, a neighbor drove up and asked us if we had heard the news. None had been to town since Monday morning and had heard nothing. "Why, Brother Hendricks was knocked in the head and robbed last night while driving to town. When they found him he was unconscious. There is no clue."

Uncle asked me to drive over to the parsons and see if there was anything that we could do, and he would stay at home to help attend the masons. I found Brother Hendricks seated on the porch with his head tied up, but he seemed as jovial and high spirited as usual. While I was talking with him about his misfortune the telephone bell rang. After answering the call he returned to the porch and told me that he must go to town at once, as the suspected robber had been caught, and that the sheriff wanted him to look over some articles found in his possession.

By request, I drove over with the pastor, and when the sheriff showed us the contents of the prisoner's pockets, I was not a little surprised to see the old coin I had found along the burned fence. The minister at once proved the watch to be his by the initials inside, so the prisoner was as good as convicted. Court happened to be in session at the time, and in less than a week the robber was on his way to the penitentiary to serve a three-year term.

About a week from that time, we, or at least my aunt and uncle, were paralyzed with the news that the parson was found drunk in a very disreputable saloon in the "wet" town of Franklin, just over the state line. However, he had the nerve to come back and put up a "bold front," but before the preparations for his church trial were completed, still more astounding news was brought to us that he had run away with another man's wife—a sister in his church. In looking over the headlines of a big daily paper some time after, I saw his name among those killed in a railroad accident down south. I presume it was our "Brother Hendricks" for we never heard nothing more of him.

About a year passed and I was again spending my summer vacation from college with my aunt and uncle. One evening after supper Uncle Philo picked up a city newspaper, and after looking at it a while, he read an account where a public museum had burned, and about everything saved was a case of old coins. A few days after another account in the same paper said that the coins were sold at auction to a club of collectors, and the proceeds were to be used to help refurnish the museum which they were planning to rebuild. Then went on a list of the coins and to whom each were sold, and the fabulous prices paid for some of them. We were all very attentive when it spoke of what looked like an old Dutch penny without a date, which was sold to Captain Miles Burbank of the mammoth ocean liner Calaveras. Of course that's as far as the information went, but it was enough to make us all believe that it was the same coin which I had found

Nothing more was heard, or, after a time, thought of it, and the summer passed away. It was late in the fall and I was eating a dairy lunch when my ear caught the announcement yelled by a newsboy that the Calaveras had collided with an iceberg, boat sunk and nearly all on board drowned. I purchased a paper and read the account. Captain Burbank had gone down with his boat.

During Yuletide I ran down to see Uncle Philo. The first thing he said was: "Well, Henry, we're rid of that pesky coin at last. I'll bet a cookey it went down with that Calaveras boat." Whether that was the case or not, none of us ever heard anything more of the coin, nor of any accident or incident in connection with coins.

The foregoing is my knowledge of the beginning and end of the "Old Dutch Penny." None of my relation that I know of, nor myself, are superstitious, but Aunt Lucy and I must agree with Uncle Philo, that "it might just 'o happened that way," and then with a submissive shake of the head, he adds, "but there was something mighty funny about it." And the three of us are of the feling that we would rather the "Old Dutch Penny" would lay at the bottom of the sea than to be in our possession.

CZAR OF RUSSIA VISITS CAUCASUS FRONT

Grand Duke Nicholas (No. 1), commander of the Russians fighting the Turks in the Caucasus, showing the czar (No. 2), as well as English and Russian officers; a fort destroyed by his big guns.

THE KITCHEN

SHORTCAKE.

Two cups sifted pastry flour, one-half teaspoon salt, one-half tablespoon sugar, four teaspoons baking powder, one-half cup butter and about two-thirds cup of cold milk. Mix and sift dry ingredients. Work in shortening with tips of fingers, then add milk gradually, mixing with a knife. Take out on a flour board, pat into shape then cut dough into two pieces. Roll out each half to fit a round shallow plate. Bake in hot oven about ten minutes. When done butter the bottom crusts. Cover one-half with a layer of sliced peaches, oranges or whole strawberries, slightly sweetened. Put on upper crust, cover with a layer of the fruit and coat with pulverized sugar or whipped cream.

SANDWICH PASTE.

One pound seeded raisins. One level teaspoon salt. Two tablespoons lemon juice. Two tablespoons orange juice to make sandwich paste. Wash and dry the raisins and put through food chopper; add the fruit juice and salt and mix well; pack in jelly glasses. It will keep a month or more in a cool place, and is always ready to be used between bread, crackers or biscuit. Another good way, is to add to the above recipe one-half cup peanut butter or one cup of nut meats, put through the knife food chopper twice. In that case add one-half cup of orange juice instead of two tablespoons. There is no reason why every mother cannot have the paste on hand for sandwiches.

HOT SLAW.

Shred the cabbage finely, as for cold slaw or cabbage salad, boil rapidly in salted water until tender and drain thoroughly. Make meanwhile a sauce of one tablespoonful of butter, half a teaspoonful of salt, a little pepper and cayenne, and, if it is liked sharp, as much as a cupful of vinegar. The vinegar must be a good one, however, either malt or cider, for the cheap brands contain acetic acid and are very harmful. Pour the sauce over the cabbage, put the cover on the saucepan and let it stand on the side of the range for five minutes, then sauce and cabbage should be perfectly blended.

APPLE CHARLOTTE.

Six large tart apples, one-half cupful of sugar, one-half box gelatin, one cup cold water, one pint cream. Pare and strain apples, then press through a colander and add sugar to them while hot. Add the gelatin, which has soaked for half an hour in the cold water, and stir until dissolved. Stand in a pan of ice water and stir continually until the mixture begins to thicken; then fold in the cream, which has been beaten to a stiff froth. Turn into a pudding mold and serve when cold.

OYSTER SALAD.

Let fifty oysters come just to a boil in their own liquor, skim them out and season with three tablespoonfuls of vinegar, a little salt and pepper. Cut enough celery to make a pint, using only the tender part; when ready to serve mix well with the oysters. Have ready a little more than half a pint of mayonaise dressing; add part of this to the oysters and celery. Arrange in a salad dish, pour over the remainder of dressing, garnish with white celery leaves.

Spring Fever Blisters

By "Three Aiches," Kensett, Ia.

Every person with a few spare dollars is looking for everything to expand—except those year-before-last tires.

Will the histories of the future say "Columbus discovered America," or "Villa discovered Columbus?" But at that, Villa may die—like Columbus—without really knowing just what he discovered.

As the editor of the old Hell's Canyon Lariat was wont to say, "the road up the canyon is so near straight no Mexican ever come up it—so we don't number any of that animal on our census sheet—'cept two in the cemetery."

And now the patriots at home are kicking because the Mexican government hasn't got hard surfaced roads in the northern part of the country. And they're going to town every day over worse roads than nature has made across the deserts of Chihuahua.

Perhaps some of the opponents to the plan of "getting Villa" may be quite heavily interested financially in disposing of war supplies and ammunition to foreign countries at a sky-line price, and think maybe Uncle Sam will requisition a few hundred pounds and set the price himself—which he has a right to do.

We learn there are very many converts to Christianity when on their death beds. Perhaps this explains why a person who has never subscribed for the home paper nearly always remembers the editor when it comes to publishing an obituary notice for some member of his family. And did you ever hear of an editor refusing?

California is experiencing the beginning of a fight between the "soaking wets" and the "awful drys." Considering that the state produces something like a third of a billion dollars worth of wine and allied products, this is going to be some fight—grain vs. fruit, as it were—and we've always understood that California was preeminently a fruit producing state.

Yes, we've got just fourteen men in this town that can tell Gen. Pershing just how to conduct the campaign. And there's a lot more at the state capital among the National Guardsmen that have got the idea that they are Napoleons of strategy. But it don't worry us—it's in line with ideas some 344 men got that they could run this newspaper better than the man who has had years of experience and has got his money invested.

HERE'S DUST SPRAY BOOSTER.

Time and Money Saver Is Verdict of Missouri Valley Orchardist.

"Its cheaper," is the brief argument that C. H. Deur states in favor of the dust spray, which he used so successfully in his 60-acre orchard at Missouri Valley the past season.

"I used dust sprays to save money and did it," states Mr. Deur. "My three dust sprayings cost me but $203. I was able to spray my 60 acres in two and a half days each time. I used a dust mixture composed of 50% flowers of sulfur, 15% lead arsenate and 35% hydrate of lime." Mr. Deur also used a liquid lime sulfur spray 1 to 10 at the time the blossoms showed pink.

Besides costing less, the dust spray is easier to apply in hilly sections, because it eliminates the use of a heavy spray tank.

Some people wear glasses because they can't believe their own eyes.

Pretense isn't natural; nature never pretends.

Of Interest to Women Readers

NEEDLEWORK

Every mother likes to see her small daughter look well at all times. But girls as well as boys, get their clothes soiled at play, and while boys can be put into overalls or rompers, according to their age, few mothers will like to see their little girls dressed in these homely garments. But there will be no objection to miniature bungalow aprons on the order of those worn by the mothers, especially if a pretty color is chosen.

To make the apron measure off twice the length from the shoulder of the wearer to the edge of her dress allowing for a deep hem, fold this and cut the top in kimono fashion, taking out under the arms to below the waist line, then cut straight across to the selvage edges. This fullness is plaited or gathered and set after cutting slits in the body of the apron to fit. A strip of the material holds the fullness down. If preferred, the skirt part may be gored all the way down, but the child does not get the freedom the fullness allows.

These aprons are quite easy to make at home. The best kind of materials to use are the soft cotton poplins, ratine cotton and silk mixtures in the cheaper grades and the crepe goods. In fact any fabric that does not demand too much in the way of laundering will answer, provided, of course, it is fairly substantial.

The neck is cut square and edged with a white band, as are the kimono sleeves.

The closing is in the back from neck to waistline or for convenience in laundering it may button all the way down. Anyway it is an even thing. The time spent in making the extra closing will be saved when it comes to ironing. For the fabrics mentioned very little ironing is necessary.

The bloomers are no more difficult to make than the aprons.

Good Housekeeping.

It has been said that there must be something essentially vulgar in any woman, whatever her opportunities of culture may have been, who despises the homely tasks of housekeeping and home making, tasks which the wisest and the most cultured women have delighted in. Whatever advantages the young housewife may have had in the way of education, whatever opportunities for culture and accomplishment, those who make for good in her position as professor in housewifery.

She must be able to cook and serve a wholesome dinner, and at the same time be competent to preside over the same with dignity and grace. She must be an adept at making, mending, and nursing; she must be a financier, a resourceful business manager, and a general all round house chief.

Genius has been defined as the power of persistence; and when a housewife becomes disheartened over the small daily trials of housekeeping, or perplexed and worried over problems that seem hard to solve, she must remember that perfection in any profession requires time, study, and practice; and a perfect system of housekeeping must be a gradual development. At first, there may be mistakes and discouragements, but with patience and persistence the plucky housewife will sooner or later find herself mistress of the situation; the household machinery will begin to run smoothly; and tasks which at first seemed hard and perplexing will become simple and easy.

Thru practice the brain will become quick to conceive and comprehend; and the hands deft and clever to perform all the tasks that make for the upbuilding and maintaining of that most beautiful and enduring earthly structure, a true and harmonious home. Wherever you find such a home you will be sure to find a patient, painstaking, intelligent, and loving housewife as its maker.

Recipes.

French Mutton Stew—Take 1 1-2 pounds of neck or shoulder of mutton cut in pieces, five cents worth of carrots and turnips, 2 onions, and a sprig of parsley. Brown a tablespoon of flour with about the same quantity of butter. When brown add meat, then the vegetables cut in rounds—put one clove in one of the onions—add pepper, salt and 2 cups of cold water. Cover tight and simmer two hours. One hour before serving add a few potatoes to the stew.

Panned Baked Sweet Potatoes—Boil sweet potatoes until done, drain peel and slice. Butter a baking dish, put in layer of sliced potatoes, sprinkle rather thickly with light brown sugar and dot with bits of butter. Add another layer of potatoes with sugar, butter and so on. When dish is full, put in oven and bake, covered for half an hour and uncovered for half an hour.

Apple Pie—Line a deep dish with plain paste, fill with sliced apples, dust with grated nutmeg, add a dash of salt and a little powdered cinnamon, cover with a top crust made richer by the addition of butter. Bake in a moderate oven. Make a sirup of 1 cup of sugar and two tablespoons of water and pour it into the pie thru the slits in the upper crust as soon as it is taken from the oven.

The Lincoln memorial, for which ground was broken in Washington Feb. 12, 1914, is now a little over half completed. It should be finished in two more years.

AMERICAN KISSES PUZZLED JAP BOY

YOUTH NOW STUDENT AT MINNESOTA U., TELLS OF EARLY IMPRESSIONS

STUDYING DAIRY HUSBANDRY

Considered "Lipping the Cheek" an Odd Method of Salutation

Minneapolis, Minn.—"Why do you lip my cheek?" the Japanese boy inquires of his teacher. "That is a funny way of loving. My father and mother love me, but they never lip my cheek."

Back in flowery Hanamaki Iwate Ken, Japan, some 10 years ago, a young boy wrote in the 1,000 letter alphabet of the Japanese his impressions of the first white woman he saw, of the first kiss he received, of the first American he knew, and kept them in his diary. That diary written by Keisuke Obara, who is now a student at the University of Minnesota, has been transcribed into English by the author. The cryptic letters yield a strikingly naive bit of young Japanese thought.

The dairy is dated from February 25, 1905, and runs on for a year, or until Mr. Obara's departure for the United States.

Obara and the first white woman came face to face on the first page.

"I met a strange person in the park today," he records. "I could not tell whether that person was a man or a woman. She told me that she was an American lady. She must have been, because she had long hair. She had a funny hat on her head. I could not think a lady wearing a hat. All my friends ran away when she came toward us.

"She was so tall, dressed in the funniest kind of dress I ever saw. It was anything but a kimono. Her complexion was so sickly white, her nose so prominent, her eyes so big and blue. I never saw a person with blue eyes. My father, mother, sisters and myself all have black eyes. I wonder why.

"I also was afraid, but I stay. My father says I a samurai, a born Knight of Japan, and I remember.

"She spoke to me and asked if I was not afraid of her. I told her I was a samurai and not afraid of even ghosts."

On the date of March 1, 1906, he writes down in the booklet his first opinion of American children.

"Yankee children awfully clumsy children," he says.

He had seen one, and that one couldn't fly a kite.

"Americans speak so funny Japanese," another page tells.

In September of the same year he writes:

"Once Miss B. asked me what I wanted to be when I grew up. Pointing to the rising sun I told her that I wanted to be a general and get the order of the Rising Sun from the Mikado. Miss B. told me most American children want to make big money, and I thought was an awfully funny ideal for boys to have."

GAZE AT OBJECT; HYPNOTIZED

University Professor shows Boys they Can Perform Queer Stunts

Columbia, Mo.—A demonstration of hypnotism by Prof. Mox Myer, head of the psychology department at the University of Missouri, showed that hypnosis can be induced without the influence of a hypnotist.

Professor Myer hypnotized students by having them gaze fixedly at a bright object with no sound to distract attention.

Later he suggested that one hypnotized student was an artist painting a picture; another a wounded soldier home from the trenches; still another an intoxicated diner out, and the students acted their parts.

Lee S. Eads of Hamilton, Mo., was the star subject in Professor Myer's demonstration of hypnotism.

OLD SAFE YIELDS MONEY; MAN'S NAME IS CLEARED

Secret Spring Reveals $340 Missed Fifty Years Ago—Clerk Wrongfully Suspected.

Davenport, Ia.—The mere touching of a secret spring releasing a hidden drawer in an old post office safe, revealing $340 in currency, has cleared the black stain covering for 50 years the name of Edward Elliott, once a trusted employe of the government in the United States revenue office at Indianapolis, Ind. At his modest home in the interior of Idaho, where he, years ago settled on a claim, Elliott, now gray hai[illegible]nd aged, learned with joy that the suspicion directed toward him following the mysterious disappearance of the money had been wiped away.

When the shortage was discovered he was forced to make up the deficit from his own savings. He was unable to make a satisfactory explanation of the mysterious disappearance of the money. A few years later he left the Government service and settled on his present claim in Idaho.

A few days ago, John Ohde, a clerk in the Davenport postoffice, in putting away registered mail in the old safe, accidentally touched the spring, which released the hidden drawer and the money. He turned his find over to Postmaster Fred Sharon.

Post office inspectors immediately began to trace the travels of the old safe. Digging into the governmental records of fifty years, they found the safe had at one time been in the Indianapolis postoffice. Records cannot explain why the money was never found in the secret compartment, but it is thought one of Elliott's assistants unwittingly put it here and forgot the incident.

Postal authorities at Washington have been asked to turn over the contents of the drawer to Elliott.

MAN STILL LIVES WHO KEPT NAPOLEON AWAKE

Now 103 Years old and resident of Kansas—Was Born in Wittenberg, Germany.

Omaha, Neb.—There is a man living at Howard, Kan., who once kept Napoleon Bonaparte awake when he might have been enjoying a refreshing sleep. That man is John Munsinger, now 103 years old.

Munsinger was a baby in Wittenberg, Germany, in 1812 when Napoleon with his grand army was on the march to Russia. A huge division of the army camped in and about Wittenburg one night while on the way to the fatal invasion of the Czar's land. Napoleon and his empress, Marie of Austria, in casting about the city for a nice home in which to stop, put up for the night at the Munsinger residence.

Now John Munsinger was just the tiniest kind of a baby at that time, and his milk was not agreeing with him. So he exercised his lungs most lustily during the fore part of the night, and the great French emperor and his Empress could not get to sleep for over an hour after retiring.

Napoleon was a good loser however, and did not complain. In fact, he cared little about sleep at that time. He was planning the great raid on Russia and Moscow. Indeed, he sat up late that night talking it all over with the Empress.

Recently John Munsinger celebrated his 103d birthday. He wrote his autograph for the guests without glasses. He told funny stories, enjoyed his dinner and after dinner cleared the floor and danced a jig.

"Don't get the blues," he said. "That is the way to live to be 100. Blues kill people. I never let them bother me."

Watch the hired man with your horses. If they cringe, dodge or show signs of fear when with him, take my advice and "fire" him. A good horse is spoiled when he is a victim of fear.

Millions of pounds of wool are imported annually to supply the home demand. Why not grow this wool on your own soil and keep the money in the family?

The cost of twenty or thirty bushels of oats fed to the colt during the winter will be worth more than twice as much in its growth and development.

UNDERGROUND DWELLING LATEST KANSAS WONDER

Lower Gallery Is Sixty Feet Below the Earth's Surface—Descent Made With Ladders

Hardtner, Kan.—Walter Griffin, a farmer, has a curiosity in the shape of an underground dwelling near this place. He has devoted many months to the work. Hundreds of people have visited his odd home, which reaches into the ground to a depth of about 60 feet, but instead of going straight down it is really an underground gallery, extending from one ledge to another, and arranged with ladders and platforms.

The top of the well is closed by a doorway and lock. On opening the door one finds a hole in the ground with a ladder leading down into darkness. Going down the ladder, one comes to a ledge several feet in width, to the side of which is a room about 20 feet square, dug out of the earth.

From the ledge another ladder leads downward, and another ledge is reached. Here the attempt was made to make a gallery of 200 feet back into the earth, which is not finished, tho it is intended to be, according to those who live in the vicinity. From this point the well leads down successive steps in sigzag fashion to the bottom, where there is five or six feet of water.

Not only is the home alone remarkable, but the sinking of it is none the less so. Grifin dug his well himself, throwing the dirt and rock (for a portion of the excavation is thru solid rock) up from one ledge to the next one above until he reached the ladders, where he put it in buckets and carried it by hand to nearby buffalo wallows.

The people living in the neighborhood say he lived almost entirely on crackers during the months it took to do the digging. It will be one of the wonders of the state when finished.

TIME GOES BACKWARD ON THIS LEFT HANDED WATCH

Jeweler Constructs Timepiece to Suit "Southpaw" Daughter, Who Complained.

Kalamazoo, Mich.—E. B. Foley, a local jeweler has made the fabled reaper obey that poetic summons, "Backward, turn backward, O Time, in your flight." He has accomplished the seemingly impossible thing by the simple expedient of inventing a left-handed watch.

Instead of running from left to right as is the case with ordinary timepieces, Mr. Foley's watch sends its hands around from right to left.

The watch was made because one of the inventor's daughters complained that the left handed person has such a slim chance in life—machinery, street car doors and even the hands on the clock going toward the right hand, as if to balk the person who happened to be left handed.

HARD NUT FOR THE SQUIRRELS

Knife Probably 72 Years old in Nest Partly Nibled

Milan, Tenn.—Jim Jackson, mail carrier out of here, has a pocket knife that was found a few days ago by Jake Roberts in a squirrel hole in a big tree three miles south of Lavonia on the Forked Deer River. Near the tree was a birch tree with the name of Leroy McAlexander, 1843, cut into the bark.

The horn of the knife has been almost completely eaten off by the squirrels. It is thought that McAlexander dropped the knife by the birch tree and the squirrels carried it to their nest for food, seventy-two years ago.

TOOTH SAVES WOMAN'S LIFE

Chester, Pa.—Mrs. A Paccio, 25 years old who lives at Leiperville, had a remarkable escape from being killed when a revolver that C. Moccia was handling was accidentally discharged. The bullet struck her in the mouth, knocking out one tooth and tearing away part of the upper lip. She was taken to the Chester Hospital for treatment, suffering more from shock than injury.

INDIANS TRAINED TO FORGET TRAITS

500 RED CHILDREN BEING TRAINED IN WAYS OF WHITES BY GOVERNMENT

ARE SUPPORTED BY CONGRESS

Every Public Convenience Maintained In School at Chilocco, Ok.

Chilocco, Ok.—At Chilocco, Ok., the government is endeavoring to efface from the minds of Indian boys and girls all memory of their ancestors' primal traits. This work has been in progress since January, 1884.

The school is known as the United States Indian school and was founded for the use of Indian children born to members of the five civilized tribes. Congressional appropriations support the school, which has become a public school for all Indian children. No tribal funds are diverted to support the institution, and although children born to members of the five civilized tribes were not eligible as students at the time the school was founded, no Indian children are now barred because of their tribal membership. Practically every Indian tribe in the United States is now represented at the school, the Oklahoma Indians forming the majority of the students, and the Cherokees predominate.

Chilocco, of about 800 inhabitants, is isolated on a tract of land embracing 8,640 acres owned by the government and immediately south of the Oklahoma-Kansas boundary line. The land is within Kay county.

When a visitor leaves the train at Chilocco he looks toward the west and there sees the only evidence of habitation. The group of buildings comprising the Chilocco Indian school is silhouetted on the horizon, about one and one half miles distant, though because of several long swales in the road leading to the school the distance is very deceptive.

The principle buildings constructed of yellow limestone, stand on a treeless and wind swept prairie. With the exception of the trees around the group of buildings, there is scarcely a tree to greet the eye at Chilocco. The trees on the campus have the appearance of having been grown by man.

The landscape artist and the architect who planned Chilocco Indian School evidently intended that all principle buildings composing the group would be constructed around a quadrangle, but the buildings have overflowed the "quad."

Those in charge of the school live in modest cottages between the campus and the railroad station. On the walls of their rooms hang pictures portraying much of the old Indian life. On the walls of the rooms in the dormitories where the Indian boys and girls live there is but little to suggest the carefree life their ancestors lived.

Mr. Schall explained that the policy of the government is to keep from the eye and ear of the Indian students everything suggestive of the camp life and the war path. The government endeavors to bring to the eye and the ear of the students everything suggestive of civilization.

Apparently those in charge of the school devote considerable attention to inculcating refinement, cheerfulness and politeness in the minds of the students. The Indian students at Chilocco are not stoics. Their faces are animated and a smile invariably greets a visitor.

There are 535 students in the school 290 being boys. The boys are not given military training, but they go thru a daily exercise resembling the dismounted cavalry drill.

Periodically the boys and girls are permitted to go to Arkansas City, the trip days being alternated, the boys going one Saturday and the girls the next.

All students have an opportunity to attend religious services of their own choosing. The Ministerial Alliance of Arkansas City sends a minister to the school each Sunday, and the priest at Newkirk visits the school each Sunday.

There is a strong Y. M. C. A. among the male student body, and the meetings are well attended.

All the buildings are heated by steam and the residences supplied with gas from the Blackwell gas field southwest of the reservation.

The electric light plant and the waterworks system at Chilocco are operated by students, and the place has a sewer system.

GETS $1,000 FOR OSTRICH EGG

Museum Buys Rare Specimen from a Circus Man's Wife.

Orange, N. J.—Mrs. Robert Gilford, wife of a once widely known circus acrobat, has sold to the Denver Museum of Natural History, an egg of the Aepyornis, an extinct member of the ostrich family which lived in the wilds of Madagascar. This with other relics was gathered by Mr. Gilford. She received $1,000 for the egg.

FRANKLIN IS TO BECOME JUNK

FAMOUS OLD WARSHIP, BUILT AS A SAILING VESSEL, LATER REBUILT AS A STEAMER

MISSED PART IN TWO WARS

Just too Late for 1812, and Being Remodeled in Civil War Time.

Washington, D. C.—The United States steamship Franklin, built in 1815 as a sailing ship of the line to carry 86 guns, rebuilt in 1853-65 as a steam freight, has been sold at auction to become junk.

The Franklin missed the war of 1812, her construction having been begun in 1815. She was launched the same year. While built to carry 86 guns she was rated at a 74-gun ship, with a displacement of 2,257 tons. During her first year in commission the Franklin had three commanding officers—Capt. S. S. J. Smith, A. Murray and Charles Stewart.

In 1817-20 she served as the flagship of Commodore Charles Stewart of the Mediterranean squadron. About this time the Franklin, on one of her trips across the Atlantic, transported Richard Bush, Minister to England.

When the Franklin was transferred to the Pacific she continued as the flagship of Commodore Stewart, from 1821 to 1824. The next record of the vessel which appears in the Navy Department library is from 1843 to 1851, when she was a receiving ship at Boston.

In 1852 the Franklin was towed to the Portsmouth Navy Yard. The following year she was raised and converted into a screw frigate, designed to carry 51 guns. The steam frigate was to all intents and purposes a new vessel, having different lines and a largely increased displacement. The rebuilding process was long drawn-out, the Franklin not being turned out of the Portsmouth yard until 1866, so that she also missed participation in the Civil War.

The most notable cruise of the Franklin was begun in 1867, when Admiral D. G. Farragut hoisted to her mainmast the first full fledged Admiral's flag flown by any vessel of the American Navy and headed for European waters. She was Farragut's flagship with the European squadron in 1867-1868, and continued in European waters as flagship until 1871. Every where Farragut went in European waters he and his ship were accorded marked courtesy. He was received by the sovereigns, while notables of Great Britain, France, Russia and other countries visited and inspected the vessel. From Farragut's own records it appears that in order to return the many courtesies he lived up to his income to the last dollar. He tells of visits to London, Paris and St. Petersburg, and the audiences with Kings and Emperors, who entertained him and his staff in various ways.

CATCHING MOTHS YIELDS COUPLE $500 YEAR PROFIT

Iowa Man and Wife Found by Specimens Which are Attracted to Their Farm.

Nevada, Ia.—Mr. and Mrs. O. Floyd Hiser of near Nevada have an avocation providing a daily hour of pleasure and $500 profit a year. Trees on their farm long have been the habitat of a colony of the cato cala moth.

They catch the moths and butterflies and sell them to museums, collectors and laboratories, for prices ranging from 5 cents to $1 apiece. Several times they have received orders from abroad.

The Hisers follow the pursuit only early on summer nights. They mark trees with white cloths to attract attention and they spray a solution of sugar and stale beer over the foliage. Often they have caught from 50 to 100 specimens in an hour.

When Glando Gargle is used for a cold in the head it is surprising to see how quickly the clogged nostrils are opened. Adenoids are caused by a neglected cold. Equally effective for sore mouth or sore throat. Price 50 cents. For sale by All Druggists.

ALCOHOL AND INSANITY.

"The seeming indifference of the public and the authorities appears incomprehensible when it is considered what havoc is wrought by alcohol. We spend millions of dollars annually to stamp out and protect the public from infectious diseases, yet the harm done by alcohol is infinitely greater than that caused by all the infectious diseases put together. In our annual admissions to Bellevue hospital of over 3,000 patients (in the wards for mental diseases) more than ten per cent were suffering from insanities due directly to alcohol, and in more than forty per cent alcohol had played a most important part in the causation of the insanity. It seems to me that it would be the greatest aid to humanity if measures might be taken to reduce the consumption of this poison to a minimum, and to provide proper curative institutions for those who have formed a habit but have not passed the curative stage into one of complete mental and physical degeneration. Such an institution should be custodial as well as educational. In such institutions many will find recovery, while, for those who do not, proper restrictions will prevent their leading a life of crime."—Dr. M. S. Gregory of Bellevue Hospital, New York.

FIVE REASONS.

Dr. Henry Williams of New York, an eminent specialist in nervous and mental diseases, has summed up his investigation concerning alcohol in these words:

"I am bound to believe, on the evidence, that if you take alcohol habitually in any quantity whatever, it is to some extent a menace to you. If you do this, I am bound to believe in the light of what science has revealed:

"1. That you are tangibly threatening the physical structures of your stomach, your liver and kidneys, your heart, your blood vessels, your nerves, and brain;

"2. That you are unequivocally decreasing your capacity for working in any field, be it physical, intellectual, or artistic.

"3. That you are in some measure lowering the grade of your mind, dulling your higher esthetic sense, and taking the finer edge off your morals.

"4. That you are distinctly lessening your chances for maintaining health and attaining long life; and,

"5. That you are entailing upon your descendants yet unborn a bond of incalculable misery."

THE CHICKEN FARMERS

By ANNE PAGE.

When, unexpectedly, Paul Hendon had a play accepted and had to rush off to Chicago, where rehearsals were to begin at once, he left Jimmy Dean in charge of his feathered family, consisting mostly of fine laying hens.

Dean and Hendon, chums since school days, had taken the country bungalow in the spring and had considered the selling of one of Hendon's plays as a remote possibility. So they had not hesitated to make the arrangement whereby Hendon, at home all day writing the play, should keep house while Jimmy commuted and earned real money for the upkeep of the shack.

"Those hens will have to be sold," Jimmy decided, as he sat at the open window and pondered the situation over a midnight cigar. "Hendon will be gone a month, at least, and a month of this would land me in Matteawan."

Next morning a newly-painted sign appeared over the doorway of the shack. It announced in neat, homemade letters that fifty-three hens and the necessary equipment were for sale on easy terms.

By Sunday he had almost decided to close the shack and return to town. A perfect summer day, a bracing swim in the sound, the soothing hum of bees in the honeysuckle were potent enough to induce him to try it for another month.

That evening, a soft knock on the door woke him from a nap in his chair.

"We have called to inquire about the chickens," said a cheerful voice just outside the open door.

"If hens are not too difficult we—we think, perhaps, we'd like to buy them," said another voice even more cheerful in tone.

Jimmy looked at the unheralded visitors and decided that they were really worth while; and both girls looked askance at Jimmy. He did not look as if he were an authority on poultry raising, and yet they supposed he must be.

"Difficult?" he repeated. "Why, that is a ridiculous word to apply to anything so absurdly easy. I understand it is as simple as shooting fish, but I really know little about it. Mr. Hendon, who lived with me until some deluded manager in Chicago bought his play, knows all about it. They are fine layers—I know that much." He looked appealingly at the young women, and because of the sympathetic expression he recognized in the eyes of one of them he told them his bachelor troubles.

When he had finished his pathetic account Polly Warner and Fanny Turner exchanged suggestive glances. "Fan," said the former softly, "don't you think we could manage to prepare Mr. Dean's eggs and coffee for him and leave them at his door each morning? We will be up early, you know, feeding the chickens."

Fannie Turner nodded. "I'm sure we could."

"I'd have to pinch myself to believe it was real if I found my breakfast at the door," Jimmy said.

"You see," Fannie continued shyly, "we were going to ask you if we could continue to use your hennery until we found a suitable place of our own. But we are stopping over there"—indicating a house near by—"for the time being, and we don't want to lose this opportunity to buy. Miss Warner and I want to try our hand at chicken raising, and if you would let us—" She stopped and turned her wistful eyes full upon Jimmy.

"The arrangement you suggest would be fine. Use the run as long as you like—and the whole garden," Jimmy said.

Hendon's hens received the most scientific of treatment from that day on. But the care they received was no less perfect than was that accorded to Jimmy Dean. He found himself rising a half hour earlier than was his custom, owing to the fact that the soft laughter of girls was to be heard beneath his windows.

Once or twice he ventured to make his appearance as the girls were leaving, and managed to have a short chat with them. Polly Warner's quick laughter and merry glances haunted him through the days. He was falling in love with her.

One morning after an absence of six weeks, Hendon suddenly appeared and found Jimmy, Polly and Fannie in the hen-run.

It was Fannie who saw him first. It was Fannie who uttered a loud cry of surprise and made a rush for the arms he extended.

Jimmy gasped, Polly smiled complacently.

"Well, I'll—" Jimmy did not finish, for want of breath.

"Oh, it is all right—they're engaged," explained Polly.

"Ah—yes, I had gathered as much."

Polly glanced swiftly at Jimmy. "Paul knew that you would be helpless after he left," she went on rapidly. "He said he always took a motherly interest in you and—well, really, he foresaw and arranged this whole thing."

"Not quite all of it, I think," said Jimmy knowingly. "Come—Polly, let's take a little walk. We're not wanted here, and I want to tell you the part Paul didn't plan."

Jimmy was mistaken. Paul Hendon with his facility for stories and situations, had actually planned this very ending.

HEARD AROUND THE CORNER

Black Box, Saturday.

Margaret Swineford has been on the sick list for the past week.

Ed Bishop, wife and son of Auburn, were guests of M. T. Bishop and wife, over Sunday.

Dr. Farnham has been on the sick list for the past week, and was unable to care for his practice.

The cost of primary election is being figured now and in this county the expense amounts to $2,825.80 or each vote cast cost the taxpayers 60 cents.

Saturday was a busy day for our merchants. The roads being almost impassible and together with the high water, the farmers east of town were not able to do their trading here until that day. Read THE NEWS and keep posted as to who of our merchants are offering you real bargains.

Rube Wilkins played at the Widney all last week and he says he had better crowds than at Hicksville. His program was vaudeville and pictures. Due to his success here he has planned to return in June for another week. In his talk Saturday afternoon on the street, he advocated that everybody buy of their local merchants and thus help make St. Joe a better town.

One of the most remarkable events to be "pulled off" in this part of the country will take a good many of our people to Ft. Wayne in June when the Centennial celebration is scheduled to take place. There will be four days of the affair, the first to be devoted to the interests of fraternal societies which will hold an immense parade. Another parade to be given later during the celebration will be made up of hundreds of floats representing the industrial features of Fort Wayne. But the big event—the one which is causing the most talk—appears to be the historic pageant, or outdoor play, which will be given for three nights at one of the city parks, where a seating arrangement is being made to accommodate 15,000 spectators each night. The amphitheatre fronts on an island located in an artificial lake where there will be placed an immense stage upon which the thrilling history of the early days of Ft. Wayne will be told by a cast of 500 actors. Many of our people have already expressed an interest in seeing this big spectacle, for it concerns deeply our own city and community. The same people who made Fort Wayne's location possible were "our" heroes, too, and we want to see them in real action.

A Cure for the Blues.

Have you ever met with the man or woman who is a victim of the blues? They feel that fate is against them. They worry and stew about imaginary ills until life becomes a burden.

Many a man has made a business failure and given up in dispair all because he had the blues.

We should not consider such conditions lightly, for there is a deep secret underlying every case of the blues.

The person whose physical condition is normal, is optemistic; adversities only make them more cautious and more determined to succeed.

If the liver is not acting properly the system becomes full of poisonous accumulations, the kidneys and the stomach and intestinal glands become suggish and a general debilitateed and nervous condition exists.

The blood becomes impure, the circulation sluggish and the brain clouded.

GLANDO is the best remedy for the blues. It is a general gland tonic that starts up the glandular action, drives off the accumulated poisons and builds up the system. A 50 cent package contains three seperate treatments, each treatment having a specific part to perform in effecting a cure.

Everyone Should Drink Hot Water in the Morning

Wash away all the stomach, liver, and bowel poisons before breakfast.

To feel your best day in and day out, to feel clean inside; no sour bile to coat your tongue and sicken your breath or dull your head; no constipation, bilious attacks, sick headache, colds, rheumatism or gassy, acid stomach, you must bathe on the inside like you bathe outside. This is vastly more important, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do, says a well-known physician.

To keep these poisons and toxins well flushed from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, drink before breakfast each day, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will cleanse, purify and freshen the entire alimentary tract, before putting more food into the stomach.

Get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from your pharmacist. It is inexpensive and almost tasteless, except a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant. Drink phosphated hot water every morning to rid your system of these vile poisons and toxins; also to prevent their formation.

To feel like young folks feel: like you felt before your blood, nerves and muscles became saturated with an accumulation of body poisons, begin this treatment and above all, keep it up! As soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening and purifying, so limestone phosphate and hot water before breakfast, act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.

DRUGS EXCITE YOUR KIDNEYS, USE SALTS

If your Back is aching or Bladder bothers, drink lots of water and eat less meat.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

HOUSEHOLD WISDOM.

Hard boiled eggs chopped fine and mixed with mustard, a little cream and seasoning will make a delicious sandwich.

It is a good idea to save, if possible, a definite sum for furniture replacements. This applies especially to the keeper of a new house.

New blankets should be shaken and soaked in cold water overnight to take out the sulphur dressing and make them more easily washed.

Whenever possible save the green leaves of a head of lettuce for egg salad, while the hearts are kept for the tomato, fruit and other salads.

A weak solution of turpentine poured down the water pipes once a week will drive the water bugs away.

Shabby oak should be brushed over with warm beer and when thoroughly dry polished with beeswax and turpentine.

Furs that have become fat and oily looking about the neck may be made fresh and like new by rubbing the fur the wrong way with a hot iron. Furs that have been wet should never be hung in front of a stove or an open fire to dry.

For mud stains on dresses dissolve a little carbinate of soda in water and with it wash the mud stains. Another plan is to rub the stains with a cut raw potato, afterward removing the potato juice by rubbing it with a flannel dipped in water.

In cold weather put the clothespins in a pan and set in the oven until they are hot. Then the fingers will not suffer when hanging out the clothes, especially if the clothes are rinsed out the last time in warm water.

To clean bamboo furniture use a brush dipped in warm water and salt. The salt prevents the bamboo from turning color.

To clean lamp burners wash them in wood ashes and water and they will come out clean and bright.

If lemons are warmed before they are squeezed nearly double the quantity of juice will be obtained.

If you want to save gas, remember that a sheet of tin placed over the smallest gas jet will heat two flatirons as quickly as if two jets were used.

Muslin and cotton goods can be rendered fireproof by putting an ounce of alum in the last rinsing water, or by putting it in the starch.

A mouse hole can be effectually stopped for all time by pasting over it a piece of cloth which has been liberally sprinkled with red pepper.

Mrs. Mabel Miller of Osceola, Mo., whose display of white corn excelled everything in its class at the Panama-Pacific exposition, was the only woman in the United States to win a gold medal for an individual agricultural exhibit.

FARM & GARDEN

USE OF SALT AS FOOD

Its Impurities are chiefly elements of Value to Plant Growth, While in Moderate Quantity It Aids Digestion in Animals

Pure salt is composed of only two simple elements, sodium and chlorine, 39.4 per cent of the former and 60.6 per cent of the latter. But common salt purchased as dairy, barreled or bagged and land salt, contains small quantities of impurities. These impurities, the chemist tells us are gypsum, which is calcium sulphate; chloride of lime and chloride of magnesia. About 92 to 97 per cent of land, dairy and barreled salt is composed of sodium chlorides. Neither of these elements of sodium chloride is essential to plant growth, and therefore, pure salt is not a direct food for plants, but among the impurities of common salt are substances essential to plant growth and therefore of manurial value.

Gypsum contains lime and sulphur, chlorides of lime and magnesia containing respectively lime and magnesia, both essential to plant growth. Therefore 92 to 97 per cent of the total weight of salt has no direct manurial value, but a small percentage, 1.5 to 6.5, may have. It is only the sodium chloride of common salt that benefits animals. The impurities here have no value. The constituents, sodium and chlorine, though not essential to plant growth, are essential to animal growth. It is just as essential that animals have salt as nitrogenous matter; without either one animals cannot exist long.

Though not an essential substance in vegetable matter, all plants contain more or less salt. The quantity contained, however, is not sufficient for the animal's requirements; an additional quantity should be supplied in the food. It is a very common practice for farmers to salt their animals once every week or two. This is not the best way to salt animals. Salted in this way they consume three or four times the quantity that should be taken in any one day. This excessive amount has a bad effect on animals nutrition. In a few days the animals not being able to store up a supply in the system, are insufficiently supplied. Animals should have free access to salt when at all possible. The elements of salt are essential constituents in certain of the digestive fluids. In the gastric juice, for instance, the digestive fluid of the fourth stomach of ruminants, as cows and sheep, corresponding to the single stomach of nonruminants as horses, chlorine is essential. Without it the fluid loses its digestive power. Independently of imparting flavor, salt does aid digestion. Probably the greatest objection to irregular salting is the excessive amount eaten at one time when fed in this way. It has several objectionable sequels; one is the increased urinary secretions, causing thirst and excessive drinking. This increased urinary secretion is accompanied by an increased destruction of nitrogenous tissue in the animal's system, which means a decrease in weight and a waste of food. Irregular salting has other bad effects, and to practice it means at least a degree of derangement of the digestive system and a loss of flesh and feed. A supply should be kept in a little box or manger where the animals can take and lick it whenever they desire. They themselves are best able to judge of the quantity equired each day. Rock salt seems to be most suitable for feeding to animals. A lump of rock salt may be kept in the feed boxes of horses, cows and sheep. Cooked feed should always be salted before being fed, as the cooking eliminates the salt in the food to a large extent.

Aged Sows the Best for Breeding

An investigation at the Iowa experiment station to discover the influence of the age sows upon the profilicacy and the weight and growth of the pigs they produced gave some interesting results. It was found, for example, that fifteen sows bred at eight or nine months averaged 7 2-3 pigs per litter, while fourteen sows about 24 months old averaged 9.6 pigs per litter, and aged sows averaged 10.6 pigs per litter. Pigs from the younger sows weighed on an average 2.39 pounds per pig, from the two year old sows, 2.63, and from the aged sows 2.61 pounds. When about six weeks old the pigs from the young sows made an average daily gain of .32 pounds, while the pigs from the two year old sows gained .40 pounds. No data are given on the gain of the pigs from the aged sows.

Stated in another way it was found that the two year old sows farrowed 24 per cent more pigs than the young sows, while the old sows farrowed 30 per cent more. The weight of the pigs from the two year olds sows was 9 per cent greater than that of the young sows, while the pigs from the old sows were 12 per cent larger than from the young sows. The pigs from the two year old sows made a more rapid gain than those from the young sows, amounting to 28 per cent. In each instance the older sows farrowed more pigs a litter, heavier pigs at birth, and their pigs made the most rapid growth after birth.—Coburn's "Swine in America.

An uncomfortable suffering pig can not be a profitable one.

HOW TO HAVE CLEAN SEED

The modern seed grader and fanning mill is an important machine on the farm and is without doubt one of the best investments a farmer can make. It will add to the value of every crop he plants. The modern seed grader and fanning mill in the first place removes all the impurities and foreign atter from the grain and in the second place separates the different grades of the grain itself, eliminating the small weazened kernels that would produce only stunted stalks and carefully selecting the large, even, fully developed kernels that mean big yields of fine quality. Planting only such seed not only assures a big yield of large, full-eared grain next year, but it means with proper selection a constant grading up each crop—a still bigger, better yield each year of heavier, choicer grain. On the other hand each small undeveloped kernel planted not only means a poorer crop of poorer grain next year, but a constant grading down of your whole crop year after year.

Still worse is the effect of weed-seed that is contained in ungraded grain. There is no question about the evil effect on the tenacity of weeds. Unless carefully guarded against they will overrun any place. Large quantities of them are planted with all ungraded grain. Other large quantities are in the grain fed to animals and are spread over the fields in the manure. Unless the grain for both sowing and feeding is cleaned each succeeding year will show more and more weeds.

All grain as it comes from the shelling or threshing contains much dust, dirt and other foreign substances. Commission men and grain buyers will not pay full prices for such grain. They "dock" the farmer to allow for this. Then after cleaning if they sell his own screenings right back to the farmer at a good price. The buyer thus makes a double profit on his part of the transaction and the farmer loses both ways. The farmer who cleans his grain in his own fanning mill always gets top price for his grain and has his screenings for feeding purposes. With a high grade fanning mill and seed grader any grain or grass seed, wheat, corn, oats, clover, alfalfa etc. may be cleaned and graded quickly and easily. From a large hopper the seed or grain keeps running in a continual stream down over a series of screens over each of which a blast of air is constantly passing and each of which in turn eliminates all dirt and undesirable seed till finally only the choicest kernels are left. A good grader will easily clean and grade 60 bushels of grain per hour, and 40 bushels of clover, alfalfa and such seed. If, however, the cleaning is simply for the market, that is, only the dirt and screenings are removed—the work may be done much faster.—National Stockman and Farmer.

Winter Sheep Feeds.

As indicated by the makeup of its stomach, the sheep is an animal designed for the consumption of rough feeds, such as various sorts of hay and fodder. To keep up the fertility of our soil and to keep our land clean, it is necessary to grow hay crops containing some clover in rotation with crops that may be cultivated, such as fodder or shock corn. Such hay feeds have no particular market value, and should be valued according to the cost of producing them. Grains have a market value, and may be disposed of. A dollar invested in producing rough feeds will produce more feed than a dollar invested in grain at market price. Rough feeds, therefore, should be grown and used as feed for sheep.

Breeding ewes, if in fair condition when put into winter quarters in the fall, are sufficiently prepared for their work by a gain of from 15 to 25 pounds per head. This gain allows for the development of the unborn lamb and the wool crop. Rations to make the ewe gain slightly and yet keep her thrifty, must be carefully made. Some rough feeds contain considerable fibre. With them is is necessary to feed succulent or oily feeds. For example, with oat straw, timothy or oat hay, roots or oil cake should be fed. With clover, which is naturally laxative in effect, such a supplement is not needed. Exercise for the ewes, regularity in feeding, watering and salting, are factors that count in sheep raising.

A few rations that have been fed to ewes in lamb with good results follow. They are the daily feed per 100 pounds live weight: 1. Second crop clover hay alone, 3.5 to 3.7 pounds. 2. Corn fodder in which are nubbins, 3.7 pounds. 3. Second crop clover hay, 1.5 lb.; corn fodder, 1 lb.; oats and corn 3 lb. 4. Second crop clover hay, 1.8 lb.; roots, 1.5 lb.; shelled corn, 0.3 lb. 5. Second crop clover hay 2.5 lb.; barley, 0.55 lb. 6. Corn fodder 2.6 lb.; roots, 1.5 lb.; oats and corn, 0.3 lb. 7. Oat hay, 1.5 lb. and 0.7 of a lb. of grain composed of barley, 98 parts, flaxseed, 2 parts. 8. Oat straw, 2 lb.; roots 1.6 lb. and 0.6 of a pound of grain composed of oats and bran equal parts.—D. A. Gaumnitz, Minn. University.

Every farm and country home should have a medicine cabinet supplied with the standard remedies for immediate use, such as witch hazel, peroxide, iodine, spirits of camphor, alcohol, carbolated vaseline, glycerine absorbent cotton, cotton bandages and such medicines as are likely to be required in an emergency. Keep the medicines in the cabinet and not scattered all over the house and have every bottle plainly labeled.

HINTS FOR POULTRY FANCIERS.

Don't think that oyster shells will answer the purpose of grit. Oyster shell is necessary, as it supplies the hens with the lime which helps to make the egg shells, but it is [illegible] and sharp enough for grit. [illegible] means give the fowls plenty of good grit, it is the hens' teeth for grinding the feed.

Put the nest boxes in the darkest part of the poultry-house. Hens like a dark place to lay in, and at the same time it will prevent the habit of egg eating.

A setting of eggs is usually [illegible] eggs, although many breeders [illegible] their customers fifteen for good measure.

Study your birds all the time. Successful poultry keeping requires some study.

Overfeeding does more harm than good. Make the fowls clean up the daily rations of grain. Overfed [illegible] are poor layers, and more subject to disease.

Read what experienced poultry [illegible] know about keeping poultry. [illegible] poultry library is very essential to success. A good poultry book is a valuable asset.

There are many good breeds of poultry. Study them all carefully [illegible] making the selection and then [illegible] the one which you fancy most [illegible] which will answer your particular purpose the best.

If a grate be rusty blacklead it thoroughly and leave the wet blacklead to dry on it for a day or two. Then clean the grate in the usual way. It will polish beautifully, for the blacklead will have eaten off the rust.

PECULIARITY IN CAST COMPOSITION.

Either Male or Female Characters Dominate in Stories of Horsley Features.

A glance at the three last David Horsley productions featuring Crane Wilbur, and released as Mutual Masterpieces, de luxe edition, brings to light an unusual incident. In the first two releases—"Vengeance Is Mine" and "A Law Unto Himself"—all of the important parts, except one, were male characters. In the third production, "The Love Liar," however, the reverse is the case, and all of the important parts, except two, fall into the hands of women. The two male characters actually concerned in unfolding the story are the "love liar" and his valet, played respectively by Crane Wilbur and Fred Goodwins. The female characters are described as the love liar's first, second, third and fourth love, and the parts are interpreted in the order named, by Lucy Payton, Mae Gaston, Nan Christy and Ella Golden.

These last named players were engaged especially for this picture and are now at work at Mr. Horsley's studio, where the production is reaching the last stage in its completion.

BALD-HEADED MEN USED IN OPERATIONS.

The movies have accomplished another feat—they have created a demand for bald-headed men. Bald heads have long been on the list of undesirable, though those that have them are reluctant to give them up altogether.

There was a time when a row of bald heads was necessarry to the success of a musical comedy, providing as they did, footlight reflectors that aided the little "Twinkletoes" in scoring.

Bald-headed men have been used well and often by inventors of infallible hair restorers and have made their inventors rich. But when such a well-to-do citizen as J. Rockefeller can purchase nothing more satisfying than a toupe to adorn his hairless pate, public confidence in the infallibility of the resterers is far below par. Bald-headed men seem to acquire hair wisdom as their hair refuses all artificial persuasion to remain, and, consequently, these men have lost their value to the inventors.

But through the movies the "baldies" are coming into their own. They are necessary adjuncts to film realism.

This is how it happens. The heroine—Anita Stewart, Lillian Walker or Jewell Hunt, well-known movie queens richly endowed with "woman's crowning glory"—is placed on the operating table while the handsome young surgeon bares his surgical instruments to replace the piece of her skull that made her mentally wobbly. Does the young surgeon shave the head of his sweetheart-patient, as in a real surgical operation? Does Anita or Lillian or Jewell emerge from the anaesthetic with a head like a pool ball and thanks the surgeon for saving her life? She does not.

Nothing like that happens. It goes thusly: Anita or Lillian or Jewell is swathed in bandages, takes one longing look at the surgeon, rolls her eyes as the ether takes hold and then, as the director stops the camera, she gets up from the operating table.

Enters now, the bald-headed man. He is swathed and bandaged like the heroine. He takes her place on the operating table And as the surgeon moves the bandages on the head, before the camera's eye, the shiny pate of the extra looms into view. All around the theatres are heard: "Oh, that's a shame to shave that girl's head just for a moving picture."

They don't do it, gentle reader.

Just as a girl can don a wig and change her appearance, just so can she don a bald-headed man and show her nude scalp. Cheer up, bald-headed men, throw away such time-honored retorts as "Grass does not grow on a busy street," and "One cannot have hair and brains," and adopt a new slogan. Say, "What would movie operations do without us?"

BRONCHO BILLY NOW PRODUCER.

The silence as to his future which followed the retirement of Gilbert M. Anderson, "Broncho Billy," from the Essanay Company, has been broken by the announcement that Anderson contemplates organizing a new company of his own.

The Anderson organization is to open up a new field for motion picture production, it is stated, with New Orleans as its headquarters, and the picturesque scenery of southern Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi and the Gulf Coast of these States and Texas as locale for its settings.

Just at present Mr. Anderson is bothered over the organization of his company, and the selection of a leading woman. The first named task will be more easily accomplished than the last named. Anderson let it be known in New Orleans the other day that he was looking for a leading woman, and he narrowly beat a regiment of applicants for the job out of town. They are said to be visiting the railway stations every day awaiting his return.

Anderson has gone to the Pacific coast for a short business trip, but expects to return to New Orleans within the course of the next two weeks and make final arrangements for the starting of his company. The name of it and the character of pictures to be produced have not yet been announced.

As Broncho Billy is one of the popular characters of the screen drama, and is probably as well known as any other distinctive film character, it is likely that pictures will be produced that will permit the use of this character. Just why no one has ever thought of using New Orleans and the Gulf States for film purposes before is one of the odd things about motion pictures. The light and scenic advantages are almost as great as in California.

OFF THE SCREEN.

J. Warren Kerrigan, under the direction of Otis Turner, is playing the hero role in a five reeler "Sons of the Immortals."

Ethel Barrymore is to give herself to another Metro effect entitled "The Kiss of Hate."

Lubin scenarioists have on their desks Rex Beach's three, "The Barrier," "The Silver Horde," and "The Iron Trail," to be turned into photoplay diagrams.

Miss Bessie Love partners with everybody important since her sudden debut with John Emerson in "The Flying Torpedo." Next she is going to be with Douglas Fairbanks in his coming comedy of chaps and sombrero, "The Good Bad Man," directed by Allan Dwan.

Watterson Rothacker has engaged Vincent V. Colby, creator or the "Colby dog," to do some advertising specialists for the Rothacker company, and also a series of animal cartoons for general entertainment.

FIGHTING AND FARMING.

Since winter on its way is faring, and spring is in again, old Europe's hosts are now preparing to slay about a million men. Great husky youths who should be seeding the fertile fields to wheat and oats, will spend the springtime scrapping, bleeding, intent on cutting strangers' throats. The hills of France shall see no tiller, the vales in vain expect the plow, and death, the dour and dusty miller, is doing all the grist work now. And death is measuring the acres where once the shepherds used to bask, to see that kings and kindred fakers have room to do their butcher's task. And death demands the ox and charger, which used to draw the loaded wain, and everything that will make larger his crimson tally of the slain. Where once the milkmaid drove the heifer, where once the vintner pressed the grape, death's bloody odor taints the zephyr, death flaunts his rusty rags of crape. When to your divers gods you're praying, pray not that either side may win, but for an end to crazy slaying, an end to murder's smoke and din.

WALT MASON.

HAIL NEW DRUG DECISION.

Enforcement of Sherley Amendment Will Drive Out Fake "Cures."

No action of the United States government toward safeguarding the public from fraudulent medical compounds has been of so much importance as the recent decision of the Supreme Court in upholding the constitutionality of the Sherley amendment to the food and drug act, said Charles Wesley Dunn recently, according to the New York Times. Mr. Dunn has made a careful study of the food and drug laws of the states and has been counsel to many of the leading manufacturers.

"The decision means that the government has the authority to prohibit the sale of fraudulent medicinal preparations in the future," said Mr. Dunn. "With the federal food and drug act so interpreted and enforced, the public will be enabled to purchase medicinal compounds with a greater confidence of their curative value than has been the case in the past.

"The decision is aimed not only at the so-called proprietary medicines, but at all such preparations. The prevailing custom in the past has been to use general recommendations for such preparations. For instance, many preparations are sold as cures for rheumatism without specifying whether it is for inflammatory rheumatism or some other type. It is the same way with the countless cough mixtures. The buyer is left to infer that they are good for any kind of cough or throat trouble. The practice in the future must be to make only exact and limited recommendations properly founded upon the merits of the preparation. While the question of the medicinal value of drugs is often uncertain, owing to the conflicting opinions of medical experts and schools, there is a realm within which reasonable assertions may be made as to the therapeutic qualities of medicines. Outside of this, however, there is a broad field where unquestioned fraud has existed and does yet exist in the sale of drugs.

"While the worthless preparations will thus be driven from the market or forced to change their labels so as to apply to particular cases or diseases with a reasonable regard for truthfulness in promising relief, the decision of the Supreme Court will directly benefit the legitimate patent or proprietary medicines which have attained a measure of public merit. It will benefit them because the man in the street, who knows little of medicine, and has to buy his preparations largely upon trust, can now do so with a greater confidence that he is getting something which is not in the fraudulent class. In other words, the reliability of medicinal compounds has been materially enhanced by the decision of the highest courts of the land, as the law now compels specific curative statements."

PAPER TOWELING.

My greatest housekeeping help is a roll of paper toweling in the kitchen, writes a contributor. With it I clean the range, lamps, polish silver and sometimes I spread it on the breakfast table in lieu of a cloth. It costs only a few cents a roll and has many uses.

NEW USE FOR PEANUTS.

Here is a new use for peanuts. Says a doctor: "Eat a handful of peanuts before retiring—the quiet the nerves of the stomach." What do you think about that? Isn't that a rather interesting sleeping potion? Then we are also told to eat them after each meal as an aid to digestion, provided they are fresh roasted. Bought salted peanuts are good, but home made ones are better. So easily prepared, it is a wonder more people do not try them.

Dictates of Fashion

Sleeves are anything but plain.

Black velvet Norfolk jackets are worn with skirts of silk.

A deep old blue taffeta is effectively stitched with gold thread.

The sailor hat will be as modish next summer as in past seasons.

Picot edged ribbons are extensively used as trimmings in bows and bands under chiffons.

A fancy detached skirt yoke of sheer material is gathered to a skirt yoke which is already full. Little shoulder capes appear on both dresses and coats.

Polo sweaters are the latest sporting garment; they are fashioned without sleeves and have no collars. Ball buttons furnish the fastening and smocking holds in the fullness at the waist.

White flannel forms separate skirts for sports wear on cool mornings. Ostrich feather trimming is used on many scarfs and on some of the diaphanous frocks. Its charming effect will no doubt warrant a warm reception on dainty summer frocks.

Triangular pockets trimmed with buttons are of dark blue taffeta, lined with gray blue taffeta, and are on a dress of beige taffeta. A pretty extreme in pockets is a bit of a patch pocket of taffeta on marquisette, terminating in long ends of narrow ribbon.

Narrow box plaited ruching is used around the bottom of bodices, to edge cuffs and deep pocket effects at the sides of a skirt or it is placed in a narrow width around the bottom of a skirt. A dress of sheer material has the skirt carried above the belt in ruche effect.

Among smart underwear are seen short drawers with a ruffle attached to a yoke and mounted on three rows of cording. Another ruffle goes around the lower edge and up the sides. The ruffles are starched to carry out the pannier effect of a gown. The newest corset covers have basques of lace or ruffles forming panniers on the sides. Silk voile is much used for lingerie.

EVENING WRAP OF BLACK AND GOLD.

The spirit of the far east is reflected in many of the spring modes. This is especially true of evening wraps, which are truly oriental in their splendor of rich embroideries, wonderful colors, and lavish use of beautiful metallic laces. Many of the new models show a strong Chinese influence, particularly in color effects, and broad bands of lace take the place of fur which distinguished the wraps of the winter.

A handsome model is shown in the accompanying illustration, and, although striking, is at the same time in extremely good taste. The upper part of the coat is of black satin. It is shirred across the shoulders and trimmed with narrow bands of gold lace. These bands of lace apppear on the full skirt section, which is fashioned of striped gold tissue over yellow chiffon. An extremely decorative effect is achieved by wide bands of heavy gold lace patterned in striking design, which extend from neck to hem and are edged with black satin. Black satin also forms the deep hem, and is used again for the high rippling collar which frames the face becomingly. Tassels of gold and black give the finishing touch to this exceedingly smart model.

Taffeta is also used to a great extent in creating handsome coats, or perhaps mantles would be a better word, as these wraps resemble capes rather than coats, and are extremely voluminous and have for decoration quillings and ruchings of taffeta.

One exquisite wrap of robin's egg blue taffeta has slits instead of sleeves, and is trimmed with many rows of narrow box plaited ruching. Another lovely coat of shrimp pink taffeta is lined with Dresden chiffon and effectively trimmed with rows of two inch black velvet ribbon.

SOME NEW-OLD FABRICS.

A revival of long unused fabrics is taking place, partly because of the difficulty of obtaining certain lines of accepted up to date materials and also because of the revival of old-time fashions. Mohair and brilliantine both possess a resilient quality desirable for the latest silhouette. Lansdowne is also being revived. Surah silks will be used for suits and separate frocks.

CORSETS FOR SPRING.

The corset makers promise no radical change in corsets for spring. They will be a trifle fuller in the hip and probably more curved at the waist, with a slightly higher bust. There will be a demand, however, for the pink corset for dress wear in preference to the white. Light flesh colored grounds with darker brocaded figures will distinguish the finer corsets.

CHILD'S CEREAL SET.

Nowadays there are many American wares of rather coarse clay finished in beautiful colors and made in pretty shapes. A child's set, consisting of a plate, bowl and milk jug—a cereal set—is yellow, and around the top of the jug and bowl and around the edge of the plate is a decoration of white ducklings.

IN THE SICK ROOM.

For a table in bed use a soapbox; remove sides, cover.

For the patient's meal time it is well to have a back rest for the pillows. If a ready made one is not procurable use chair cushions or a board.

As it is necessary in almost all cases to ventilate the sick room thoroughly at least once a day, an open umbrella placed in front of the patient will protect him while the windows are open.

Too often an intense pressure on the heels or elbows causes bed sores. This may be relieved by the use of cotton "doughnuts" covered with cloth. Use ordinary cotton, forming it like a doughnut. Sew the cloth on.

A convenience for a sick person is a good sized shoe bag with ample pockets fastened with safety pins to the mattress at the side of the bed. In the may be stored books, papers, fancy work, handkerchiefs and various articles that are needed.

Often in the sick room it is necessary to have some device for keeping foods cold. For this purpose a home made refrigerator can readily be constructed. A wooden box, sawdust and pails of two different sizes are neded. Insert one pail in the other; pack the ice around the smaller pail. Place pails in box; pack sawdust around pail. The food may be kept in the smaller pail.

CONCERNING WOMEN.

Miss Frances Densmore, expert in the red man's lore, has spent years collecting phonograph records of tribal songs for the United States museum.

The bill of the Massachusetts Legislature to prohibit a woman from operating an automobile of more than 30-horse power has been withdrawn.

Mrs. Sarah A. Evans, retiring president of the Wyoming Federation of Women's Clubs, is a candidate for auditor of the general federation, which holds its biennial convention in New York in May.

Miss Gail Laughlin, lawyer, admitted to the bar in New York, Colorado and California, and a member of the San Francisco Bar Association, specializes in probate law, wills and the care of estates.

One of the striking examples of the versatility of the capable Englishwoman is her present employment as truck driver. Practically all the motor trucks used for commercial purposes in England are now being driven by women.

Miss Margaret L. Campbell and Miss Gertrude E. Tarr, two New England girls, have taken up wireless telegraphy as a fad and spend every evening in their plant on Cape Ann, where they receive all the news of the day in advance of the general public.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

Worry encourages wrinkles and prematurely ages the face. Be philosophical and banish all the "little foxes" from your mind. Live a wholesome, normal life, take periods for rest, recreation and work. Choose a simple nourishing diet and spend one hour or longer in the fresh air every day.

Careless washing and imperfect drying are the reasons for more red, unsightly hands than anything else. The slightest dampness of the skin in cold weather will make the hands chap and crack. Hot water should not be used more than once a day at most for washing the hands, and then they should be rinsed in cold.

If you insist on using any cosmetic, do buy the powder rouge. Put a bit of cold cream on your face first, then dust over lightly with a good face powder, and finally dab on a little rouge, the less the better. Never use powder or rouge without a foundation of cold cream. Do not economize on the money you spend for powder or rouge, for cheap cosmetics are only used at the expense of your skin.

Parents often make a serious mistake in urging food on their children when they do not care for it. One meets parents now and again who worry over a child because he does not fill himself full up three times a day. A far better plan would be to provide wholesome and reasonably attractive food for the child, and then let him alone. If he does not want to eat, don't press food on him.

If you are weary after a fatiguing day, on reaching home take ten minutes' rest lying on the back. When you rise cleanse the face with cold cream, rubbing lightly across the lines and in an upward direction to correct sagging of the muscles. A cloth wet in very hot water should then be applied, followed by several applications of cold water. You will be surprised to find yourself quite rejuvenated.

YOUR MONEY AT WORK.

If you were asked to lend money on the security of a farm mortgage, what would you ask concerning the farm before making the loan?

In a general way, you would answer, your questions ought to be directed to finding out whether the mortgaged farm is clear as to title and could be sold at any time for the amount of the loan. It is a sensible answer; but in detail what would be the questions taken up?

I have a typical card sent out by an Oklahoma loan company to be filled in by applicants for loans, and I reproduce here the questions asked:

"How many acres? Their legal numbers (required in order to look up tittle, tax payments, etc.)? How many acres plowed? In meadow? In pasture with no timber? Of timber? How many acres rocky? Not fit to cultivate? Why?

"How many rooms in the house? When was the house built? Its value? What is the size of the barn? Kind of roof? Its value? How many rods of fence on the farm? Its value?

"Is the farm red or black soil? Are there any draws or branches on the farm? Describe them.

"Amount of loan desired? When due?"

These questions cover about all the points a local lender would raise. With his knowledge of farm values in the neighborhood he could decide whether or not the amount of money asked for could safely be loaned.

The investor from another state or city ought to add certain queries covering farm land values as shown by recent sales in the neighborhood. He ought to have evidence that the buildings on the farm are properly insured during the life of the mortgage. He ought to know why the borrower wants the money. He ought to have a fairly accurate report on the size and selling price of recent crops. He ought to know something of the age of the borrower and the nature of his family.

The lender of money on a farm mortgage needs to be certain of one thing—that the borrower cannot afford to let the farm go in payment of the mortgage. The lender doesn't want the farm. He will not, if he is wise, lend more than 50 per cent of the reasonable value of the farm. In certain communities, where values have long been established, he may raise the amount to 60 per cent or even 75 per cent of the farm's value. But the rule is that anything above 50 per cent is not conservative.

LODGE NOTES

One of those good sociable times was had at the I. O. O. F. lodge hall on last Tuesday evening when an elegant supper was served by the men of the lodge and the Daughters of Rebekah to their families and invited guests. A program was given after which the supper was served. As it happened the event came as a celebration of the organization of the St. Joe lodge, which occurred 25 years ago. This was not thought of until one of the members made the remark to that effect. The attendance was unusually large.

The Knights of Pythias, as an order, is just 52 years old, and in that time its Subordinate Lodges have given $39,500,000 for relieving distress and are now giving more than one million and a half dollars each year for that purpose. This entirely separate and apart from the thirty-nine and a half million dollars, the insurance department has paid to the families of its deceased members.

ANTI-LIQUOR SENTIMENT.

In an article showing that "the greatest nations in Europe are against alcohol," the Philadelphia North American has this to say about Germany:

"Is it not disconcerting to find that the great anti-alcohol movement which is sweeping Europe had its beginning in the land of the 14,000 breweries? A scientific pamphlet written in 1886 by Professor van Bunge, was the start of a campaign which has produced an anti-liquor congress in every advanced country on the continent, and a biennial international congress that draws delegates from nearly every considerable nation.

"The growth of sentiment against the evil has been almost incredible. In the year 1893 there was only one known total abstainer of prominence in the German empire, a noted Hamburg engineer. In 1897 a leading physician undertook to urge abstinence upon members of his profession, and after months of work found himself with a total of nine signatures; but ten years later 800 physicians had joined.

"It was a German university, that of Berlin, which first established a scientific course on the alcohol evil, in 1906. It was the German kaiser who a few years ago declared himself an abstainer, and enjoined the army and navy to follow his example. It is a noted German army physician who has declared: 'It must be considered incompatible with the honor of a city or government to allow the activities of poison factories, such as breweries and distilleries.' . . . There is a strong anti-liquor movement among the Socialists. For more than three years the sale of beer in the great Krupp works has been forbidden. That and other big industries —steel works, shipyards and mines— supply tea free to their workers, or milk at cost, and forbid the sale of beer. At one huge plant the consumption of beer fell from 147,000 barrels in 1909 to 14,500 barrels in 1911. The Berlin railways have forbidden the use of beer during working hours, and similar action has been taken by the government railways of Baden and Alsace-Loraine, where anti-alcohol placards are posted in all the stations."

DOOLEY ON JOHN BARLEYCORN.

"It's strange, Hinnissy, how th' wurruld has turned agin its lifelong roommate, Jawn Barleycorn. Afther rollickin' with th' old fellow f'r cinchries th' fickle public has rounded on him an' is rapidly chasin' him off th' map. I've told ye how it is in England. It's th' same ivrywhere. In Rooshya th' polis has stopped th' sale iv vodky, which is th' name iv th' Rooshyan naytional brainstorm. In France they've f'rbid th' cityzin to take his tumbler of absinthe.

"Jawn Barleycorn might have gone on f'r years if 't hadn't been that th' wurruld began to suspect that he was no good in a fight. That knocked th' last leg fr'm undher him. I cud've told th' wurruld so long ago. I've seen him start a millyon fights, but niver seen him win wan. He's lived f'r years on his repytation as a warryor. No army was supposed to be anny good without him. He was welcome in th' sojers' tent an' th' gin'ral's headquarters. People said about him: 'He's a scamp and a false friend, but he's a divvle in a scrap.' An' now they know he ain't anny good at that ayether. His bluff has been called."

NOT ALTOGETHER SELFISH.

"It is not altogether for purely economic reasons that industrial concerns oppose drinking on the part of their employees," says President Gibson of the Chicago Pressed Steel company. "The average employer is greatly interested in the welfare of his work-people. He wants to see them prosperous and happy. He also wants to get the largest possible returns in his business and there is no conflict between these two aims. Whatever improves the physical, mental and moral conditions of workmen also increases their efficiency and so brings in greater profits to the employer."

BOOZE.

Did it ever do you any good?

Did it ever help you get a better job?

Did it ever bring happiness into your family?

These sentiments in poster form were prominently displayed at the annual convention of the National Safety council in Philadelphia. The 2,000 delegates represented billions of capital and 1,500 separate firms. The railroad delegates called attention to the fact that the casualties among abstaining railroad employees are going down while the casualties to the general public are going up.

NO WINE FOR FANG.

Samuel G. Blythe, who told in a recent book how he went on the water wagon and stayed there, lately interviewed Wu Ting Fang, in Shanghai, and told about that in The Saturday Evening Post. He asked the Chinese statesman what he eats and, finally, what he drinks. "Do you take any wine?" inquired Mr. Blythe. Mr. Wu looked at him in amazement. "Wine!" he exclaimed. "Of course not! Wine is a poison. I occasionally drink a little grape juice, but no wine or any liquors."

The Judge, at the last trial decided in favor of Mr. Wallace and it has finally been compromised in order to get a settlement. The amount of the claim was $1,385.00 and a settlement was reached at $1069.50, the surety paying all court costs, which if settled in the first place would have saved them money. The people of St. Joe were interested in the decision of this case, and all believe that the full amount due Mr. Wallace should have been paid.

has to say about cream separators this week.

When you use a De Laval Separator you not only get more cream, but better cream as well

THE best evidence of this is that during the last twenty-five years butter made from De Laval separated cream has invariably scored the highest at all important contests and state fairs.

Practically all the cream entered in the International Milk and Cream Show held in connection with the Panama-Pacific Exposition was separated by De Lavals, and every first prize, and most all the other prizes, were won by De Laval separated cream.

These facts are simply further proof of De Laval supremacy in everything that goes to make a good cream separator.

Don't buy any separator until you give us an opportunity to let you see and try a De Laval. We will be glad to send one out to your farm on trial any time you say. Just phone, send a post card, or call and we will be glad to give you all the information you wish.

An Amazing Appetite.

You perhaps have heard it said time and time again that there is no business done in the small towns anymore, but such is not the case at St. Joe. We desire to call your attention to the St. Joe Mills, in which, C. T. Bayman, our hustling miller, has charge. For instance, Mr. Bayman figured up the amount of grain consumed during his first year's business here and it was amazing, over 63,000 bushels of grain, including all kinds. Besides he handled 29 cars of Domestic Coal and all together it would take 100 cars to transport this. Most of this grain was raised by our neighboring farmers and consumed by our home market. It hardly seems possible a mill the size of St. Joe could consume this amount of grain, but remember that the appetite of the people has been excellent. Bayman says: "Watch us grow next year". Has the St. Joe Mills benefitted you? Daily Bread Flour is known to nearly every housewife in the neighboring towns and the reputation it has established beats anything we ever saw. Everyone says Daily Bread Flour for me. Don't buy the imported brands. Patronize the home mills.

By the looks of things gasoline will still go higher, but that don't hurt the sale of automobiles. Looks like good business this year.

Obituary

Dorothy Bachtel, oldest daughter of Frank and Anna L. Bachtel, was born in Auburn, Ind., August 4, 1913. Departed this life on Sunday evening, April 9, 1916, at 6:30 o'clock. She was visiting in the home of her grand-parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Wilmot, two miles east of St. Joe, when she was stricken with the fatal pneumonia which took her away. Her illness only began on Thursday evening but in spite of all that could be done for her by the loving hands that ministered unto her, she gradually grew worse until the frail little body could no longer stand the strain and it yielded up the little spirit which was wafted from the growing shadows of evening's darkness and borne by bright angels to a Heavenly home. She is not lost but only transplanted by the Father's own care into his paradise above.

She leaves to mourn her father and mother and little six-months old sister Josephine, her grand-parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Wilmot, and other relatives and friends. She only reached the tender age of 2 years, 8 months and 5 days, but she was so sweet and her life was so full of sunshine that these months of her stay on earth have been full of blessing and brightness to those who loved her so dear. Earth has now one jewel less but Heaven has one more since she has gone. In the Father's house above we shall some day see her again. Funeral services were held at the home of the grand-parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Wilmot, Tuesday at 10:00 a. m., Rev. J. C. Coons, officiating. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director. Interment in the Woodlawn cemetery, Auburn.

Robert Henry Jaques, son of Charles and Allie Jaques, was born in DeKalb Co., Indiana, 3 miles west of Hicksville, Ohio, September 28, 1914. Died at the home of his parents in Detroit, Michigan, April 6, 1916. Age 1 year, 6 months and 9 days. He leaves behind in mourning his father and mother, two great grandmothers, Julia Younglove and Mary Noder; two step-grandfathers, Will Scott and Charles Kiser; two grandmothers, Mrs. Mary Scott and Mrs. Allie Kizer; one aunt, Miss Inez Patterson; one uncle, Wm. Jaques; and besides these other relatives and friends. His illness extended over a period of about four weeks during which time he was afflicted with a complication of diseases which baffled the skill of the best physicians. All that loving hands could do was done for his releif but death was stronger than love and he was not for God took him. As a flower that blooms but for a day and then withers away is not without its influence, so his life, so short, but so pure and sweet has been a blessing to those who loved him so dearly. As a tender shepherd bearing the lambs on his bosom, Jesus reached down from Heaven and took him unto Himself. Funeral services were conducted from the residence of the grand-parents, Mr. and Mrs. Will Scott, by Rev. J. C. Coons, of the St. Joe M. P. Church on Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, and the burial took place in the Woodlawn cemetery of Auburn.

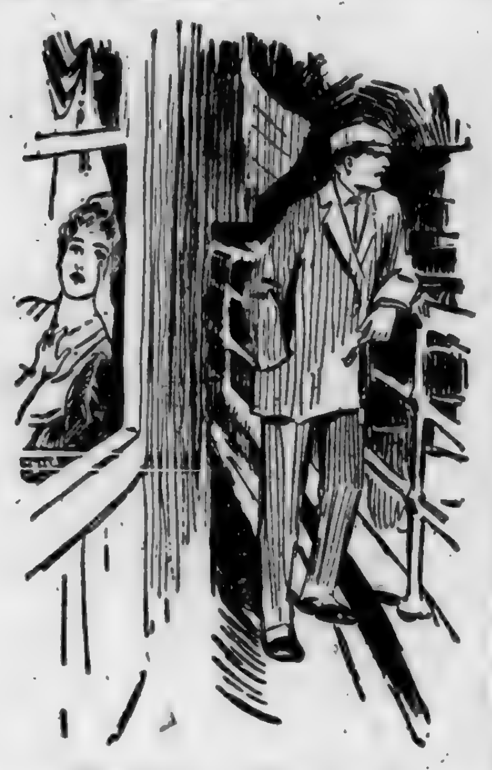
CHAPTER I.

The Lady of the Blue Buckle

It was a woman's voice—the voice that was wafted down the wind.

"Nowhere are they safe—nowhere do you understand?"



"Nowhere Are They Safe"

Craig Rutherford, idling in the shadow, with his elbow on the steamer rail, gazing dreamily at the glory of a moonlit sea at midnight in mid-ocean, heard this remark—but could not tell whence it came. In fact, he heard without heeding. Later he recalled the tone, the words—but now—

A man's voice, in tones subdued, harsh, peremptory, broke in.

"Sh-h-h-h. You are a woman! You talk too much—too loud. I tell you, when we reach New York"—

"New York"—this was the woman again, "New York—I tell you they will be waiting for us in New York—I can feel their outstretched hands"—

"Sh-h-h-h," again the man. "Those outstretched hands will find—what?"

"That is what I fear."

"They will find nothing. Nothing, I tell you."

"How can you arrange it, then?"

The man's answer was a sneer. "There are fools abroad—fools aplenty—gullible fools. They'll do the work for us. I've picked out—a fool"—

"Which one is that?"

"Sh-h-h-h." There was a click—it seemed as though somewhere a porthole closed—perhaps a window.

The voices became silent. Craig heard no more.

Rutherford was in love. It was useless to deny it longer to his own conscience. He must be honest with himself and face the truth. He had battled with his heart ever since he had first glimpsed the girl who had come up the gangplank at Hamburg and walked seemingly straight into his soul. Heroically he had fought the passion, which welled up only the more fiercely, day by day; for the girl bore the name of another man, and Craig was too old-fashioned—he told himself—to indulge in intrigue.

Howbeit, he retained possesison of the veil, and resolutely took his stand beside the chair. A single glance told him that the latter had been but lately vacated. The steward had not removed the rugs and cushions. The owner was liable to miss her veil, and might soon return.

His deductions proved correct, for it was not long before he heard the tap of small heels on the deck. Each separate little click throbbed sharply in his breast.

A girl with brown hair, drawn into a loose knot rather high on her head, from which the wind tore feathery tendrils as if in play, came toward him. In spite of the high heels she walked with the easy grace and light, long step of youth—a youth and physical freedom gained in the sweet communion of the broad outdoors. Seeing a tall figure leaning on her chair, she hesitated as if about to retreat. Fearing to lose her, Craig turned his head.

"Oh, it's you Mr. Rutherford?" she said, coming forward smilingly.

Craig's left hand snuggled down into the folds of the veil, deep in his pocket, but he did not even ask her what it was she sought. Instead, he sought again to say something brilliant, to coax this wonderful girl into the confidences of a friendly chat.

"The moonlight injects a fantastic unreality, even into water buckets and steamer chairs!" he observed, after a silence during which neither of them had marked the time.

She glanced up at him again, then sat down silently. But the quick glance of the girl had seen nothing but clear brown eyes which looked frankly into hers. Written in physical characters, he carried the records of his life on the polo fields, at the hurdles and following the hounds. In his game he had always played to win; and that meant keeping scrupulously fit in body and in mind. Alert and elastic, he was at once attractive and confidence-inspiring in his presence.

"There!" he exclaimed, looking down at her as she rested her head against the dark background. "By Jove, you look—just watch the moonlight! It is dancing about the silver fringe of your gown as if it were trying to find out if you were real!"

Rutherford had hoped against hope that the man whose name stood proprietarily ahead of hers on the passenger list was not her husband. Mr. Henry Talcott was an elderly invalid, and the pretty concern with which the girl had looked after him had made Rutherford believe her the solicitous daughter. Moreover, they occupied separate staterooms, her own being just across the corridor from Rutherford's.

"This is a night just made for—confidences," the girl said dreamily.

Rutherford started. He was sure that unshed tears glittered in her eyes. Impulsively he leaned toward her.

"Mrs. Talcott, what is it? There is something troubling you!"

"Isn't that a natural subject—for a night like this? It was a trite remark I know."

She stopped suddenly as the sound of footsteps reached their ears.

Down the deck at some distance from them, but much too near to suit Rutherford, a man moved forward into the bright moonlight.

"Helderman," observed Rutherford.

To his surprise and regret Mrs. Talcott was rising.

"You are going!" he exclaimed.

"Oh, yes, I must! I came out to find my veil, but I—forgot."

And with scarcely a word of adieu she hurried away. Rutherford's hand still snuggled into the folds of the veil, which he had no intention of restoring to her, but she had given up its search so hastily that he looked around in bewilderment for some reason for her flight.

All he saw was Helderman pursuing the same eccentric walk that had caused him to be identified so readily a few moments before. Indeed, who of the first cabin passengers did not know and remark upon the eccentricities of Helderman? Now it dawned upon Craig that the man was known on board as "the man who occupies, who can pay for, the royal suite!"

"The top of the morning to you, Herr Helderman!" he said, sauntering forward and speaking deliberately to this man for the first time during the voyage.

Helderman stopped in his walk, drew out his watch and glanced at it before replying.

"Ha!" he said in the dramatic way that seemed characteristic with him. "You are right—it is morning—very much so—to be sure!"

He spoke in deep, abrupt tones which harmonized curiously with his strong, jerky stride.

"But why do you call me 'Herr?'" he queried.

"I took you for a German," Craig replied quietly.

"No," Helderman protested, "except in name. I am an American—an American of the Americans—a New Yorker among New Yorkers!"

Helderman drew a showy card case elaborately ornamented with a gold monogram, from his pocket. He drew and presented a bit of pasteboard, with a flourish.

J. BARON HELDERMAN
Banker
U. S. A.

"So you are that Helderman," commented Craig. He remembered now, vaguely, something about Helderman and Wall Street—he recalled some coup d'etat, some stroke of genius. But it was a memory that eluded him—the details he could not recollect.

The eye behind the monocle gleamed with a cynical smile.

"Yes, I am that Helderman. Does it make any difference—yes?"

"It does," replied Craig, a bit cynically, too. "It signifies whether one is just Helderman, or Helderman, the banker of U. S. A. That is, it does—to most people."

And then—it came to him. He recalled the postage stamp. Helderman was the man who, a few short years before, had put in a bid for a huge block of United States bonds—his bid had cost him but a postage stamp. He was awarded his block of bonds—he had sold his bid at a large advance—he had made big money—and all out of a two-cent stamp.

This trick had taught Wall street and the government a lesson. After this stroke of Helderman's they asked security of bidders. That didn't affect Helderman. He had been there first, that's all. Craig remembered this—he recalled other things of Helderman. He was an unknown quantity—Helderman. At times he was spectacular, and then for months he would drop completely out of sight.

"That Helderman," repeated Craig, "yes, to most people it would make a difference."

"And who are you, pray?" Helderman inquired.

"I—oh, I'm nobody, as you see."

But Helderman scrutinized him carefully.

"You have great power, young friend," he said abruptly. "Why do you not join me in my enterprise?"

Craig started at him aghast. "What great power have I?" he queried.

Helderman regarded him intently. "A great quality," he exclaimed; "that of impressing your sincerity upon people. That is your strength, young friend. You are sincere—always sincere. It is a great asset—an asset that nine-tenths of the people have not got. Sincerity—I need it in my enterprise."

"What is your enterprise?" asked Craig.

Helderman lowered his voice. "It is my great ambition to own every trust company in New York."

Craig laughed aloud. "Hitch your wagon to a star—you're crazy, man," he said. "It would take billions to buy up the trust companies in New York."

Helderman smiled superciliously. "Not billions," he returned, "hardly a million."

Craig shook his head. And then he nodded. "I'm interested," he said. "Let me hear about it."

Helderman touched him gently on the arm. "Give me a million—and a few frank-faced young men like you, and I can do it." He tapped his forehead. "Behind it all is this—it needs Helderman to push it through. Let me explain. First, a million dollars—less. Maybe half a million. We buy one trust company—its stock. We buy control. This trust company has assets. We control those assets, because we control the stock. What do we do with these assets and this stock? We buy another trust company—and we put up the stock, and possibly the assets, as collateral security for the purchase price of the second trust company. So far, so good. We now have two trust companies. But trust company number two—it also has stock which we control, assets also. We put those up to buy trust company number three. What follows—just this: What we can do once we can do a hundred times"—

"An endless chain," murmured Craig. He was right when he said this interested him. It did more—it startled him.

"An endless chain," echoed Helderman. "Exactly, and we start it with less than a million dollars."

"What about the law?" queried Craig.

"The law," returned Helderman, dismissing the law with a wave of his hand. "The law deals only with failures—this plan will be a great success. What I touch turns to gold."

He waved his hand toward the ship as if he owned it.

"I occupy the royal suite. I am turning back along a new route."

Again he waved his large, white hand sweepingly and the moonlight broke into brilliant splinters on the facets of a huge and flawless diamond he wore.

"Money? Bah!" he exclaimed.

They had reached the stern of the ship, where the deck ran from rail to rail.

"Shall we return?" said Helderman.

Without waiting for a reply he wheeled sharply and started back. Rutherford wondered if he were overworking his own imagination. A while ago he had fancied that Mrs. Talcott wanted to escape from his or Helderman's neighborhood, and now he fancied that Helderman was seeking to elude some undesirable meeting.

"Just a second," said Craig, stepping close to the cabin wall as if to light a fresh cigar.

"Ah!" he breathed confirmatively to himself. Out of the tail of his eye he had caught sight of a slender and graceful woman emerging from the shadow of the aft deck.

Helderman had turned back, without pausing, and the woman seemed to approach him, as though unconscious of the younger man who had stepped into the shadow to light his cigar. Apparently without observing her, Helderman threw back his head and puffed a succession of white smoke-rings into the blue night air. The woman scarcely altered her pace or direction as she passed on; yet Craig was certain that she had observed the signal and had been warned away.

He started after her as she hurried along the deck. A long, dark veil, fluttering about her head and shoulders, completely disguished the contour of her head and color of her hair. Yet he had seen a certain gray ulster too many times not to recognize it now. He had watched its wearer too often—so he told himself—not to know just how becomingly it set off the slender figure. And not fifteen minutes before—again he told himself he had seen just such dainty, white slippers resting on the rung of the steamer chair.

"You noticed the lady who passed us?" he asked.

"I may deduce that you are referring to Mrs. Henry Talcott?"

"Your deduction is entirely correct."

"Do I know Mrs. Talcott?" Helderman asked, seemingly fond of repeating the name. "To my regret, no. I have done a little clever scheming, to no purpose. But I have heard her voice. I have seen her throat ripple. I"—

"I have even felt," continued Helderman quietly, as if nothing had happened, "that atmosphere which surrounds a young and beautiful woman, as a flower is encircled by its own fragrance."

Craig looked at him resentfully. The language of a man of feeling and sentiment fell from the other's lips as easily, and with far greater effect, than his arrant boasting had done. He continued, as though speaking to himself:

"Mrs. Talcott has not only her youth and her beauty; she has charm and intellect, that distinction of breeding, that fine aloofness which puts her out of the reach of ordinary men and lures the man of brain and passion. For this reason I regard her as a dangerous woman — a very dangerous woman."

"What makes you think so? How do you know?" Craig asked impulsively.

"I do not know, but like a good American I guess—and I usually guess right."

"Mrs. Talcott constantly wears a certain ornament. You sit just across from her at table; perhaps you have noticed it?"

"It is a buckle—a large buckle—evidently of steel," answered Rutherford.

"Ah! a blue buckle!" Helderman repeated slowly.

"I fail to attach any special significance to a blue buckle!"

"You are interested in mysteries?" Helderman asked in an undertone.

"That depends," Rutherford answered."

"Follow!"

He spoke but the one word, yet Craig experienced a thrill. Into one of the dimly-lighted corridors Helderman plunged with Craig right at his heels. At last they reached the office of the wireless operator.

Craig entered the room after his guide. The operator, a ruddy-cheeked boy not out of his teens, rose up and saluted the visitors effusively.

"A friend of mine," said Helderman, twitching his chin in Craig's direction; "a gentleman who, like myself, never sleeps of nights, and who wants to know what's going on in the world."

"Be seated, gentlemen," said the operator, turning again to the instrument, which was calling him stridently.

Craig sat down and held his cap between the leaping flame and his eyes. Himself in the shadow, he watched attentively the powerful, subtle face of his companion and the boyish, rosy face of the operator. It was a scene worthy of Mephisto, and quite as true to the tempter's role.

The wireless ripped and rattled, as if it hated the message it was bringing.

"Ah-h!" Helderman breather. His eyes were fixed unblinkingly on the white fire. When the spark had ceased, he took off his monocle and deliberately winked at Craig.

"It is the witching hour when the secret messages come in," he said, significantly.

"You mean the secret-service messages?"

"Yes—secret-service messages, and secret messages; messages that are not intended for the general ear, and which often carry many a pretty story."

Then he turned and addressed the operator, in the crisp tones of an employer to an employee:

"Come, loosen up." Tell us what you got just now out of the wilderness of space!"

The operator opened his lips as if to obey the gruff authority back of the words—then smiled and shook his head.

"This message is confidential, Mr. Helderman."

Helderman silently brought to light a generous roll of bank notes. Without seeming aware of any insult in the action, he took off the top bill, a twenty dollar note, and laid it before the operator.

"Will that start a fire?" he asked.

"Nothing doing—yet—Mr. Helderman."

Helderman placed two twenties on the desk, within easy reach of the operator. The operator regarded them complacently.

"You want to take a message, do you?" he inquired.

"Just that," said Helderman.

"Wait a minute," said the operator. He spent some seconds in transmitting. Then he picked up the yellowbacks.

"All right," he said, still more complacently, "you can fire ahead."

He relinquished the receivers and Helderman adjusted them.

Craig watched Helderman. Helderman's face was intent—the message seemed to be of terrific interest. Suddenly, however, as by some effort, he lounged back in his chair and his countenance took on an expression of merely languid interest. Finally he laid the apparatus down. The flashes had ceased.

Helderman drew Craig out upon the deck. The door swung to behind him.

"It was worthy forty dollars—that," he said.

"What," queried Craig, "the message?"

Helderman laughed almost uproariously. "He never suspected — he doesn't know how — what happened. Listen. Did you notice him when I asked leave to take a message—when I handed him his price? He sent a message then—a message to some faraway operator, doubtless, to hand me some balderdash. Well—the other operater didn't do it. The message I got was intended, not for my ears, but for the ears of this young operator alone—for his confidential ears. And he thought I couldn't translate messages—I saw him tell you that while I was listening. Well, I heard this one—and he didn't. He'll never hear it now. It was a message that will not be sent again. It was significant—in the light of recent circumstances." He dwelt upon the phrase. "In the light of recent circumstances—to say the least."

Then he lapsed into silence. But his glance at Craig invited query.

Craig waited for a decent interval of time. Then he spoke.

"I am not usually curious," he said, "but—is this message somthing you desire to confide to me?"

"The message was from the Caledonia, which had it from Liverpool. It ran like this: 'Ten days ago a diamond necklace, value two hundred and fifty thousand francs, was purchased in the shop of Kirchwasser, in Berlin, apparently for import to America.' You gather the meaning of this, Mr. Rutherford? It is for the secret service men, and refers to—smugglers."

Rutherford was frankly interested.

"Who bought the necklace? Did the message give any particulars?" he asked.

"The details were few. The purchasers were people of evident prosperity."

"There was more than one person, then?"

"There were two," answered the banker.

"Men?"

"One man," said Helderman slowly, "and a woman!"

"How were they to be identified?"

"The information was meagre. The woman was young and quite attractive. The man was middle-aged and wore a beard."

Craig made no further inquiries. He was smitten with a sense of disaster impending. Helderman, however, continued to talk, with the freedom of one superficially interested.

"The message would not have been sent to this ship but for two reasons: The man and woman are our fellow passengers, and there are secret-service men also here, detailed to watch them."

"Well—what do you think?" Helderman finally asked, twirling upward the points of his mustache, and downward the point of his goatee, both grizzled and betraying his age unnecessarily.

"I haven't any definite opinion"—Craig began, reluctantly.

"Be honest with yourself! You know you have! You think what I think!"

If the financier had expected denial or surprise from Rutherford, he was disappointed. The young man merely shrugged his shoulders, and kept his own counsel.

"You do not, Mr. Rutherford, happen to know a secret-service man, when you see him?" persisted Helderman.

"No I do not," replied Craig.

"Tomorrow, then I suggest that you correct your ignorance. Keep your eyes open, and perhaps you will see what I have seen."

"Where do you suggest that I look?" asked Craig.

"In the neighborhood of Mrs. Henry Talcott!" Helderman answered, turning abruptly toward the royal suite. "I have the honor to bid you good night."

CHAPTER II.

The Secret-Service Men

The next morning Rutherford arose with his determination of the night strengthened into immediate action. Whether or not Mrs. Talcott confided in him, or would even be grateful for his help, he felt that he must look after her interests. She must be protected—even her invalid husband would commend him in that, he virtuously told himself.

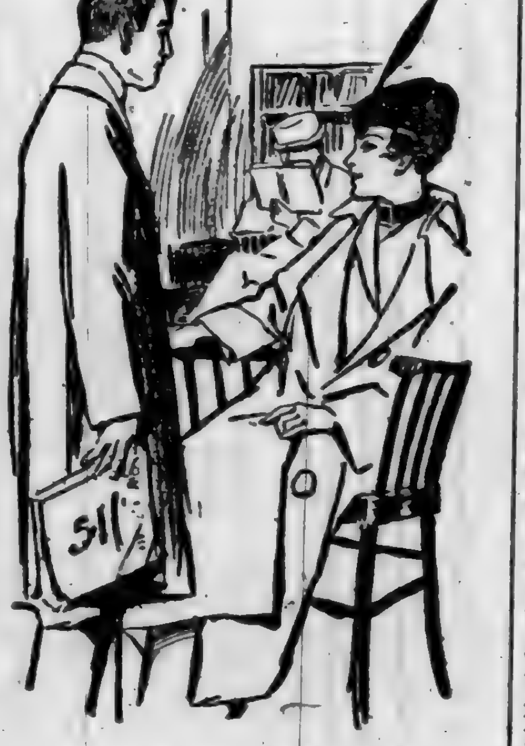
Full of his project, he sauntered around the ship, seeking the disturbing owner of the veil, and at last was rewarded by seeing her, seated demurely in the library, looking through the pages of a cumbersome volume. But the smart, simple blue hat, with its long quill, gave Craig sufficient excuse to enter and interrupt her labors.

He glanced at the book. It was a New York directory.

"Thank you," she said simply as Craig reached over to take the bulky volume out of her hands. His hands touched hers for the first time. The breath caught in his throat as he saw the rich color surge softly up under the clear skin of her cheeks. Then, with the defensive instinct of womankind, her eyes flashed quick glances about the room, to see who had observed her blushing.

The look was like wine to Rutherford. It meant that she was not ashamed to reveal an interest in him and had no fear of the use to which he might put it, but was careful of the interpretation that strangers might give it.

Keenly sensitive on her account, wildly happy on his own, Craig's glance followed hers here and there in the room. A pair of piercing gray eyes darted back to a book as they encountered his. They belonged to a stocky man, not exactly of the student type—though apparently intent upon the volume which he held—who was the only other occupant of the library.



A Pair of Piercing Grey Eyes

Instantly Helderman's reference to the secret service man who was watching Mrs. Talcott leaped into his mind.

"Come out on deck and ask me about New York," he urged.

The girl hesitated; she seemed to be weighing his uggestion. Then he saw the white, ungloved fingers grasp the corners of her steamer coat and draw them together.

The mysterious blue buckle shone with a dull gleam against the purity of her throat.

"You know you always have to wait for a woman to get ready," she said, smiling up at him while she drew on her gloves.

"That is no crime, if the woman is worth waiting for," he rejoined, moving toward the door.

They made one circuit of the ship, the girl chatting and laughing in the manner of the care-free; the man answering her with like banter, and forgetting for the moment any more important business. But as they came again to the library door, from which they had emerged, Rutherford caught sight of the stocky student fellow lolling against the doorway; and glancing back again out of the corner of his eye saw him make a sign to another man who lounged against the bulkhead. Rutherford was now certain that these two were the secret-service men detailed to watch this charming girl at his side.

"You have been away a long time," observed Talcott, in the colorless voice of an invalid.

The girl's face flushed as she ran eagerly forward.

"I'm sorry, dear, to have kept you waiting," she said, and deftly arranged his cushions more comfortably around him.

Rutherford excused himself and walked away, out of humor with life. He was apparently no further along in his friendship or in his ability to be of the slightest service than before. He had scarcely swung into a good stride and began to see a bit beyond his own immediate misery when a man who had done many miles with him in daily constitutionals around the deck happened to cross his path.

"Things are getting a bit squally this morning," he remarked.

"That so? I hadn't noticed," rejoined Craig, glancing at the sunny stretch of water.

"Yes, sir—but I don't mean the weather. It's right here on board ship."

"What's the trouble?" asked Rutherford, uninterestedly.

"You must have got up late today! The air is fairly buzzing! Everybody's talking!"

"What about?" asked Craig, seeing that the man would persist until he had communicated his news.

"Smugglers aboard!"

Rutherford started into decided attention.

"What makes you think so—how do you know?' he demanded.

"A wireless message received last night says that a week ago a man and woman bought a diamond necklace worth two hundred and fifty thousand francs in Berlin."

Rutherford listened, thunderstruck, to the almost exact repetition of Helderman's words. Evidently he had been correct, and the secret message had become noised about—but by whom?

"The smugglers — the man and woman—are on board this boat," the man continued glibly; "that is why we were warned. The woman is youngish, and the man has a beard."

"How did you hear about it? The ship's paper publish it?"

"Not much!"

"Blest if I know! Everybody seems to know about it, though it's naturally the business of the secret service. But it has leaked somehow."

One course of action presented itself to Rutherford, and this he decided to try at once. He would accost the secret service man whom he had discovered in the library and learn what he knew concerning the matter, and if possible why he was trailing the Talcotts.

He rounded the deck again before finding the man he sought, but was at last rewarded by seeing him come out and relieve the fellow who had been lounging against the bulkheads, within sight of the Talcotts' chairs. Craig marched straight up to him, with the intention of accosting him; but was interrupted on the way.

"Oh, sir, may I trouble you?"

The voice was rich and low, and it seemed, somehow, familiar. Rutherford, with instinctive courtesy, halted and turned. A handsomely-dressed woman stood helplessly beside a steamer chair and looked expectantly up at him, a frown and a smile blending upon her expressive face. Her hands were busy with the folds of her gown.

"I cannot get it loose!" she complained, as Rutherford came toward her.

The hem of her skirt was caught and held securely in the joint of the chair.

"It's this little bunch—this small wad in the hem that holds it so securely," he said.

She laughed, and he glanced up quickly. Her vail was raised, enabling him to look straight into the warm brown eyes of a woman whose features were almost perfect and whose rapidly changing expressions reflected the vivacity which has long made the Viennese women famous. Her height and graceful form were not unlike those of another passenger who was not long absent from Craig's thoughts, but her breezy, unconventional conversation was in marked contrast to the shy reserve of the other.

"That small wad is a tiny weight," she said. "The wind is no respector of ankles, you know, so the hem must be made—shall I say, conservative?"

"There! At last you are free, madam," he said, as a final tug released the dress.

"At last? I do not think you have been long! And not madam, please, but mademoiselle—Mademoiselle Irene Arany, to be exact. Indeed, I thank you, sir. You are an artist; it is not hurt at all, Mr.— Mr.?"—

"Rutherford," he prompted.

"Thank you, Mr. Rutherford."

He bowed and hurried away. Mademoiselle Arany followed him with a calculating glance which proved her to be a clever woman, as well as beautiful. It suggested, too, that her interest in him was not born merely of this morning's adventure.

MONTENEGRIN ROYALTY GOES TO FRANCE TO LIVE

King and queen of Montenegro (in center), with their son-in-law, the king of Italy, on their left and other members of the Montenegrin royal family, most of whom are now at Lyons, France, the provisional capital of Montenegro. The king refused invitation to stay in Italy.

WILD BEASTS IN CALIFORNIA.

Dynamiters Drive Them From Mountains to Settlements in Valleys.

Wild beasts — California lions, wildcats, lynx, etc.—are very numerous in the vicinity of French creek and in fact, all along the ridge, says the Sacramento Bee. These animals are supposed to have been driven out of their nearly inaccessible canons, where they have been practically undisturbed for years past, by the invasion of the thousands of railroad men and the noise of the continued explosion of hundreds of tons of dynamite. They have sought shelter nearer the confines of civilization.

So bold have the animals become that residents are very much alarmed. Half-grown calves and other domestic animals are carried off with impunity.

Recently a laborer started for a surveyors' camp about a mile from French Creek with a sack of fresh beef. Before going far he found he was being followed by a lion, which kept barely a hundred yards behind him. When he would stop the lion would stop. He dared not run although tempted to do so, for he felt sure he would then be attacked. He thought of throwing the meat away, but he reasoned if he did so the animal would devour it almost instantly and, emboldened by the taste of fresh blood, would surely attack him and he would be utterly helpless, as he was unarmed.

Nearly dead with fright he managed to reach camp, and in the dusk the glaring eyes of the lion could be plainly seen peering from the underbrush. The lion is naturally cowardly, but will readily attack a man when hungry.

Edible Birds' Nest.

Some authorities have contended that the edible birds' nests are constructed of a glutinous matter secreted in the mouths of the birds and others think that these nests are composed of a kind of seaweed. The latter theory has now been practically abandoned and it is generally conceded that the robbing of the nests before the hatching of the young is an act of great cruelty, since the birds immediately set to work to build new ones and the excessive drain on their saliva exhausts their strength to such a degree that they are often found dead in numbers near the spot where they had meant to rear their broods.—Chicago Daily News.

The Largest Loaves.

The largest loaves of bread baked in the world are those of France and Italy. The "pipe" bread of Italy is baked in loaves two feet or three feet long, while in France the loaves are made in the shape of very long rolls four feet or five feet in length and in many cases even six feet. The bread of Paris is distributed almost exclusively by women, who go to the various bakehouses at 5.30 a. m. and spend about an hour polishing up the loaves. After the loaves are thoroughly cleaned of dust and grit the "bread porter" proceeds on the round of her customers. Those who live in apartments or flats find their loaves leaning against the door.

Japanese Lacquer Tree.

Japanese lacquer is a very curious substance. A simple tree sap, like maple sap, it is, yet when applied to wood or metal quite indestructible. A coat of lacquer is proof against alcohol, against boiling water, against almost all known agents.

The lacquer tree of Japan is very large. It is always cut down at the age of forty years, as thereafter it begins to dry up. Each tree yields on its demolition about six barrels of lacquer sap.

The Japanese are very careful not to let foreigners into the secret of lacquering.

Hobby of King Leopold.

One of the hobbies of the King of the Belgians is building. King Leopold, who spends almost as much time out of his country as he does in it, has several residences which he seldom or never visits, yet he is constantly adding to them. He has a fine palace in Brussels, but when within his own domains he prefers to spend his time in the country. His majesty is the richest monarch in Europe so far as real estate is concerned.—London Tit-Bits.

SAYS OLD MEN ARE TOO SILLY

Bowers Explains His Reason for Giving Up $30,000 Salary

Binghamton, N. Y.—"To me there is nothing more to be avoided in old men than the notion that they are as young and brisk and bright at 60 or 70 as they ever were," declared L. M. Bowers, recently head of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, today in explaining why he has resigned a $30,000 a year position with the Rockefeller interests.

"They learn to run automobiles and go scooting at a 40-mile clip, taking chances that younger men would avoid. If they happen to have married a young wife they are pretty sure to be on dress parade most of the time, or one of the other laid up nursing a grouch.

"Old men are generally silly or irritable, and the Lord preserve me from being silly, so I decided to unload a lot of burdens, among them a big salary, and what I do henceforth in active business will be for fun and not for any other consideration."

RABBIT SAUSAGE FROM TEXAS

State Pest to be Transformed Into Palateable Delicacy.

Llano, Texas—"Rabbit sausage—Made in Texas." If you come across this new weiner you may remember that the Texas legislature has just placed a bounty of five cents per head on jack rabbits. There are many millions of jack rabbits in western Texas. Every one knows what fun it is to hunt rabbits.

The well prepared rabbit is gastronomical delight. Since the passage of the bounty the slaughter of the little jacks has become an important industry. E. T. Castleman of this place is preparing to erect a plant here for the manufacture of rabbit sausage and great numbers of the long eared animals will be required.

Insurance From Italy.

Insurance came from medieval Italy. It is believed to date from the sixteenth century ,and at that time it was known in Florence. The Romans did not know insurance. The nearest they came to it was the practice of a company supplying the army to require a guarantee from the State against the loss of ships. But this was soon abandoned. because damages had been collected for sunken ships too worthless to float.

Pioneer Apothecaries.

Pharmacy and medicine were first made separate professions by the monks and priests of the tenth and eleventh centuries. The father of the apothecaries seems to have been Constantine Afer, of Carthage. Their preparations and potions were sold to the rich and given to the poor. No apothecaries are mentioned in France prior to 1484.

A swallow's speed has often been stated to be sixty miles an hour. Recent experiments prove that a swallow in a hurry can travel at the rate of 128½ miles an hour.

"Clock Plant' Unique

Miami, Okla.—Delburt Adams, himself something of a naturalist, has received from a noted naturalist and former friend who has spent many years in Borneo, the most unique specimen of plant life ever seen in this neighborhood. It is known as the "clock plant", and it registers in a rough sort of way, the time of day.

It has leaves of two sizes, one of which acts in the capacity of minute hand, which keeps moving until 4 o'clock p. m., and the other keeps going until morning The longer leaves act as the hour hand.

Starting in a position when all the leaves lie close to the stem, with the points hanging down, they rise gradually until they turn toward the top, and then they drop to their former position. It takes the smaller leaves about one minute to go through this performance, and the longer leaves just about one hour.

The plant is about one foot in height and is of a dark, lustrous green color. The plant is said to be of a very hardy growth. Mr. Adams, who is leaving for St. Louis shortly, intends to make a present of it to one of the parks in that city.

HORSE IS NOW OWNER'S BANK

Swallows Fat Roll of Bills and Puzzling Question Arises.

Northumberland, Pa.—Is a $250 horse that swallowed a $250 roll of bills worth $500.

This is the question a local merchant, William B. Miller, is asking. He has an offer of sale for the animal at the first price and is trying to determine whether he shall double his price or not.

A night or two ago he missed the money from his pocket, and next day found bits of it in the feed box. He remembers he threw down hay into the manger after dark and thinks that his money fell in it, and the horse ate it with his rations. The remnants have been carefully preserved in the hope that Uncle Sam's treasury might redeem it.

TOOTH SPLINTER BLINDING

Flies Into Dentist's Eye and Soon Poisons Him.

Towanda, Pa.—Dr. E. F. Rhinebold of Athens was severely injured in a peculiar manner. A piece of a tooth which he was extracting struck him in the right eye, making an injury so severe that he had to be taken to a hospital.

The injured eye became infected from the diseased tooth within two hours, in spite of the best treatment.

WRONG MAN GETS PAPERS

Divorce Summons Intended for Negress Goes to White Wife

Louisville, Ky.—Through an order by Judge Samuel B. Kirby, divorce attorneys must incorporate in the caption of the petition whether the parties to the cases are white or negro. Unless such information is placed in a prominent position the clerk in charge of the suit desk in the office of the Circuit Court will refuse to issue processes in the case.

This ruling was brought about thru the action of a deputy from the Sheriff's office, in serving a summons in a divorce case on a white woman when it should have been served on a negro woman of the same name. After being served with the notice the woman whose husband was out of town on business, tearfully told him of the notice that had been served on her. She said that there had never been any trouble between her and her husband and she was unable to account for his action. It was not until his return a few days later that the situation was cleared up to the satisfaction of the wife.

Bread Wrappers Help

We use bakers' bread in our home, generally purchasing that wrapped in sanitary waxed paper. These wrappers we have found exceedingly useful, putting them in the bottoms of cake pans. The cakes come out of the pan with the paper on them. This is easily removed. Pans are not greased before putting in the cake mixture. I think this suggestion will be a great help to your many readers.

Cleaning Hint.

In cleaning a room instead of moving heavy pieces of furniture each week, remove lower drawers of bureaus, sideboards, etc., and clean thru the opening with whisk broom and cloth.

Corset Wisdom.

You may tell a woman a hundred times that a certain corset is more scientifically built than the one she is wearing and that it will increase her span of life and joy and various other platitudes of this nature, but if it increases her hip or waist measurements it is all just so much talk, idle talk.

But prove to her that not only is the corset concerning which you wish to interest her cut on the most approved lines but that it will clip off an inch around the hips, and another at the waistline, etc., and that she will continue to decrease because she will be carrying her weight in the proper proportions and you have a convert at once.

Science and, therefore, comfort with style, is the open sesame to the woman's heart and brain.

ON INTRODUCTIONS

There is a Right and Wrong Method of Presenting Ones's Friends.

I wish it were possible to give a set of sentences that could be used when a girl is presented to a stranger. Unfortunately the lack of definiteness in the situation makes me think of those cooking recipes of season and taste, no two introductions are precisely alike, and so the same phrases might not be appropriate if repeated to several persons at different times.

Broadly speaking, a person, be it a man or woman, is never introduced without one or both knowing something previously of each other. This fact may be the peg on which to hang a sentence after the first: "It is a pleasure to meet you;" or, "This is nice," or some other equally cordial expression of interest. This, of course is said by the person to whom the introduction is made, but this does not throw the responsibility of conversation upon the one brought up, for the second may continue without interruption after the opening greeting. If she knows of the new acquaintance from other friends she has only to say. "I have heard So and So speak of you so many times," or, "We have some friends in common, have we not?" Any sentence in each trend makes an opening for conversation.

If it chances that the two who have been introduced have never previously heard of each other, the hostess should give them a topic for beginning, as: "You two should know each other because you are interested in the same books," or, "are among my best friends," or anything that the two may be able to take as an opening. Should she be so remiss as to omit this, there is always the person who has made the introduction to be talked of for a minute, or the newest play, or the query if the one introduced is in town for a few days or means to live in town. It does not matter what is said at first if some words are spoken to prevent a gap of feeling of awkwardness.

Giving the hand is entirely optional on the part of the women unless a man should have his extended first. He should not do so, but if he does the woman must take it or be guilty of rudeness.

Under the circumstances mentioned by the correspondent of what to do when meeting for a second time a man who has forgotten the introduction to her, I think the girl must do as she chooses. She is apt to know whether his forgetfulness is intentional, and should it be, a case difficult to fancy, she would of course, ignore him absolutely. But if she cares to continue the acquaintance it is good form for her to remind him of the previous meeting.

Any invitation to a gathering at which only a certain number of persons are invited, such as lunch, dinner, cards or theater, must be answered and that promptly. R. S. V. P. is used only on formal invitations.

If a girl wishes to ask a man to call on her she should do so in the name of a parent if she lives at home, or in the name of an older person who occupies the place of a guardian. For instance, she should say: "I hope you will come to see us. My mother and I would be so glad to have you." If she lives with other girls she should say: "Won't you come to see us some time? It would give my friends and me much pleasure to receive you."

For the Housewife.

When making biscuits try rolling them thinner and using two cuts for one biscuit, laying one on top of the other. Made in this way, they will break evenly and are much daintier.

A great many persons find it difficult to wrap up a cake that has a soft frosting without having the frosting stick to the paper. If you stick a few toothpicks into the cake and then wrap it up you will find the toothpicks will hold up the paper very nicely.

A clever housewife says that when she has a couple of hours ironing to do, or if she has meat or vegetables to cook which require two or more hours' time, she puts a teakettle full of water on the unlighted gas next to the one she is using, so that when her ironing or cooking is done she has a teakettle full of almost boiling water without burning any gas for that purpose.

Serve potatoes plain boiled only when they are new. With roast meat serve potatoes mashed or roasted in the pan with the meat. With fricasseed meats serve baked potatoes with a crisp fried vegetable like eggplant. With roast pork serve baked potatoes a green vegetable, and a sour apple sauce. With roast chicken serve mashed potatoes, onions and sour jelly.

To Keep Oranges

A woman who formerly lived in California and has boxes of oranges sent her every winter, after much experimenting has found the best way to keep them.

When the oranges arrive they are carefully gone over and any that seem soft are removed for immediate use.

The rest are wiped free of dirt and are carefully buried in clean sand in a box that is deep enough to hold several layers.

Care must be taken in packing that the oranges do not touch one another and are completely surrounded by the sand.

The box is then put in a cool dry place where there is danger neither of frost nor overheating.

If no dampness gets in the box oranges so kept will not only last all winter, but have kept well on into the summer, when the fruit is scarce.

WARMING UP AFTER A WINTRY DIVE

BUILDING A BARN

Warmth and Ventilation are Prime Considerations.

There are farmers who have all sorts of troubles and disappointments in keeping a dairy and producing milk. some are displeased because the price is not what they think it should be; others because the yield a head is small. Then there are some who missed their calling when they took up dairying. So, take it all around, I am of the opinion that this dissatisfaction lies more with the farmer himself than with any other cause. The small yield of milk or butter fat from a cow is due mostly to selection on the part of the owner. It is often the result, too, of improper housing and care. Of all animals the cow should be made comfortable if we expect to make her profitable. No use trying to get around this fact. Should we expect our cows to give a good yield of milk when they are kept in stables where the manure freezes solid every cold night? A good many stables have warmth enough, but the ventilation is decidedly poor. Both of these are very essential. Pure air is needed the same as food, but there are few, apparently who look at the matter in this light. A dozen cows in a stable together produce a good deal of heat themselves, but if when the stable door is open on a cold day the steam rushes out, you may make up your mind that the ventilation is poor. I find that in some of our oldest and poorest barns the ventilation is better than in many new ones, since the stables are more open and given a better chance of air getting in and out. But neither are right. There are many basement barns built at large expense and with the idea of having an ideal place for cows. Many of them are nothing more than dungeons. I know of one near here, built at a cost of several thousand dollars that is almost worthless for stock on account of dampness. Therefore, in making your cow barns comfortable, take this matter of warmth and ventilation into your mind and see if it is not right.

Why is a Nest Egg

Nest eggs have been considered a necessity in poultry circles for many years, but no one seems to know just why they are used. Occasionally a hard artificial nest egg will fool an egg eating hen and perhaps break her of the habit, if she hurts her bill trying to break the egg. An egg in the nest does not induce egg production, as some people erroneously suppose for the egg production is dependent upon feeding the proper rations and the hen lays her egg when it is properly put together and protected by a shell, furnished by nature.

COLORS FOR ELDERLY WOMEN

In considering colors the first that usually comes to mind is gray, but at present there is almost as wide a range for selection among the various shades of gray as if they were different colors. Royal purple is superb with whitening hair. Certain petunia shades harmonize exceedingly well with silvery locks as well as certain shades of light blue. The latter, if carefully chosen is very rejuvinating, but great care must be exercised in selection, as no color is more unbecoming on the wrong woman than blue.

Lilac, violet and heliotrope have long since been recognized as eminently becoming to those of advanced years. In fact they are often worn whether they are becoming or not. because they are suitable to old age. Years have very little to do with the becomingness of colors. Pure white is an excellent color for elderly women who do not grow too thin at this time of life. It is not often becoming to thin women, but if a woman can wear it to good advantage, she should.

Greens, yellows and reds do not lend themselves to any degree of charm to the beautifying of advanced years The first is a spring and summer hue for the autumn and winter of life. Red is a very challenging color, and brings out the lines and wrinkles in the face very forcibly, and for that reason must not be indulged in as the years go by.

In choosing colors consider the individual complexion and coloring. It is nearly always safe to follow the general tinting. The colorless face may not look well with the tints that favor the pink and white skin. There is a gray with a pinnish tinge for the latter that is very suitable, and the dark orchid shades in which the same pinkish tinting is discernible, but not conspicuous, will be good for street costumes.

A True Story.

Written by the Mrs. U. B. John Miller of Newville.

The events of this story actually occurred in the summer of 1870, the place being about twelve miles east of Logansport, which is the county seat of Cass county. In that part of the country at that period of time, prairie land of perhaps ten, twenty or even thirty acres was bordered with woodland of such heavy timber that it might well be called a forest.

The borders between the prairie and woods abounded with black huckleberries and patches of winter green alternately; and all cattle belonging to the neighboring farmers were allowed to run at large and roam at will, through the woods, the border land and the prairie during the summer time. Each day along toward sunset the children, generally in groups, from every direction started for the woods and wild prairie on the hunt for their cows, generally being guided by the tinkle of the seperate musical bells attached to the leader's neck by a strap. Thus it was that two sisters and another, a neighbor girl, started on the cow hunt near sunset of one summer day. While passing a neighbor's house the residents came out and asked the trio if they would oblige them by starting their cow homeward, as they had harvest hands coming to a late supper and could not join in the cow hunt this evening; telling them to hurry and get out of the woods before dark.

The oldest of the sisters made the remark that over in Miami County, among the Indians, where they had recently moved from, girls wouldn't go cow hunting alone, and went on to state how one evening they had just gone to the border of their own land, which was fenced in, and an Indian jumped over the fence and chased them home. The girl noticed a queer look pass between the girls to whom this story was being related but attributed it to incredulity. And so the little lady cow hunters went on their way singing, swinging clasped hands and running all at once. Finally they reached the big prairie and singling out their cattle began swinging their long withy whips and hallowing, "hey boss, hey there". At this intimation that tis' nearly milking time the cows put their heads up in the air and bellowing all started for their seperate home, each one going on a trot in the right direction. The girls skirted the large prairie not caring to wade through the tall thick grass on account of the large rattle snakes and blue racers that were quite plentiful there. Upon reaching the right location, they took time to snatch off a handful of the buckleberries and fill their mouths and picked a few wintergreen leaves, then they made a bee line for the road that run thru the woods road to the main country road that passed their homes about one and one-half mile from where they had found and routed the cattle.

The girls had joined hands again and was running, when they came to the woods road they saw something that froze the song on their lips and the blood in their veins; two men, one short of stature, both dark sinister looking fellows. One said loud enough for the girls to hear "There they are, I told you they'd come out here." "Let's run back to the prairie and hide in the grass" whispered the youngest girl; "No, no they will run after us, if we do" the older sister said. "Let us walk right past them and never let them know that we are afraid of them, Mother says, that the Indians will not hurt you if you do that." By this time the desperadoes were so close that the terrified girls could not whisper another word, and to their great relief passed by, but as they did so they gave each other a malicious look which boded trouble for three poor helpless girls in the wood.

After getting a few feet away the sisters remarked: "If they are Indians they are half white for they both have black mustaches. At that the older girl looked around and said, "Oh, my Lord, they are coming"; then one of the fellows said in a hoarse voice "You may run but we will catch you." At that the oldest girl bounded away like a deer, the sisters tried to follow suit. But, Oh, Merciful Heavens, the little one has fainted and fallen to the ground; the faithful sister stooped and tried to raise her in her trembling arms. The outlaws were now upon them, "Oh Sirs, pleaded the unhappy sister, don't take us or hurt us, we have always lived among the Indians and our parents were very kind and respectful to them, we never harmed—".

Looking up from the unconscious sister what does she see, two girls minus the mustache and slouchy hat, but with trousers on. Her anger knew no bounds. "See, she cried, striking them in the face, the breast, anywhere she could, "See you have killed my sister." While this one sided fight was going on, two more appeared upon the scene. They were the mothers of two desperadoes, who being busy in the summer shed with the harvest supper was not cognisant of the movements of the girls until a little one had lispingly told them that Lizzie and Retta had put on panths and gone away to sthare the other girlts.

Then the older women of the two, knowing the nervous temperament of the little girl, started with the other women at her heels carrying their babies with them and leaving the late supper to take care of its self; arriving upon the scene as described, they sent the girls to a nearby pool, where they wet the handkerchief found in the pocket of the masculine attire, and they bathed the face of the little girl, who was in a death-like swoon, calling for her to look at them and speak.

Regardless of the fighting attitude of the loving and offended sister. Meantime, the girl who had so gallantly abandoned the sisters to their fate had let no grass grow under her feet, arriving at the home of the sisters she excitedly informed the mother, that two Indians had ran them down and killed or carried off her daughters. The frantic mother run nearly one and one half mile to the scene of action, but when the girl desperadoes saw the frantic mother approaching, that was too much for their bravado, and regardless of big snakes they took their masculine appearance off across the prairie to their home carrying the babies with them. Their fun turned to sorrow and dismay, and a threatened whipping besides.

By the time the mother arrived the child opened her eyes and was looking wildly about, but upon being assured that none but friends were present, she tried to rise and was taken up in her mother's arms. The neighbors offering all kind of appologies for the escapades of their daughters, and taking turns in carrying the little girl home; where she hovered between life and death on the border land, with nervous prostration for many days.

The girl desperadoes, as they were jestingly called, after the crisis was passed and the little girl restored to health again, never cared to play a practical joke on anyone again. The desperado girls were fourteen years old, and one was quite tall for that age. This is a true story and might be a warning to those who love to play jokes on their comrades and playmates.

A Cure for the Blues.

Have you ever met with the man or woman who is a victim of the blues? They feel that fate is against them. They worry and stew about imaginary ills until life becomes a burden.

Many a man has made a business failure and given up in dispair all because he had the blues.

We should not consider such conditions lightly, for there is a deep secret underlying every case of the blues.

The person whose physical condition is normal, is optemistic; adversities only make them more cautious and more determined to succeed.

If the liver is not acting properly the system becomes full of poisonous accumulations, the kidneys and the stomach and intestinal glands become suggish and a general debilitateed and nervous condition exists.

The blood becomes impure, the circulation sluggish and the brain clouded.

GLANDO is the best remedy for the blues. It is a general gland tonic that starts up the glandular action, drives off the accumulated poisons and builds up the system. A 50 cent package contains three seperate treatments, each treatment having a specific part to perform in effecting a cure.

WHEN YOU WAKE UP DRINK GLASS OF HOT WATER

Wash the poisons and toxins from system before putting more food into stomach.

Says Inside-bathing makes anyone look and feel clean, sweet and refreshed.

Wash yourself on the inside before breakfast like you do on the outside. This is vastly more important because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing illness, while the bowel pores do.

For every ounce of food and drink taken into the stomach, nearly an ounce of waste material must be carried out of the body. If this waste material is not eliminated day by day it quickly ferments and generates poisons, gases and toxins which are absorbed or sucked into the blood stream, through the lymph ducts which should suck only nourishment to sustain the body.

A splendid health measure is to drink, before breakfast each day, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, which is a harmless way to wash these poisons, gases and toxins from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels; thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate costs but very little at the drug store but is sufficient to make anyone an enthusiast on inside-bathing. Men and women who are accustomed to wake up with a dull, aching head or have furred tongue, bad taste, nasty breath, sallow complexion, others who have bilious attacks, acid stomach or constipation are assured of pronounced improvement in both health and appearance shortly.

SAGE AND SULPHUR DARKENS GRAY HAIR

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Restore Color, Gloss and Attractiveness.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, for about 50 cents.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire dark hair and a youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

URIC ACID IN MEAT CLOGS THE KIDNEYS

Take a glass of Salts if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you—Drink more water.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

THE KITCHEN

SCALLOPED CELERY.

Wash, scrape and cut in inch pieces three cupfuls of celery. Cover with boiling salted water, and cook twenty minutes, or until tender. Melt four tablespoonfuls of butter, add three tablespoonfuls of flour, and when well blended, add gradually two cupfuls of hot milk. Heat, and when the boiling point is reached add half a teaspoonful of salt, a quarter teaspoonful of white pepper and a half cupful of grated cheese. Cook until the cheese is melted, add celery and pour into a buttered baking dish. Cover with buttered bread crumbs, and bake in a moderate oven for twenty minutes.

JAM OMELET.

One tablespoonful powdered sugar, one teaspoonful cornstarch, three tablespoonfuls milk, strawberry jam, five eggs. Beat yolks of the eggs light with powdered sugar; into this stir the cornstarch dissolved in the milk. Then fold in the stiffly beaten whites. Cook in a buttered sauce pan until "set;" spread with jam; then serve as a dessert.

MACAROON CREAM.

Soak one tablespoonful of granulated gelatin in three tablespoonfuls of cold water, then add to two cups of scalded milk in which two squares of unsweetened chocolate have been melted. Add the yolks of three eggs mixed with half a cupful of sugar and one-fourth of a teaspoonful of salt. Stir constantly until the mixture thickens, then add the whites of the eggs, beaten until stiff; a teaspoonful of vanilla and one cup of macaroons, dried and rolled. Turn into small molds and chill thoroughly.

APPLE SAUCE CAKE.

One cupful of sugar, one-half cupful of butter, one cupful of apple sauce, sweetened, one teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of nutmeg, cloves and cinnamon mixed, one and three-fourths cupfuls of flour. Lemon peel, orange peel, chopped nuts or a cupful of raisins may be added if a richer cake be desired. Cream the butter and sugar. Then stir the soda in the apple sauce and add to the sugar mixture. Sift the spices with the flour and beat all together thoroughly. Bake in a moderate oven.

BERMUDA ONIONS.

Parboil Bermuda onions ten minutes. When cold remove the center and fill with mixture of bread crumbs and the chopped centers, seasoning highly and adding a generous amount of butter. Sprinkle with buttered crumbs, cover and bake an hour in a pan containing a little water. Uncover and brown lightly.

"Spank-ing, Spank-ing, Spank-ing," said the pendulum of the solemn voiced clock to Thomas J. Wiggs, Jr. He sat before the fireplace with his heels sprawling wide apart, watching with mournful interest the long black pointer check off the remaining minutes before father's arrival. The library was very still except for Juke's purring. He could purr, because his cat-conscience was clear. He stroked his long whiskers with his paws, and looked into the fire smugly dreaming of jungles full of mice. Thomas J. Wiggs had reasons for looking disturbed and serious.

It all happened because of that miserable lie Thomas told about Juke. To state the case briefly the pie for dinner couldn't be found. Thomas declared he had seen custard on Juke's whiskers. But cook had proved Juke's alibi. She had seen him on the back fence during the mysterious disappearance aforesaid. Thomas was the other suspect under arrest. Mother led him to the library at once, sternly inquiring.

"Thomas, did you take the custard pie?"

He knew it was not necessary for the accused to plead guilty. He kept a wise silence. It is embarrassing to be spanked by ones mother at the ripe age of eight.

"I see you are both stubborn and deceitful," decreed mother. "If you do not confess, father must attend to your case."

Thomas Wiggs, Jr., looked at the library drawer where father kept the tool of justice. It was great—Uncle Henry's bed-room slipper, a very venerable piece of footwear, which had paddled grandfather and father from being bad little boys who stole jam and told lies into big boys, who spanked their little boys just for doing the very same things. The slipper was smooth on the bottom; and the velvet top looked very worn.

Thomas thought he would drown his fears by reading how coal was made many millions of years ago. Once—he read—the crust of the earth was very thin. It was all covered with great forests of mosses, ferns, lichens and other vegetable matter. The inside of the earth was boiling hot and often would get to boiling so hard that terrible earthquakes broke open the crust. The water crept into these hollows and covered the dead plants. There they stayed many years until the pressure above them and the heat below turned them into a hard black substance called carbon. Then earthquakes raised the beds above water and the coal was ready for use.

Thomas wondered if there were fairies then and if they ever spanked their bad little boys for lying. He knew that there were dinosaurs, who lived long ago. They were great creatures with the bodies and tails of crocodiles and the long necks and heads of snakes. When they sat on their hind legs they could easily eat the top leaves of a full grown oak tree.

Thomas took Juke into his arms to tell him all about it; but Juke didn't pay attention. He looked toward the fender as if he saw a mouse. He put out his paw softly toward the fire, and at that moment a voice sighed from the coals.

"Oh, I'm so glad to get out of that dirty black prison."

A dainty fairy with blue-gas wings stood upon the fender. Her full skirts were made of blue fire; she wore a morning glory shaped cap and carried a wand that shone like a diamond.

"How did you get here?" asked Thomas with boy-like directness.

"I came out of the coal," said Miss Fairy, stretching her little ankles gracefully forward from the fender, "You'd be tired, too, if you had been cramped in a piece of coal for millions of years."

"Huh," snorted Thomas," I don't believe you were ever in there."

"I'm no liar," snapped Miss Fairy, looking at him very hard.

Thomas hung his head in shame. He thought of the appointment he had with father and the slipper.

"You'd better be going," he suggested, "Juke and I were trying to read."

Lady Fairy smiled. She knew why Thomas was shut up in the library, for she had heard cook giving a full account of the disappearance of the pie. Turning to the fire she called softly. The coals cracked and crackled, sending out hundreds of sparks, pink, blue, yellow, violet, lavendar, white, red, a perfect rainbow of them.

"It's as good as a Roman wheel on the Fourth of July," shouted Thomas.

Then a very wonderful thing happened. Each spark became a lovely fairy each fairy brought with her a sweet baby fairy. There were yellow flame-babies with yellow wings of gauzy fire; pink babies with pink wings who rollicked until they fell over onto their fat stomachs; blue babies cooing in their mothers' arms; every kind of a baby that you can imagine. They whisked and scampered over the hearth like a flock of merry, many-colored butterflies.

"Who are you?" asked Thomas, "And where did you all come from?"

"We are the souls of the ferns and plants that died to make the coal," shouted the visitors. "Don't you want to go back to Fairyland with us?"

"You bet," answered Thomas, "If I go away pa and ma will be sorry."

"The fur-boy may go, too," conceded Miss Fairy, pointing at Juke with her wand. As she waved it Juke turned into a fairy-cat with maltese wings. He was so delighted with them that he took his tail into his mouth and waltzed in the air several times.

"We must be going," commanded the queen. A broad road opened up through the bright red coals. Juke hung back for a moment. He was afraid of getting his paws and whiskers sooty in the chimney. But when he saw there were no bad fairy boys with tin cans, nor fairy dogs, he joined hands with the rest. A bright circlet of wings swept up the broad fireplace to the heart of old fairyland.

They went so fast that Thomas held his breath and shut his eyes. Quick as thought they were in the great Throne Room of the Imperial Palace of Fairyland. Exquisite fern leaves grew freshly all over the walls. Fairies trod softly on a moss carpet to a dais upon which the diamond throne of the fairy realm rested. As the queen spread out her skirts of blue fire over the throne thousand of quivering lances of colored fire shot through the room.

Behind the queen's throne stood a regiment of the largest and fiercest spiders Thomas had ever seen. They were the Imperial Body Guard of Her Majesty, Queen Fern Fairy.

"My Chief Lieutenant will now call roll and make the usual proclamation of the day," commanded Queen Fern regally.

A great old spider who limped in his eighth hind leg came forward. He was high up in rank and wore a sauce pan hat strapped far over toward his ear as a sign of military dignity. After saluting his queen he began to read in pompous, legal language,

"I Queen Fern, set aside and dedicate this day as a legal holiday throughout my entire realm. All subject owing me allegiance shall assemble on this same day aforesaid, to pay homage. Refreshments of Fairy Pie will be served after the usual business of the day is transacted."

Just then the delicious smell of baking pie greeted Juke's inquisitive nose. He looked iniquitously toward Thomas, as if plotting some kind of revenge.

"A mouse. A mouse," shrieked Juke ruffling up his fur and walking stealthily towards the door, as if he saw a real live one. Every fairy lady screamed and climbed up onto a toadstool. Thomas followed Juke out to see what it all meant.

They entered a long hallway at the end of which a great sign gave the warning,

POSITIVELY NO ADMITTANCE TO SMALL BOYS.

"I'll bet that's a pantry," exclaimed Juke. He pushed open the door, and what a sight for hungry eyes. There stood lemon pie, nicely browned with billows of meringue and amber beads of melted sugar on top; fat juicy blue-berry pie; spicy apple and cinnamon pie; cranberry pie with lattice crust work and delicious dabs of whipped cream; there was rich custard pie; and every one seemed to fairly scream,

"Eat me."

Juke jumped up onto the shelf and began to greedily devour the custard dainty.

"Oh, here, you give me some of that," yelled Thomas, "Custard is my favorite, too."

"You shan't have any of this. Last time you took all the custard pie and gave me all the blame of taking it. I'll pay you back. You shan't have any, so now," spit Juke angrily putting both paws around the disputed dainty.

"Which one will I eat first?" wondered Thomas.

A footstep sounded in the hallway. Juke scented danger and flashed through the open door; but Thomas, alas was not quick enough. Something stood in the doorway. It was a dinosaur.

It filled the entire doorway as it stood fumbling in the pocket of a great apron which partially covered a huge, wrinkled, crocodilian looking stomach. To Thomas' surprise it pulled out Great-Uncle Henry's bedroom slipper. Thomas noticed with awe that the slipper was neatly embroidered with the word LIE.

It stepped nearer to Thomas trailing a great, thick green tail across the floor. Undulating a long snaky neck forward and downward and applying to her cold glittering eye an eyeglass which looked very much like mother's the monster glared at him much as a hungry boa constrictor looks at a luscious fat boy. Her huge hulk swayed a little and a voice like mother's commented.

"You are indeed a very naughty little boy. You must come with me at once to Queen Fern."

When Thomas returned to the fairies Juke had become the hero of the hour. He told the fairies wonderful stories of his battle with the mouse. Queen Fern knighted him the Most Brave and Right Honorable Sir Juke. He held up his tail over his mouth to cover a malicious smile when he saw Thomas.

"We have in our midst a pie-thief," announced the dinosaur. Every mouth and every eye grew cipher shaped as they looked with horror on the accused.

"I'm not. Juke ate the pie. I just followed to see where he went," protested Thomas stoutly.

"Your Majesty I am innocent," said Juke folding his paws across his stomach with a self-righteous and convincing air.

"I believe you," answered the queen. "I know Thomas is in the habit of taking pie and then blaming you for it."

"If you killed the mouse, why don't you show the body?" inquired Thomas.

"Your Majesty," explained Juke, "I ate the mouse. It has long since digested."

"You had better confess, it will lessen the offense," sternly suggested Queen Fern.

"I won't confess," roared Thomas, "And don't you let that dinosaur come near me either."

"Very well," concluded the queen, "I see you are both deceitful and stubborn. But we have a good way of making bad boys own up in Fairyland. Cook bring out the Ordeal Pie."

The dinosaur soon produced a pie as large as a wagon wheel. The fairies held struggling Thomas down upon the moss.

"Now," said Queen Fern, "If you have never stolen or lied the pie will not grow heavy. But if you have it will grow heavier—heavier—heavier," her words trailed off indistinctly. Thomas felt a mountain growing in the pit of his stomach. The dinosaur kept coming nearer and nearer, this time he knew she was going to make a meal of him,

"Oh—Oh—Oh—don't," he sobbed. Oh—Oh—Oh—I did take a pie out of mother's pantry once. Oh—Oh—Oh—I'm so sorry."

Suddenly Juke, who was dancing madly around, gave him a vicious scratch, and a voice said,

"Wake up Tom you've got the nightmare."

Thomas Wiggs opened two very sleepy eyes. The library was lighted.

"Why you squeezed Juke until he scratched you," said mother.

"Oh, father, don't let that dinosaur get me," sobbed Thomas.

And father took him into his arms for he knew that one bad dream is spanking enough for one small boy in one short day.

EMERGENCY BITS.

Often one needs a small funnel and there is none available, so try this for such an emergency: Make a small hole in the end of an eggshell and pour the liquid through this into the bottle.

Another emergency device—If you have a small bottle which no cork will fit try boiling any cork which is handy five minutes and when it is soft it can be molded to fit any bottle.

FRINGE ON PARASOLS.

Fringe trimmed parasols are being shown among the new things for spring, the fringe being of silk or worsted, fully four inches wide and in matching or brilliantly contrasting colors.

SELLING YOUR OLD PAPERS?

Better Save 'Em, for You Can Get $25 Cash Per Ton from Dealers.

The thriftiest housewife doesn't stop at picking up the old pins in March, 1916. She is maintaining a big bix in some out of the way corner of the house, where she is storing away every piece of scrap paper, stray rags, read magazines, and the old Tribune. In a few weeks a neatly dressed buyer, representing one of the more progressive paper companies, calls and she will cash in the results of her industry at the rate of $25 per ton (or 1¼ cents per pound), and it doesn't take much to make a ton either.

This is just $13 a ton net more than she would have received a year ago, before Norway closed the door against wood pulp exports and England prohibited the exportation of linen and cotton rags and put the American paper makers up against it.

The government departments of commerce, treasury, postoffice and agriculture already have joined in the campaign to get skeptical women in line. The department of commerce has issued an official bulletin with notice to all custom house officials and custodians to federal buildings "to post in a conspicuous place," pointing out that a large proportion of the 15,000 tons of different kinds of paper manufactured in the country every day could be used again in some class of paper if saved.

The department of agriculture initiated a study of the problem and its experts estimate that the farmers alone burn up or waste in other ways 1,400,000 tons of flax, with an annual loss of an even $5,000,000.

THE OVEN.

"This would be a fine cake if only my oven had been just right." How often have you heard a friend make that remark and agreed with her too, but did either of you know what that "just right" meant?

Uniformity of heat is a most important feature in successful baking. It requires skill to obtain just the right heat. Not so very long ago a great bread bakery found it necessary to let some of the great ovens cool off. After the fires were rebuilt it was about a week before they could be sure of the uniformity of the bread baked in those ovens. This merely demonstrates to the housewife the necessity for giving time and attention to her oven when she intends to bake.

When the cake comes out of the oven cracked it has been subjected to too great a heat at first. The cake baked so quickly at first that the gases did not have a chance to escape and finally when formed in enough volume, they broke through to the top, leaving a great crack. When the oven is unevenly heated the cake either rises up in the middle or on either side, making it impossible to make an even layer or to frost a loaf cake to advantage. When the cake "falls" it is because the oven has been too suddenly cooled or the cake jarred.

Eve was the first woman—and probably the last—who did not gather up her skirts and scream at sight of a mouse.

WHEN DREAMS COME TRUE.

For the benefit of the snooper who is always asking what there is in a name, it may be well to anticipate his inquiry with reference to "The Fires of St. John," the Sudermann play which Edgar Lewis, with Nance O'Neil as his star, is building into a powerful multiple reel photoplay feature.

For the meaning of "The Fires of St. John," one must delve far back into the annals of the mediaeval folklore of the peoples of Central Europe. It refers to a celebration on St. John's eve and in Sudermann's play is thus described by one of the characters:

"An old pagan spark has outlived centuries. Once every year that spark is fanned into flame—it flames high and then it is called 'The Fires of St. John.' Once eevry year we have 'free night.' Then the witches ride upon their brooms; with scornful laughter the wild hordes sweep across the tree tops, up, up, high upon the Blocksberg! Then it is when in our hearts awake those wild desires which our fates dared not fulfill—then, no matter what may be the name of the law that governs the world on that day, that single wish may be converted into reality.

"And the fires? Those tongues of fire shooting up towards the heavens, they are the spirits of our dead and perished wishes. They are the red plumage of the desires we have petted through our entire lives."

This is the meaning of "The Fires of St. John" and Nance O'Neill and Edgar Lewis are making the most of it in the forthcoming photoplay.

NERVE? YES, SOME.

The Vogue Company was recently out on location filming some scenes for "Sammy vs. Cupid," a Mutual comedy release. Sammy Burns, the Vogue comedian, and two huskies, were on the roof of a building some eighteen feet from the ground. The huskies were to throw Sammy from the roof. Why? Because Sammy's fiance wouldn't marry him unless he were athletic enough to protect her through life; and he was rapidly becoming an athlete.

Twice the scene was taken, but Director Scharrar was not quite satisfied. He called for a "retake." Josh Benny, the six-foot four strong man and his assistant grappled with Sammy and threw him. The luckless leading man landed on one hand, spraining his wrist.

Sammy Burns is a nervy little chap, and after the injury was taken care of, he continued with the picture, and even assisted in the cutting and assembling of previously filmed scenes.

VIOLET MERSEREAU UNDER EYE OF LAW.

Violet Mersereau, the dainty little star of the Red Feather feature, "The Path of Happiness," has discovered what it feels like to be under the eye of the law. It happened in this wise: She is an ardent equestrienne, and with her little sister she frequently rides in Central Park. Both were mounted one frosty morning recently, when the horses seemed to be inspired by the sparkling air, and started going at such a clip that the two girls could not control their pace. Both tried their best to pull up, but in vain.

A mounted policeman thought that they were trying to race, which is forbidden in the park, and he started after them in hot pursuit. Of course, that only made their horses go the faster. At last the policeman caught them, and then he refused to listen to their explanations, but instead read them a lecture on speeding. Miss Mersereau says that now every time she goes riding, the same policeman keeps his eye on her, and hardly lets her go faster than a walk without a warning look.

GIRLS ON RAMPAGE.

The midnight escapade of a crowd of mischievous school girls is turned into a dangerous adventure, full of thrills and moments of breathless suspense, in "The Burglars' Picnic," a three part Than-o-play. Marion and Madeline Fairbanks, the beautiful twin girls who have brought fame to the Thanhouser (Mutual) studios, are featured as the fun-loving ring-leaders. Their daring becomes heroism in the sensational capture of two crooks. There is an unexpected sequel to the story in which one of the twins' burglars proves that every law-breaker is not a hardened criminal.

LION PROVES STAR.

And did you ever love a lion? Did you ever feel wishful to smooth his mane and chuck him under the chin and generally chum around with him as though he were a nice collie dog? If not, that's an experience you have coming to you.

De Wolf Hopper is starred and Fay Tincher is mentioned honorably, and never a word is given to the lion, let alone a still picture, but he is the sure enough object of affectionate attention while he palavers as jungle lion never did. When he enters he dominates the situation as effectively as he chases the players, until he wins not only the observers' hearts but their wonder that he could be a lion and behave so eastasly.

Besides the lion, of course, "Sunshine Dad" is an enjoyable photoplay, full of sparkling fun, particularly of subtitle and situation. One does not feel especially humorously thrilled by De Wolf Hopper, who has not yet gotten over playing to the audience in front nor by the turbaned Swamis who float around with villainous knives. But they are jumbled into most amusing situations, and they are interpreted by racily clever subtitles that never fail in stirring chuckles. One especially good one is directed to the person who delights in reading them aloud.

PAYING BILLS.

There's nothing more pleasant than paying your bills, than paying your bills at the time when they're due; it sends through your heart most enjoyable thrills, to know that there's nothing charged up against you. You're making the wheels of your village go round, you're giving the workers the best kind of aid, when you dig from your wallet the shilling and pound and pay up your bills in the palace of trade. You're filling the soul of the merchant with glee, you're bidding the banker to weep never more, you're hanging new wreaths on your family tree, when you pay up your bills at the dofunny store. That man is a hindrance and hurt to his town, a brake on the wheels of his own neighborhood, who views the collector with withering frown, who doesn't pay up when the paying is good.

WALT MASON.

BATHROOM BEAUTIFUL.

With the advent of spring the bathroom becomes the most important feature of home comfort. If it is fresh, attractive and daintily appointed, it is a most grateful retreat after a hot shopping trip downtown or a long day's work at the office. The wise housekeeper spends much thought and care on the furnishing and decoration of her bathroom and sees to it, in addition, that there is never any lack of freshly folded towels and washcloths, of the various kinds of soap that members of the family prefer, and of that indispensable summer comfort, talcum powder in a generous shaker.

White paint and white woodwork are most attractive in the bathroom—unless one is blessed with a luxurious white tiled and white enameled room such as the modern apartment house provides for its occupants. There should always be a breeze blowing the white curtain at the bathroom window in summer time, and the shaded bathroom, with blinds half bowed outside, or an awning let down if there are no blinds, is much more grateful to the worn and weary seeker of a cool plunge than a room into which the sun pours blindingly.

A growing plant on the window sill will add to the cool suggestion of the bathroom, and in summer the floor covering may be taken up and a blue and white rag laid before the tub.

Hand drawn linen window shades are charming in bathroom windows. Such windows are usually small, and set rather high in the wall, so such a shade need not be very large. It may be hung with loops of tape to an ordinary brass window rod, and should hang flat against the window opening, the drawnwork or cutwork border running across the lower edge above a deep hem.

Hand embroidered and initialed towels give a suggestion of luxury and distinction, and the housekeeper can do the simple embroidery easily and quickly in odd moments. But whatever the kind of towels, be sure there is always a-plenty. There are few things more maddening than to be all ready to step into a bath and then discover that one must dress and make a trip to the linen closet for towels and washcloths.

ANY ONE WANT A 30 DAY CRUISE ON A BATTLESHIP?

Navy Department Offers Free Course in Naval Tactics to American Citizens.

The navy department has authorized a naval training cruise for civilians which will begin August 15 and last about thirty days. Most of the time will be spent on board reserve battleships, on which the man will be put through a course in naval tactics.

Civilians will be recruited by naval districts and the ships will be allotted according to the number of recruits accepted in each district. As each man reports on shipboard he will be called upon to deposit $30, which will cover the cost of his board for the cruise and provide him with the necessary outfit of sea clothes.

In order to qualify for the cruise recruits must be citizens of the United States, between the ages of 19 and 45, in good standing, and must be able to pass a prescribed physical examination.

Six months' experience, or its equivalent, in any one of the following trades would be considered a qualification for enrollment: Machinist, boilermaker, plumber, coppersmith, carpenter, electrician, engineer, fireman, telegrapher, radio operator. Applications must be made to recruiting officers not later than June 1, 1916.

HOUSEHOLD SUGGESTIONS

When repairing a white silk garment, which has yellowed slightly, with new silk, sponge new silk with weak tea and there will be no difference in shade.

Wrap chunks of soft coal in newspaper and fill coal pail; then when you get up at night to build fire in sick room, there is no noise or black hands.

For taking hot pans or dishes from oven: A flat wooden shovel made of any thin board—stout shingle will answer. Shave one end down rather thin, narrow it slightly; shape other end into handle with hole in end to hang it by, near the stove.

Anoint sweet potatoes with lard, before putting in oven; will never dry out, and are usually moist and easy to peel.

When corks are too large to go into bottle throw them into hot water for a few moments, they will soften and fit without any trouble.

Labor saver—Children often spill tea or coffee whenever there is a clean table pad put on (which everybody knows are such a job to wash in winter). Get cheap white table oilcloth, length of pad, put on top of pad before putting on table cloth.

When making boys pants if mothers will put in a large piece of the same material in the knees between lining and outside it will be there ready when needed.

Instead of having one large piece bag, have several small ones for instance, one of outing flannel for outings, gingham for ginghams, etc. Thus at sight of bag you know what is in it.

Save the paper caps from milk bottles to put over mouth of bottle again when setting out containing ticket for milkman; will prevent storm entering bottle.

To peel tomatoes without scalding: Rub silver or plated knife all over skin of ripe tomato to loosen it; skin will come off just as easily as if scalded. Hot water always gives a cooked taste and is not so nice when tomatoes are served raw.

Whenever ink is spilled at once pile salt on the place. When saturated remove it and use fresh. Will take out every trace of ink, even from purest marble.

That Artificial Bloom

Any girl may make her own rouge if she wishes by taking rice powder and coloring it with powdered carmine and a little ochre, about one fourth less of the latter than carmine.

A cream being easier to apply one may wish that which is made by adding a little cold cream, remembering that the shade of red must then be a little deeper as the grease lessens its coloring properties.

Beet rouge that was popular with our grandmothers, can be made by anyone.

The raw vegetable is thoroughly washed and dried. It is then pressed against a grater until the juice is extracted and this liquid is then mixed with starch or rice powder until the shade one wishes is attained.

It is finally covered with a thin cloth to keep out dust and set in the sun to dry.

This is absolutely harmless when applied to the skin.

A few drops of rose or lavender oil worked in will make it adhere to the skin better, but the preparation thus made requires thorough sifting thru muslin to make it smooth.

Emergency Sandwiches

One housekeeper who found herself called upon unexpectedly to regale some guests one evening, having nothing else in the house, made sandwiches of some bits of chicken dressing warmed up for the occasion, with a pinch of curry added.

Another housekeeper—she was a bride by the way—grabbed up a box of marshmellows after the hand shaking, and leaving hubby to do the honors, returned from the kitchen presently with these delectable sweets toasted and put between some thin sweet buns she had made for supper

A pinch of home made grape jelly put beside the softened candy gave the taste sublime.

Gold Feathers

They can be made of an old quill from which the battered feathers have been stripped.

Gold lace is sewn as a scant ruffle on each side the end being slightly pointed.

You have no idea how efective these are on a fur turban. From this idea a departure into the realms of silver, bronze or jeweled lace can be made, and at little cost.

These quills with a band of braid or lace to match, will furnish sufficient trimming for a velvet or fur toque.

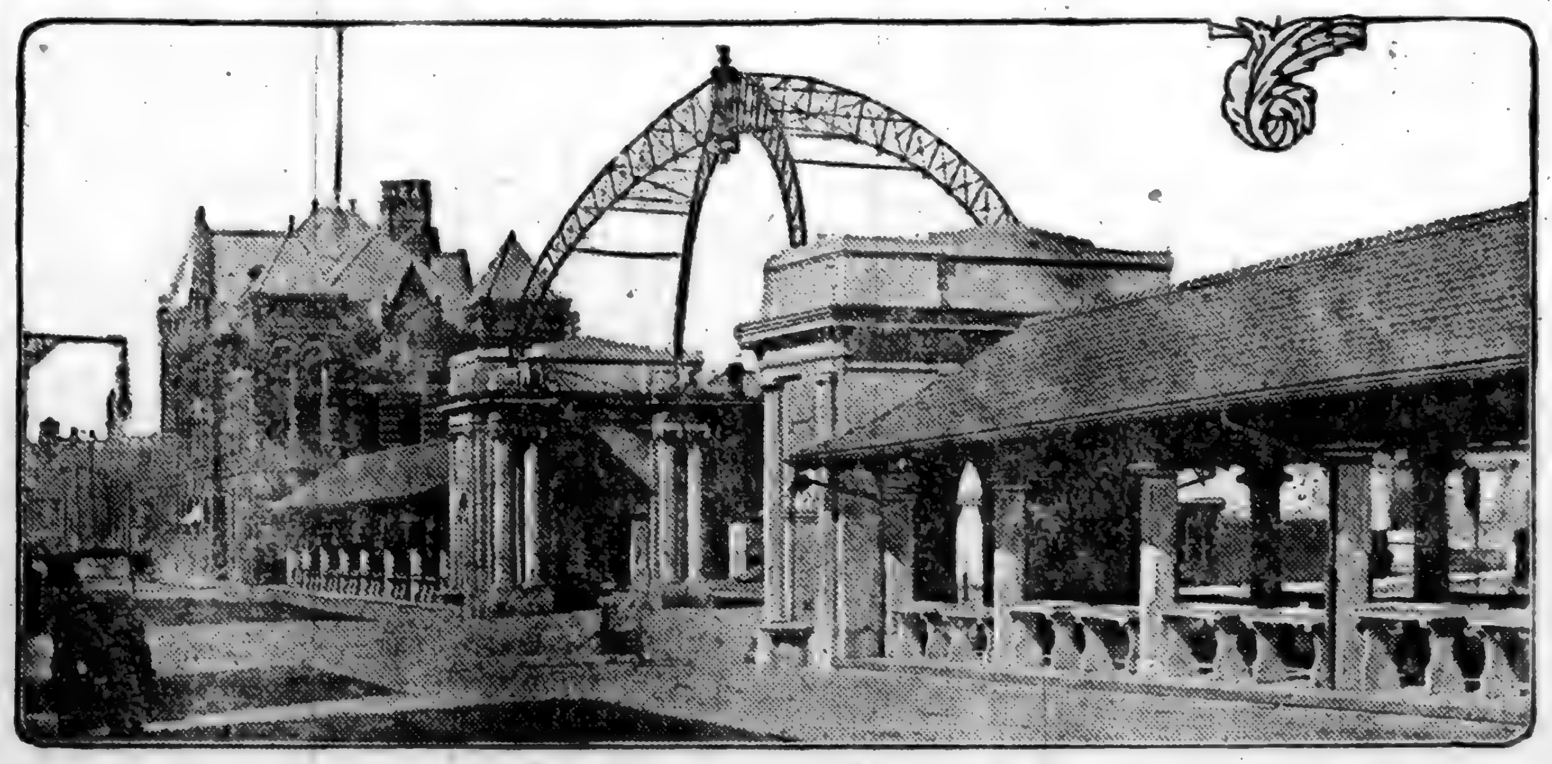
Cleaning Nickel

The nickel on stoves can be kept as bright and clear as when new by simply washing with clear lukewarm water, then drying with clean dry cloth. My stove looks like new and I have taken care of it this way for four

Sink Cleaner

A tablespoon of washing soda and a cup of vinegar poured down the sink will clean out the most stubborn of clogged pipes.

MUNICIPAL MARKET HOUSE AT FORT WAYNE



Fort Wayne, Ind., has one of the most scientifically arranged city market places in the United States. The market wagons back up to the curb along the house, and purchasers have the use of the passage through it. Five foot concrete tables between the columns are used by the marketmen for display purposes.

Dictates of Fashion

NEW PARASOLS FOR THE COMING SEASON.

No sooner does the fashionable woman select her suits and gowns for spring than she suddenly discovers it is also time to choose the accessories that add so much to the beauty of her attire. The parasol, while a necessity when the sun's rays become warm, is an extremely decorative addition and not infrequently gives the gay dash of color to the plain costume.

This season there are many lovely models. These are fashioned in various styles—those that suggest the Flowery kingdom being greatly liked. The bell shape, with prettily turned up ribs, the canopy that recalls the palanquin of an eastern monarch, and the real Japanese umbrella are developed in beautiful silks. The last named is finished without the ferrule that is the accepted mode in the western world, and as if to compensate for its absence a cord is attached to the handle so that when this is slipped about the wrist there will be no fear of its touching the ground.

Some of the most attractive parasols are shirred about the edge, while one of the newest models is trimmed with real ostrich. This unusual decoration makes a delightful finish, and also possesses the merit of novelty—a feature that is especially gratifying to the woman who follows hard in the footsteps of Dame Fashion. One model originated in a magnificent purple silk is bordered with black and white striped silk, a tiny frill of ostrich flues veiling the latter.

Gay colors seem to predominate in the new sun shades. Stripes both broad and narrow are cleverly combined in novel ways, while bands of self-colored silk are also used with them. On one model a floral patterned silk is chosen for the border of a plain silk.

The handles are plain or carved, and many are finished with the heavy cord loop that insures the safety of the sun shade, for once it is swung on the wrist there is small chance of its being laid down, as one is apt to do with the straight handled models.

While the parasols pictured are all designed for women, yet many of these styles, or rather simpler editions of them, are duplicated for children in dainty rose-bud patterns and self-colored India silks.

DAINTY TULLE SCARFS.

A fad that will recommend itself to the girl at home is the new theater scarf of tulle. These scarfs are nearly three yards long and are finished with heavy silk tassels. They are meant to wrap about the throat in the same fashion as a sport scarf, and should carry out the color scheme of one's frock.

The prettiest ones are the rainbow scarfs. These are actually no more than three layers of malines, which costs but 25 cents a yard.

Pale pink, turquoise blue and delicate lavender are put one on top of the other, and may be either bound with gold braid or simply caught together with silk thread here and there. The ends are gathered and a gold tassel attached, and when the scarf is wrapped about the throat the colors blend in a wonderfully lovely effect.

Coral pink and turquoise blue chiffon may be put together in the same fashion, while other color combinations are dull green and brown, which gives a bronze effect; rose pink and purple, pale gray and black, and three shades of blue.

The cost is moderate. One might have any number of these dainty trifles.

NEEDLEWORK NOTES.

Black mercerized crochet cotton is desirable to use when darning stockings instead of the usual mending cotton. It is stronger, easier to work with and makes neater looking work than mending cotton.

When traveling, it is a great convenience to have a bag for holding rubber shoes when not in use. One of these may be made with a lining of rubber cloth, made separately, so that the outer cover of tan linen can be removed for washing. The other cover is made like an envelope and a trifle larger than the inside rubber cloth envelope. The linen can be scalloped around the flap and embroidered or cross stitched by way of ornament, being fastened over with metal clasps at either end. The rubber cloth envelope inside can be fastened over with one clasp in the center only, so that the clasps on the inner and outer envelopes will not be one on top of the other to make them difficult to close.

There is a practical cork bag that any housekeeper would appreciate. It would also make a valuable addition for the bazaar table. It is fashioned of a straight piece of material, cretonne, heavy crash, even, as in one case, from a strip of brocade, though the other materials would be more serviceable. It is gathered at the top by silk cords through a narrow casing and on the ends of the cords as tassels dangle small corks to show the purpose of the bag and to give unique ornamentation. Probably the most appreciated part of the bag will be the corkscrew attached in tassel fashion to the bottom of the bag by means of a clasp like that one the end of a watch chain. The corkscrew will always be in place if snapped back to the bag after using.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

If possible, wear a thinner pair of shoes in the house than out of doors and avoid patent leather if your feet are tender.

When the eyelids are inflamed and red, they should be bathed several times a day with a solution of weak boracic acid and water.

If the stockings are damp when the shoes are removed, dry stockings should be put on at once, first powdering the soles of the feet with a good talcum powder or a reliable foot powder.

During the windy months veils are a blessing in disguise to the woman who likes to look neatly dressed. They keep her hair in place as nothing else in the world can. They give her a smart, trim appearance almost impossible to attain without the aid of a veil.

For all sores and blisters whose character is not serious there is no better dressing than the spermaceti ointment sold by druggists. It contains spermaceti, white beeswax, almond oil and benzoin. It is just the simple, harmless thing to be put in a corner of one's bag when going on a walking tour.

Warts on the thumb can be removed by tieing a piece of rather heavy white sewing silk firmly around the base of the wart. This cuts off the nourishment or blood supply and the wart will die and drop off. Be very careful to keep it clean and dip the silk in pure grain alcohol before using.

If your hair is dull, thin and unsatisfactory in appearance do not imagine that any hair treatment will mend matters unless you first attend to the state of your general health, from which springs the root of the evil. The hair is sure to give the first telltale sign sign that the health is out of order, and a good tonic, plenty of exercise and rest, and a simple, wholesome diet should be begun at once. A course of cod liver oil will be found quickly and directly to benefit the hair.

CLEANING BOOTS.

Much mischief is done by brushing off dried mud from thin calf or kid boots with hard bristle brushes, and much more by the use of the common acid blacking. With women's boots both treatments are simply ruinous. Boots should be freed from mud by a wet sponge, or a common painter's sash tool and a little water. Glace kid and the better sort of boots should be well sponged, allowed to dry and then well polished with an old silk handkerchief slightly oiled about once a month. A woman can, if she chooses, wear good boots and keep them in order herself as easily as she does her gloves, and she will find they last twice as long as they would if sent into the kitchen to be scrubbed, blacked or polished with common blacking.

CONCERNING WOMEN.

Alabama now has an antisuffrage organization.

Mrs. Winston Churchill is a designer of curtains.

Mrs. Bertha Young manages a lucrative lumber business in Minneapolis.

Hospitals all over Europe are sending out calls for woman physicians.

Women are now allowed to enter the Columbia University Medical School.

Mrs. Harry Davis, wife of the mayor of Cleveland, O., bakes her own bread.

The British munitions factories are now employing three women to every man.

Princess Chen Chi of China, who is now in this country, prefers the American high heel shoes to those of her native country.

There are numerous women barbers in Austria and in some of the villages women are acting as blacksmiths and cobblers.

More than 500 jobless women, half of them with college educations, found work through the agency of the Intercollegiate Bureau of Occupations in New York City last year.

The three gold medals to be presented by the United States to the ambassadors from the South American countries will be designed by Miss Jeanette Scudder of New York City.

Mrs. Maud M. Miller, who was recently appointed a member of the motion picture censor board in Ohio, has been disapproved by Gov. Willis, but under the rules she will draw her pay until her successor is named.

Mrs. Maude D. Reynolds and Mrs. Mildred D. Blair, twin sisters, recently obtained divorces in the same court on the same day at Edwardsville, Ill. The suits were also filed on the same day and the same attorney represented both women.

SPIC AND SPAN PANS.

As soon as the pan is emptied, fill it with hot water and leave it to soak until it can be washed.

If the contents were greasy, add a little soda to the soaking water (except in the case of aluminum).

If the contents "caught," put the saucepan on the stove, filled with soda water, and let it boil for half an hour

Always clean pans as soon as possible after using.

Dry each pan carefully before putting it away, and if the shelf on which it stands is not sparred, leave a space where the air can circulate inside.

Aluminum pans must never be cleaned with soda. Soapy water with a little silver sand will remove any discoloration quite well, and, if the outside has got blackened clean it with a piece of flannel dipped in ashes. Rinse the pan in water and dry thoroughly both inside and out.

CARE OF PIANO.

Half the pianos of this country catch winter colds exactly as human beings do. They get hoarse or have a cough or a stiff note, or some other similar complaint which cannot be cured by home remedies, but which requires tedious and expensive doctoring. In order to prevent these avoidable ailments a piano should be kept in a moderately warm room, whre the temperature is even, say 60 or 70 degrees, the year round—not cold one day and hot the next. The instrument should not, however, be too near the source of heat. It should be kept closed and covered with a felt cloth when not in use, particularly in very cold weather. Always place the piano close to but not against an inside wall.

BLUE LINEN CASES.

Have you noticed many of the stores specializing in novelties the handkerchief and nightgown cases made of blue linen? The general impression is that blue is used because so many people like the color, but there is another reason—a blue case will keep white material from becoming yellow.

"A druggist has many opportunities to make lasting friends of his customers," said Mr. J. C. Brady, popular Rexall Pharmacist of Fall River, Mass. "The very nature of his business draws their confidence for little helpful suggestions on the matter of health.
